Mr. FRENCH. That is very fine. There is one other thought I ought to submit at this time, and that has relation to the time limit. Notwithstanding the fact that Congress may say that future Congresses shall appropriate for laying down five cruisers a year, we must remember that what we may do upon that point is rather by way of suggestion of a policy, and that it is in no way binding upon future Congresses. It may be that another Congress would feel that we should speed up the program of building. If so, it would be well within its jurisdiction to provide the money for speeding up. It may be that a future Congress would feel that conditions did not warrant so rapid progress of development of program; and if so, it would be for that Congress to exercise its judgment untrammeled and unhampered by what we may do.

Now, notice the table. For 1929 this Congress in a bill that we shall report next week will carry for maintenance approximately $287,404,470. To that must be added the construction costs for new building on programs already under way, cruisers, submarines, and necessary aircraft. The total for 1929 for the existing establishment thus becomes $360,279,470. To that, should the plans of the proponents of the pending measure be carried out, must be added another $13,000,000 for commencement of work on five new cruisers and the aircraft carrier that are proposed. I have then carried the program forward by costs from year to year, adding certain modernization of battleship costs and adding costs of prospective aircraft that will be necessary.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman has twice referred to aircraft in connection with his recent figures. Is he not really talking about the existing construction program and not aircraft?

Mr. FRENCH. I shall refer to that. I have included in the existing program that which is building in ships and aircraft, and when I refer to the existing building program, I refer, of course, to the 8 cruisers and the 2 fleet submarines which are now building. The $2,900,000 refers to the proposed increase in limit of cost for the two fleet submarines. Under the heading "Additional aircraft," I refer to the aircraft that doubtless will be necessary for the cruisers and to certain reserve aircraft that is part of the program the present Congress has been asked to consider.

Within the existing program I include the two dirigibles that will cost $8,000,000, and I include the replacement cost of planes throughout, and from 1932 throughout the following years the replacement cost of the additional aircraft needed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And what is that for 1935?

Mr. FRENCH. For 1935, for the 8 cruisers now building, it would be $1,755,700; for the 15 cruisers and airplane carrier it would be $2,795,250; and for the five-year program that we are now carrying forward it will be $15,444,300.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FRENCH. I prefer to go on and make my statement.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield him more time, I think the gentleman from Idaho will answer all of the questions that may be in the mind of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I shall be very glad to yield him a minute right now.

Mr. FRENCH. May I continue? I think it would be better if I may do so. Then later I shall be glad to yield.

FUTURE BUILDING COSTS

I approach now another part of the story that is even more startling when you think of the years beyond 1931. The chart might seem to indicate that we have a diminishing program, but that is not the case. We must now take into account two unknown factors. The unknown factors are the possible future building costs and the possible future operating costs. What are they? First, the limitation of armament treaty provides for four additional airplane carriers. The one you have reported will cost $19,000,000. Four more must probably be added to this column.

Under the treaty, in 1931 we may begin a replacement program on capital ships. Under that program, unless it shall be changed, we would be called upon to lay down in 1931, 3 capital ships; in 1932, 3; in 1933, 2; in 1934, 2; and in 1935, 1—11 capital ships if we shall replace at present tonnage per ship. If we shall increase that tonnage to 35,000 tons we may lay down 8. What will these ships cost? Will it be $40,000,000 each? Will it be $50,000,000?

Mr. BUTLER. We estimate $40,000,000.

Mr. FRENCH. At $40,000,000, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania estimates, you would need to add from $320,000,000 to $440,000,000, if you figure replacement cost to the time of completion. Modernization of capital ships after 1931 is a possible alternative program that might do for a while.

To-day we are modernizing two capital ships, the Oklahoma and the Nevada. Next year you propose as possible the Pennsylvania and the Arizona. I understand that the department is advocating the modernization of three others of our capital ships, and that will cost probably another $20,000,000 or $21,000,000.

Again, the bill which you have reported proposes the construction of a salvage ship. What will it cost? Possibly four or five million dollars. According to the report of the committee, it is indicated that the existing law provides for 12 destroyer leaders. How many we shall build I do not know; but in view of the fact that request was made for destroyer leaders of the Naval Affairs Committee before the committee determined that the existing law provided for authorization from which 12 could be built, it is apparent that the Navy Department wants a certain number of destroyer leaders.

What will that cost? It is in that indefinite block of plans. Then, as to fleet submarines, the department asks for further legislative authority. Your committee found that under the program of 1916 there seems to be authority for three fleet submarines in addition to those already begun. What will they cost? Possibly another $20,000,000 or more.

Shore stations: We are told by the officers as they come before the committee that, although not authorized, the program ahead calls for $13,000,000 to be expended upon the shore stations in the interest of the Naval Establishment.

We are told that if the dirigible that you have already authorized shall be completed, it will mean an additional hangar. What is the cost of an additional hangar? The one at Lakehurst cost $2,632,247 as originally planned, to which was added $635,000, or a total of $3,267,247.

Probably a new hangar would cost more.

You will be asked for high-explosive depots, to cost additional millions.

FUTURE POSSIBLE OPERATING COSTS

We then go to operations. What are you going to do with the ships after you will have completed them? Will they be merely to stand by? Will they be put into service? Are they to be replacement ships? We have not worked out that part of the program.

As to the maintenance and operation of one of the new cruisers that you have provided in this bill, the department estimates it will cost $1,247,500. Multiply this cost by 15. The carrier you are providing will probably cost, to operate, $3,179,000. There is pressure now for increasing the number of midshipmen to the Naval Academy. If we increase it to four, it will add more than a half million of dollars, and if we increase it by two, it will add over a million dollars. I mention this so that you will have in your mind the whole picture as you think of the program that is before the country and is wrapped up in the broad phrase "the naval program."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one more minute. I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The question I would like to ask the gentleman is this, Is the gentleman trying to give this whole legislation the Job stab? The gentleman said he was in favor of the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In view of what you have stated I would like you to show on what ground you are in favor of it.

Mr. FRENCH. You have limited me to one minute, and you control the time. I would gladly answer if I had the time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give the gentleman from Idaho 10 minutes of the time allotted to the opposition.

Mr. FRENCH. You must not do that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact that including the existing building program, which includes 18 cruisers, 2 submarines, and the 88 program down to the year 1932, which is already on the statute books, the total cost to complete that down to 1932 will be over $270,000,000?

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman is probably correct in the figures, but I have not added them up.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The items on the statute books to-day, including the obligations referred to, foot up the amount I have just stated, and the fiscal obligation is set forth in this bill amounting to $272,000,000, which will be spread out over four years. This bill only deals with construction, and not maintenance. That is the reason why I stated what the construction program is.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is going to allot five minutes more to the gentleman from Idaho from the time allotted in the check up for the opposition. Will the gentleman indicate if his cost of maintenance is based upon the passage of the bill now before the House? Can he give the figures showing how much it will cost if this bill were not approved?

Mr. FRENCH. I will say that the cost of maintenance is based upon the estimates of the Naval Establishment for 1929, and, as I suggested, this is taken as a minimum amount throughout the succeeding years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So that when these 15 ships get into commission we must bring in the cost of operating those ships?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] wanted to know, I think, why I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I think that is all right.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The Naval Affairs Committee has suggested the supplementing of the present program with the old authorization. Does your committee propose to do anything on the additional destroyers and submarines up to this time? The gentleman has told us what is to be in the coming bill.

I would like to know, if the gentleman would care to tell the House, whether he is appropriating for the existing authorizations as to submarines and destroyer leaders.

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The facts which the gentleman has given the House and the country are the facts just as the gentleman finds them?

Mr. FRENCH. I hope they are. I have tried to present facts.

Mr. BLANTON. And his vote for the bill is an entirely different matter. It is a question of loyalty to the gentleman's chief?

Mr. FRENCH. No. The gentleman's suggestion brings me to the point which I wanted to take up when the gentleman from Georgia asked me whether, in view of the statements I have made, I would support the pending bill. In a word, although I had not planned to discuss that feature of the question, I will tell the gentleman in the first place that I think on the carrier question we can afford to build one carrier of the type proposed. We are way below the ratio in airplane carriers.

The Langley was an experimental ship; the Lexington and the Saratoga are so outrageously expensive and large that I doubt if we will ever consider such a type again. [Applause.] I think we ought to build the ship that is proposed to be authorized in the bill. Now, when it comes to the 15 cruisers my thought is this: We have to-day 10 cruisers that are first class; we have 8 that are building, and we have a larger number of cruisers that are obsolete. They ought to go out of service, and I want these 15 cruisers to replace the cruisers that are now in existence, and 6 of which are in service but which ought to be replaced by new ships. In short, then, in order to bring our Navy up to date, with ships that are new, that can render more efficient service than the old ones and that can better make a comparison with the cruisers of other nations, I am in favor of the pending bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not a fact that you and I have talked about this measure upon more than one occasion, and that we have consulted with each other not only upon the figures which my friend has presented here but also upon the desirability of increasing this carrier service?

Mr. FRENCH. What the gentleman says is absolutely correct, and he is the kindest gentleman in the world in consulting and trying to do teamwork on the program we are considering to-day.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In the existing program, for which we are appropriating this year $72,240,000, to complete that program will involve the total cost of the additions of these figures, which amount to $201,561,450, if my additions are correct.

Mr. FRENCH. That is probably correct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am sorry not to have been here when the gentleman began his remarks. Has he supplied this information: Granting that this new program——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Idaho two additional minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The information I would like to obtain would be in response to this question: Granted that this new program is completed, what would be the annual maintenance increased cost on the Treasury?

Mr. FRENCH. That, I would say to my friend, would depend on several factors. Would you use these new ships as replacements? If so, I could fairly answer the question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, approximate it either way.

Mr. FRENCH. Well, as I said, on each cruiser it would be approximately $1,247,500 for operation and maintenance, and on the airplane carrier probably $3,179,000. These are just estimates.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the total?

Mr. FRENCH. Well, on that program it would run close to $22,000,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Of increase?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKS. The gentleman is so familiar with this whole question that he should for the benefit of the Members who do not follow it so closely offer a word of explanation and apology for the unwarranted proposal originally made involving an expenditure of some $750,000,000.

Mr. FRENCH. No. I am opposed to that program. I was opposed to it, and repeatedly said so in talking it over with the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, whose attitude was the same as mine.

Mr. SPEAKS. Does the gentleman know how did it originate and why it was abandoned?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not know; but I am not responsible. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the members of the committee for their fine courtesy to me to-day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]. [Applause.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker. I shall support H. R. 11526, authorizing the construction of 15 cruisers and 1 aircraft carrier, but I wish to say that I would not have supported the $750,000,000 building program recommended by the President and the Secretary of the Navy. The program they apparently favored was entirely too large for the present time, and I think the Committee on Naval Affairs should be congratulated for its action in reporting the present bill. Should the naval building program we have under consideration be authorized, I sincerely trust that there will be no destruction of the ships while they are in process of construction, or after they are constructed, as occurred after the Washington Limitation of Armaments Conference. At that time we scrapped 30 battleships and battle cruisers, with a total displacement of 755,380 tons.

Every normal-minded man who served in the military forces of the United States in the World War loathes and detests war, but being a normal-minded American citizen he realizes the necessity of being adequately prepared to defend and protect his country's long coast line and its vast commerce with the other nations of the world.

May I not remind some of my friends, especially those on the Democratic side, that President Wilson, in one of his public addresses declared—

> It is the arm of force which must lie back of every sovereignty in the world, and the Navy of the United States must now be as rapidly as possible brought to a state of efficiency and of numerical strength which will make it practically impregnable to the navies of the world.

And I believe that the adoption of the naval building program proposed in the bill we have before us will bring our naval strength, both in numbers and tonnage, nearer to the ratio adopted by the Washington conference. At the present time the numbers and tonnage of modern cruisers built, building, and appropriated for, in the case of these countries, stand as follows:

Country	Number	Tonnage
United States	18	146,000
British Empire	63	386,636
Japan	33	206,415

In numbers of these modern cruisers, ranked in order of importance, the ratio stands to-day as follows:

British Empire	5.0
Japan	2.6
United States	1.4

In the total of their tonnage, ranked in order of importance, the following is the ratio:

British Empire	5.0
United States	1.9

If the 15 cruisers of 10,000 tons each to be authorized in this bill were constructed, even assuming that the British and Japanese were to abandon all present projects of further building, the situation would stand as follows:

	Number	Ratio	Tonnage	Ratio
United States	33	2.6	296,000	3.8
British Empire	63	5.0	386,636	5.0
Japan	33	2.6	206,415	2.7

These tables apply to cruisers. The construction of one aircraft carrier, as provided in the bill, will give us 78,700 tons, as against Great Britain's 107,550 and Japan's 63,300. In addition to this, Great Britain has one carrier more on her announced construction program, to be laid down in 1929. The aircraft carrier tonnage allowed each nation under the terms of the agreement reached at the Washington conference was United States 135,000, Great Britain 135,000, and Japan 81,000. So it is easily seen that the pending bill is not a competitive program. It only brings us up, if it does even that, to our quota allowance. It is what we sought at the Geneva conference last summer.

To those who are against this bill, to those who want peace and who make the assertion that an authorization of this character will increase the likelihood of war, I wish to say that lack of adequate power for national defense will produce war and cause unnecessary sacrifice of the lives of thousands of men and needless expenditure of enormous sums of money.

We had at one time the opportunity to join in the League of Nations, but we preferred isolation and reliance on our own resources and ability to prevent war. Then there was the Association of Nations, which came to naught. Then came the Washington Limitation of Arms Conference which, as is so well stated in the Naval Affairs Committee's report, resulted in our sacrificing 30 battleships and battle cruisers. Another limitation of arms conference was held in Geneva last summer, but our proposals were rejected by the other nations participating in the conference. And speaking of the League of Nations, while it is not germane to the bill under discussion, I would like to call your attention to the opinion of Emil Ludwig, the eminent German writer, of the League and Woodrow Wilson. In his book Genius and Character he said:

Without your three years of proclamations and your brave six months of struggle, a League of Nations would never have been established. And even though it is still frail and has not admitted the important enemies of the Allies, it will soon exert a decisive influence upon its members, and within 10 years will be strong enough to delay overhasty actions like those of August 1 until an angry world has grown calm and amenable to reason. You have set up a new code—you alone in this era. You have formulated a secular goal, an aim which is at once practical and ideal, a beacon toward which the best minds and the youth of this continent may turn. And in the future, when the United States of Europe becomes a reality, people will call Woodrow Wilson its founder. For you were the first to convert the dream of poets and philosophers into a political program and to defend it with physical force.

It is to be hoped that the time will come when nations will cease to war, when war will be abolished by agreement among nations, but until that time does come it behooves us as lawmakers to provide that security and that defense to which this country is justly entitled. We owe it to our people. We owe it to the men and women of future generations. We do not intend to and shall not make of America a militaristic nation, nor do we intend to enter into a competitive building program with any other nation, but we do intend to provide that defense so necessary for the safety and security of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the privilege of now yielding to my friend from Ohio one minute. This is all the time the gentleman has asked for.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I am gravely disturbed by this ambitious program [applause], especially in view of the possible increases which may come in the future. But I have not had the opportunity to give that critical examination of the plan which would justify me in speaking at any length upon it.

I desire, however, at this time, unanimous consent to have inserted with my remarks a statement prepared by the Foreign Policy Association of the relative strength of the United States Navy and other navies, which it is maintained is brought down to date, and more carefully prepared than any statement that has yet been presented to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement made by the Foreign Policy Association, showing the relative strength of certain navies. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

RELATIVE STRENGTH OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY AND OTHER NAVIES

(Memorandum prepared by the Foreign Policy Association, 1226 National Press Building, Washington, D. C.)

The following tables have been prepared to bring out certain factors not contained in the condensed figures submitted in the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs (No. 834), but which are essential to an accurate comparison of the strength of the three principal navies.

As Admiral Hughes stated in testifying before the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, the age, size, speed, and armament of ships are equally as important as numbers and total tonnage. If a fair basis of comparison is to be arrived at, therefore, these factors must be given due consideration.

The tables appended to this memorandum are based exclusively on the data furnished by the Office of Naval Intelligence, United States Navy Department, and published as Document No. 183 of the House Naval Affairs Committee.

RELATIVE STRENGTH OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY AND OTHER NAVIES BASED ON DATA FURNISHED BY THE OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT—INFORMATION AS OF OCTOBER 1, 1927

(House Naval Affairs Committee Document No. 183)

TABLE I.—C. L. light cruisers, first line (3,000 to 10,000 tons, 27 knots plus)[1]

Country	Built		Building		Authorized		Total
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
United States	10	75,000	2	20,000	6	60,000	18	155,000
British Empire	39	190,000	14	138,000	3	26,000	56	354,810
Japan	21	116,000	6	60,000	2	20,000	29	196,295

[1] The figures in this table differ somewhat from those presented in the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs No. 834, presented Mar. 3, 1928, particularly as regards the number and tonnage of British and Japanese cruisers. The above report has apparently included in its table on page 3 several second-line cruisers for both the British Empire and Japan. These cruisers are comparable to the second-line cruisers of the United States, which are now obsolete, and should not be included in a comparison of first-line cruisers. They are not included in the Navy Department tables for October, 1927.

OTHER FACTORS AFFECTING COMPARATIVE STRENGTH OF NAVIES

The comparative strength of modern navies can not be based on numbers and total tonnage alone. Such factors as age, size, armaments, and speed are equally important, as indicated by the testimony of Admiral Hughes before the House Naval Affairs Committee, in arriving at a sound basis of comparison. The following tables and summaries provide additional data relating to these important factors.

TABLE II.—Age of first-line cruisers

Country	Number of ships	Year of completion	Present age
United States:
Class—			Years
Omaha	6	1923	5
Do	3	1924	4
Do	1	1925	3
Pensacola	1	[1]1926	----------
Salt Lake City	1	[1]1927	----------
(Contracts for 6 more ships of the Pensacola class have been let and material assembled; keels have not been laid.)
British Empire:

Caradoc	6	1917	11
Coventry	7	1918	10

Japan	2	1919	9
Do	1	1920	8
Do	4	1921	7

Do	3	1925	3
Do	2	1926	2
Do	2	1927	1
(2 ships were laid down in 1924; 2 in 1925; and 2 in 1927.)

[1] Laid down.

TABLE III.—Comparative age of first-line cruisers

(The above figures may be grouped for convenience in the following form:)

Country	Building or contract let	Age (years)
		1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13
United States	8	----	----	1	3	6	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----
British Empire	14	----	2	1	1	----	3	1	----	6	7	6	5	7
Japan	6	2	2	3	1	3	3	4	1	2	----	----	----	----

Thus, by the year 1931, when the conference for the limitation of naval armament convenes the oldest first-line cruisers of the United States Navy will be the 10 ships of the Omaha class, which will be 8 years old; the British Empire will have seven cruisers of the Comus class approaching obsolescence (16 years old), five 15 years old, and six 14 years old. Japan will have two cruisers over 14 years old and five which are more than 10 years old.

(No country has yet completed any modern 10,000-ton cruisers)

Country	Number	Armament	Speed
10,000-ton cruisers building and authorized
United States	8	10 8-inch guns	32.5 to 32.7 knots.
British Empire	[1]14	8 8-inch guns	31.5 to 33 knots.
Japan	8	do	33.5 knots.
9,750-ton cruisers, built
British Empire	4	6 or 7 7.5-inch guns.	30.5 knots.
6,500 to 8,000 ton cruisers
United States	10	12 6-inch guns	33.5 to 34.9 knots.
British Empire	5	No specifications
Japan	4	6 8-inch guns	33 knots.
5,000 to 6,500 ton cruisers
Japan	14	7 5.5-inch guns	33 knots.
4,000 to 5,000 ton cruisers
British Empire	21	5 or 6 6-inch guns	29 to 30 knots.
3,500 to 4,000 ton cruisers
British Empire	12	3 or 4 6-inch guns	29 knots.
Japan	2	4 5.5-inch guns	31 knots.

[1] Great Britain has announced that one 10,000-ton cruiser will not be laid down for the present.

The foregoing tables show that the strength of the United States Navy in modern cruisers of 6,500 tons to 10,000 tons, built since the war, is only slightly inferior to the strength of the British Navy in the same classes of ships, and is considerably stronger than the Japanese Navy. The figures may be compared as follows:

Modern cruisers, 6,500 to 10,000 tons, built, building, and authorized

Country	Number	Tons
United States	18	155,000
British Empire	23	218,100
Japan	12	108,000

TABLE V.—Comparative strength in modern cruisers 6,500 tons to 10,000 tons in 1931 if the 15 United States cruisers requested in H. R. 11526 are authorized and appropriated for

Country	Number	Tons
United States	33	305,000
British Empire	23	218,100
Japan	12	108,000

TABLE VI.—Comparative strength in cruisers, first line, of all types, if the 15 United States cruisers requested in H. R. 11526 are authorized and appropriated for

Country	Number	Tons
United States	33	305,000
British Empire	56	354,000
Japan	29	196,000

It will be remembered that 12 of the small British cruisers will be obsolete within three years after the conference to be held in 1931.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield five minutes to the lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, it is because I desire peace so much for our own country and for all the world that I want an adequate Navy as a part of our national defense in order to help make world peace.

I have stated before that I believe much of the hysteria against the naval preparedness program is due to a lack of understanding of what an adequate Navy really is. Perhaps the time will come when the world will be so well behaved that we shall need no policemen, but we shall have them to keep law and order until that time. If a policeman at the present time is too old or is disabled, he is replaced by an able-bodied man. This naval police program in large measure is one of replacements.

Have faith in the United States of America. I believe that our Americans will not want to fight other nations just because we have a few ships. I can not understand why some of the people in this country have so little trust in their own countrymen. We have never fought for any cause but a just one. We do not think in terms of war, but always in terms of peace.

As yet not much has been said about the policing of the Panama Canal and of the importance of an adequate naval force for the protection of the Panama Canal.

It is agreed by the best naval opinion in the country that if and when we ever become engaged in the emergency of war the great naval engagement of such a conflict will almost inevitably occur in the neighborhood of the Panama Canal.

The vital importance of protecting the Panama Canal at all times should be apparent to everyone. Aside from the strategical necessity during war of keeping the canal open in order to concentrate our fleet in the war area and to furnish necessary supplies to the fleet via the canal, the tremendous commerce that now passes through the canal to the benefit of the world is steadily increasing, and should not be stopped or hindered through any cause. During the year 1915, 1,075 ships passed through the canal, with a total cargo of 4,888,454 tons, while during the year 1927, 5,475 ships passed through the canal, with a total cargo of 27,748,215 tons, of which 15,242,156 tons of cargo were carried by 2,685 ships under the American flag. From 1914 to 1927 the net revenue surplus for all operations was $79,953,875.53.

The following examples show at a glance the distance saved by vessels using the Panama Canal and the consequent tremendous saving in time, fuel, and money:

The following extracts are from treaties entered into by the United States with Great Britain and Panama regarding the obligation of the United States to maintain the neutrality of the Panama Canal.

Hay-Pauncefote treaty between the United States and Great Britain proclaimed February 22, 1902:

The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality.

The canal shall never be blockaded; nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it.

The plant, establishments, buildings, and all work necessary to the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal shall be deemed to be a part thereof, for the purpose of this treaty, and in time of war, as in time of peace, shall enjoy complete immunity from attack or injury by the belligerents, and from acts calculated to impair their usefulness as part of the canal.

Again, the Hay-Bunau Varilla convention proclaimed February 26, 1904, provides:

The United States guarantees and will maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama.

The canal when constructed, and the entrances thereto, shall be neutral in perpetuity.

The above-mentioned treaties impose on the United States the moral obligation to defend the canal from all attacks in order to keep it open for the commerce of the world. No nations other than the United States, Great Britain, and Panama are parties to these treaties, and having no obligation regarding the neutrality of the canal would naturally be governed as the exigencies of war dictated. It is therefore essential that the United States have a strong naval force to insure that the neutrality of the canal be preserved. This is a definite obligation which the United States can not shirk. There is no possible excuse for us to shirk it.

In order to fulfill our solemn treaty obligation to maintain the integrity of the Panama Canal, adequate naval strength is necessary, and this was one of the impelling motives for recommending the Navy building program.

(A) NAVAL FORCES NOW BASED ON THE CANAL DURING PEACE

The United States naval forces now based on the canal are submarine divisions 8 and 18, consisting of nine submarines with one tug, and the Special Service Squadron, consisting of five old cruisers.

Submarine divisions 8 and 18 form an integral part of the control force which operates normally in the Atlantic Ocean and in the Caribbean Sea. However, these submarines base on the Atlantic Ocean and in the Caribbean Sea. However, these submarines base on the Atlantic side of the canal for training purposes and join up with the control force during the concentration exercises which are held every other year, but are not to be considered as primarily for the defense of the canal.

The Special Service Squadron is based on the canal on account of its proximity to probable revolutionary centers, and the ability of those ships to reach disturbed areas quickly in either ocean by transmitting the canal.

(B) WAR BETWEEN TWO OR MORE FIRST-CLASS NAVAL POWERS, THE UNITED STATES BEING NEUTRAL

Assuming a probability that some nation contemplated a violation of the neutrality of the canal, the whole strength of the United States fleet could be quickly concentrated—so long as the canal is intact—and this concentrated fleet ready to operate in the zone of hostile operations would insure protection to the canal in direct proportion to the strength of this concentrated fleet.

A nation would find it profitable to violate the neutrality of the canal only when the advantages to be gained would outweigh the disadvantages of adding the strength of the United States to that of their enemy.

During the World War the Germans decided to wage unrestricted submarine warfare, only after they had carefully considered and discounted the effort that the United States would put forth. The fact that their estimate was in error caused them to lose the war.

The strength of the fleet considered now by the Navy Department as necessary to preserve our own neutrality and maintain the neutrality of our possessions is that proposed in the building program recently submitted.

It is considered that the local defense of the canal would in time of war be able to repel a small enemy naval force but not an army of invasion after it had landed in the vicinity of the canal. However, in any war in the Pacific with a first-class naval power the defense of the canal would best be assured by concentrating our naval forces in a strategic area at a distance from the canal in order to defeat his naval forces and drive back or sink his army transports long before they could reach our shores or the canal. The same strategy would undoubtedly be followed in any war in the Atlantic.

The President made the following statement in a speech delivered before the United Press at the Biltmore Hotel on April 25, 1927:

Toward the governments of countries which we have recognized this side of the Panama Canal we feel a moral responsibility that does not attach to other nations. We wish them to feel that our recognition is of real value to them and that they can count on such support as we can lawfully give when they are beset with difficulties. We have undertaken to discourage revolutions within the peaceful method of elections. This policy is bound to meet with some discouragements, but it is our hope and belief that ultimately it will prevail. This territory is rich in natural resources, and under orderly governments is capable of a development that will give to its inhabitants all the advantages of modern civilization. It is a curious circumstance that some of those who have been willing to have us take mandates over far-off countries in Asia, where we have no interest that does not attach to all humanity, are most critical when we are attempting to encourage the maintenance of order, the continuity of duly established government, and the protection of lives and property of our own citizens under a general reign of law in these countries that are near at hand and where we have large and peculiar interests.

The President in his annual message to the Seventieth Congress stated:

We have a foreign commerce and ocean lines of trade unsurpassed by any other country. We have outlying territory in the two great oceans and long stretches of seacoast studded with the richest cities in the world. We are responsible for the protection of a large population and the greatest treasure ever bestowed upon any people. We are charged with an international duty of defending the Panama Canal. To meet these responsibilities we need a very substantial sea armament.

Also, in his annual message to the Sixty-ninth Congress, he stated:

No self-respecting nation would neglect to provide an army and navy proportionate to its population, the extent of its territory, and the dignity of the place which it occupies in the world.

While we are doing our best to eliminate all resort to war for the purpose of settling disputes, we can not but remember that the peace we now enjoy had to be won by the sword and that if the rights of our country are to be defended we can not rely for that purpose upon anyone but ourselves.

The Navy Department has done its duty in recommending the naval building program, and to Congress is left the duty imposed upon that body by the Constitution of the United States and by the people of the United States. America must keep the faith and guard the Panama Canal with an adequate Navy. History will show if Congress has been found wanting. [Applause.]

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to go on record as opposed to large armies and large navies. I am positive in my own mind they are the forerunners of complications and wars.

I think we are dealing at this time with one of the most important divisions of our Government. The proponents of this bill under consideration have not given up their program as originally planned to spend billions for an immense Navy, but the protests of the great plain people to such a program have changed the plans of the large Navy proponents to adopt more diplomatic methods. Hence the present bill to spend $274,000,000 means only a beginning, to be added to at each session of Congress, as they believe the people will submit without protest.

When the present bill was under consideration on the floor of the House in the Committee of the Whole, the session had the appearance of a convention of the Army, Navy, and shipyard agents. Their principal argument in favor of the bill was that those who opposed it were pacifists. During the Spanish-American War and the World War those who were most accustomed to using the word "pacifists" when trouble started retired with all their blooded relations to a safe distance to keep themselves from becoming involved in any war measures, to reappear again when the fighting was over with the slogan "they had destroyed the enemy." Those same Americans were very vindictive against the administration for consenting to an armistice and the ending of the war, as they claimed, before the enemy was entirely annihilated. We who had our sons in the Army and who had contributed of our time and means were still branded "pacifists" when we sang and praised God that the war was over.

I have been a great admirer of the gentleman from Ohio, Senator BURTON, and I wished this morning that I had the power to yield to him my time. He has contributed a great deal in trying to find some way to adjust differences between nations without resorting to brute force. Mr. FRENCH, of Idaho, is also greatly admired by me, and I have followed him closely in the naval appropriation bills. I was pleased this morning with his arguments, but not altogether pleased with his findings.

Germany believed in preparedness and had the greatest army in the world. An ex-President, reviewing that army, said to the Kaiser, "With that army you could conquer the world." Germany tried it, but only met with defeat, because her preparedness was centered in her army.

I am for preparedness, but not along the lines of the proponents of the present Navy bill. My thought is to use the $274,000,000 and, as fast as the revenue of the Government will justify, pay off the indebtedness, reduce the burdens of taxation, and adopt every method to have a prosperous, happy people instead of having our pledges discredited the world over. Make good the promises we have made and give the Filipinos their independence and let them work out their own salvation.

As has been stated, the present administration has been on all sides of the question at issue, and I can give no other reason, if it has been correctly stated, that the administration has folded its tent and silently stolen away, unless the money to be expended for this shipbuilding régime directly affects the immediate locality where their interests lie. The revenue bill passed during the session is held up on account, as stated by the powers to be, and the reason given that a reduction of $66,000,000 of taxes on small business scattered all over the United States and who are financially embarrassed was too great a burden on the Treasury of the United States. To me such officials are not acting in good faith when they let the present Navy bill be passed without protest and turn down a small tax reduction on the small business.

Both sides of my family were pioneers to America, and some member of the family has participated in all the wars, including the War for Independence, and if I had the time and inclination to give the war record I probably would be arrested for carrying concealed weapons. [Laughter.]

America furnished for the World War as capable, courageous a lot of soldiers as ever faced an enemy, but it was not the soldiers alone that won the war, but America's credit, backed by the Treasury, that made it possible for the Allies to win. When America entered the war the credit of the leading nations then at war was exhausted and it was American soldiers and American credit that saved them. With all the cruisers we can build and with the prospect and outlook for the future in aircraft it will mean very little if the $274,000,000 provided for in this bill is used in the extravagant expenditure for war vessels.

It will only be a few years until the boys who fought in Flanders Field will be controlling the destiny of this country, and I hope they will realize that the 150 years of peace that America, with few exceptions, has enjoyed was not perpetuated by large armies and navies but by attending to our own affairs and treating other nations as we would have them treat us. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELSH].

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as a Member of Congress coming from a great seaport town, a great industrial community, and from a district adjoining that of the chairman of the great Committee on Naval Affairs, I want to say a word of appreciation of the work of that committee on this bill. I wonder if the country at large realizes what constructive work that committee has done, and what a responsibility was imposed upon that committee in the preparation of this bill. This is the first time since the ending of the great World War that this, the richest and most powerful country in the world, has had an opportunity to face squarely the responsibility confronting it in the future and deciding on a policy as to how we are going to exercise the great power and the great wealth at our command.

We are to-day, for the first time since 1918, taking stock of the present and considering the future—deciding what shall be the policy of this great Republic in the future affairs of the world. This committee had the responsibility, first of all, of guarding and protecting American interests at home and abroad. They had then the even greater responsibility of protecting and cherishing the American ideals that have meant so much to the world in the past and which will mean so much to Christianity and humanity in the future.

As a Member of this Congress I am glad to know that the Naval Affairs Committee listened to all groups interested in this controversy. Also, I am glad to know that so patient and so fair were they that they have brought out a bill which, if submitted to the rank and file of our citizenship, I believe would meet with the honest indorsement of 8 men and women out of every 10 in the country. The only people who would be against this bill after learning all the facts would be the extremists on both sides, and this country can not be run successfully by extremists of any kind. [Applause.]

I consider that the Naval Affairs Committee have marked an epoch in the fixing of our national policy, and that they have done so after a sincere and honest effort to be guided by divine wisdom. I also want to pay a personal tribute to the chairman of that committee.

Mr. BUTLER. No; do not do it.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Yes; I must do that, because I consider it my duty to do so. We have a committee here that is not a one-man committee. I know to my personal knowledge that the chairman of that committee has gone around to the various representative groups in the House by the score and has asked their opinion on this measure. When this measure was originally brought before the House, calling for an expenditure of nearly a billion dollars and 72 vessels of war, it shocked the entire civilized world. The country was brought face to face with a grave responsibility. We were asked to say to the world, in effect, that the great wealth and power of this country would be used for aggrandizement and commercial supremacy.

But, what has this committee done? It has protected every ideal of America, and we are now saying to the world, "While America will protect itself and all those things it holds dear, yet it seeks peace and not conquest or commercial supremacy at the cannon's mouth." We are saying to the world that while it is our duty to protect those things which we are called upon by God to cherish and to further—ideals of liberty, freedom, and equality—yet beyond this we will not go, and Christianity, not force, is the guiding star of the real soul of the American people.

I want to pay my respects to the chairman of this committee, as an individual. I think this is the greatest work that he has done up to this time. I speak as a man who loves peace rather than war. My people stand for peace and not war. We want peace, but we want it with sufficient protection to guard and shield those ideals for which that flag stands and for which the country stands.

If we were actuated by any motive of conquest or militarism a great naval expansion policy would have been agreed upon, which would have embarked this country upon a course which would have served notice on the nations of the world that power, not justice, wealth, nor principle, was to guide our actions in the future.

I want to thank every member of the committee for what they have done and to say that in my opinion this bill meets the approval of the fair-thinking people of our country, and I hope it will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, with its corners lopped off, this bill after all is the Navy Department's bill. It carries a new shipbuilding program of $274,000,000. That is additional to the $164,000,000 already authorized by Congress. Our distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], whom we all love, consistent with the demands of his administration, to which he is loyal, has done the best he could, surrounded as he was by his committee of "big-navy" members. But if he could give the whole people of the United States a fair chance at this bill, and let them vote their sentiments, they would strike out its enacting clause and put an end to it.

I challenge the statement that was made here yesterday by our leader from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] when, in defending Secretary Wilbur's presence on the House floor, he said that Secretary Daniels had appeared on this floor when Navy bills were up for passage.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is not quoting me. I said nothing about Secretary Daniels except upon information.

Mr. BLANTON. It was intimated here by our friends.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not say anything about him except as to what I was informed.

Mr. BLANTON. Our friend from Pennsylvania simply was mistaken. If Secretary Daniels appeared on this floor when Navy bills were under consideration, he did it before the war Congress, because I have been here constantly ever since March 6, 1917, when war was declared, and never at any time since I have been here did he ever appear on this floor when a Navy bill was under consideration. Oh, he has been here at the Capitol from time to time, as every other Cabinet officer has, but he has had the decency to stay off this floor when we have had his bills up for argument and discussion.

I am surprised at my distinguished friend from Illinois, Mr. BRITTEN, who usually is a fair, square shooter. I am surprised, because he does not usually hit below the belt. Every stroke that he strikes is usually a fair one, but I was ashamed of him yesterday when during the honest, conscientious argument against this bill of our friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] he said that what he was afraid of and what the country was afraid of was what Mr. LAGUARDIA represented—communism and radicalism.

I have served with the gentleman from New York since the war started. I have never seen anything about him that was communistic or radical in the sense of disloyalty to our flag and Nation. No man has been more loyal. No man has been more patriotic. I do not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] on many subjects, and I hate communism as much as anyone does, but no one may accuse the gentleman from New York of being a communist.

I saw him here vote for the draft act. I saw him stand here on this floor and without hesitation vote for the war-risk insurance act. I saw him vote for every necessary bill that placed in the hands of the President all of the resources of this Nation to win the war. And I saw him leave his seat in this House and don the uniform of his country in August, 1917 [applause], and while he was on the Italian front he faced death there from day to day, from week to week, and from month to month. I was ashamed when our friend from Illinois cast an aspersion upon him simply because conscientiously he saw fit to oppose this big naval program.

That is what comes from having Secretaries sit in our midst. That follows as a natural result.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I can not. I have but a few minutes. That follows from having a Secretary of the Navy sit within a few feet of the Speaker's stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. With a Secretary of the Navy seated here on a front seat, in front of the Speaker's stand, for two hours, and with an Assistant Secretary of the Navy seated in the gallery, and with admirals of high office seated there, watching the proceedings, would not you expect our friend from Illinois to cast some thrusts at men who opposed his bill?

I want to say this to those of you who approve Secretary Wilbur's presence on this floor: What are you going to do with the Caraway bill, which has been passed by the Senate and is now before this House of Representatives for consideration? That bill makes lobbyists register; it compels them to tell who they are, to tell what their connections and interests are, and what remuneration they receive for coming here and trying to induce Members of Congress, the representatives of the people, to pass pernicious legislation. That bill makes it an offense for a lobbyist who does not register to say one word to you about pending legislation. Personal presence sometimes is more influential than words. What are you going to do with a bill like that, you who are in favor of a Secretary sitting here and by his presence helping to force down our throats legislation which the people of the United States do not want? Oh, you will have to throw that Caraway bill in the wastebasket. I challenge any Member of this Congress to show where that has ever occurred in the history of this Nation before.

I am glad that the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] had the good judgment to get up here and lodge his protest against that. He is a most valuable Member of this House. He stands for the people of this country. He knows that that practice is against good legislation in the interest of the people. I am glad, I say, that he had the good judgment to protest, and his protest had effect. There was a Cabinet meeting this morning, and your Mr. Secretary Wilbur was at that Cabinet meeting; and when those Cabinet officers got through and adjourned he decided not to come back here to-day, and he is not here now. If it was decent for him to be here yesterday, why is it not just as decent for him to be here to-day?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am bound to yield to the gentleman. I have to yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Texas can not be here every day. The Secretary of the Navy may be like the gentleman from Texas. He may be making some investigations. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I do not yield for that. I want to say that until the last few days—my colleagues will bear me out in that statement—until the last few days, when I had important business elsewhere conducting important official investigations, I have been on this floor constantly for the past 11 years. I have been seated there in that seat constantly, day in and day out, and I will leave it to my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] to say if there is a man who has sat here more constantly. Is there?

Mr. BUTLER. No; and there have been times when I wished you were not here. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I know that, because I have felt constrained to oppose many of my friend's pet naval bills.

If the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] does not do anything else for the country beyond what he did yesterday to prevent a Cabinet officer coming here and thrusting his $274,000,000 legislation down our throats, his service will be sufficiently valuable to justify the people of Alabama keeping him here until he has grandchildren, and they have grandchildren. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON]. He helped to write this bill, and he did a good many hours' work on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, on this my first occasion to address this body since becoming a member thereof, I assure you it is with a feeling of real satisfaction that I rise to speak in support of a bill that does not contain any issue of a political character or any element of partisanship.

In the consideration of such a measure as this, the only purpose of which is to make proper provision for our national security and defense, there is no division among us along party lines. National defense and security do not admit of the usual party division based upon political considerations. In matters of this kind, party affiliations cease to exist as we each become members of one party—the American party—with no other object than to make certain and secure our national peace and tranquillity; and it is indeed gratifying to realize that this center aisle, which on so many occasions is a line of division between us, separating us in thought and action, becomes invisible.

What higher testimonial or what more convincing proof could there be of the common endeavor of the Members of this House to provide adequately for our common defense, or what could more clearly indicate the patriotic spirit of this House than the fact that every member of the Naval Affairs Committee—Republicans and Democrats alike, except one—has signed the committee report recommending favorable action by this House? And he who has not done so does not differ with his colleagues in the desire to provide adequate security, but merely entertains a different opinion as to the kind and character of craft that should be built.

OUR NAVY AN INFLUENCE FOR PEACE

America is a peace-loving Nation and the Navy is its most potent and influential factor in promoting and maintaining peace and insuring its blessings to ourselves and those of the weaker nations of the earth who look to us for protection and security.

The primary purpose of the Navy is to maintain peace. It never declares war. That can be done only by the representatives of the people in Congress assembled; and, when war has been declared, the power of the Navy is used to reestablish peace at the earliest possible moment. Thus the Navy may properly be acknowledged as our country's greatest agent of peace.

Never in all the history of our Nation can it be said that the Navy has provoked war; but, on the contrary, time and again, its strength and influence have prevented war; and so long as the desire for peace is the aspiration of our people, that long will the Navy be an instrument of peace and not of war; and to give it additional strength will make more certain and secure our own peace and the peace of the world.

OUR NATIONAL AIM IS TO PROMOTE PEACE NOT WAR

It is difficult indeed to understand or explain upon any patriotic basis the attitude and activity of those individuals and agencies in our midst that are constantly endeavoring to create a spirit of distrust and suspicion toward the aims and purposes for which our country seeks to maintain its naval strength. These same individuals, however, have no difficulty whatsoever in understanding and even justifying the viewpoint of foreign nations and their right to build and maintain large and expensive navies; but when their own country seeks to provide the same means of protection and defense as already adopted by foreign nations, then it is interpreted by them as an unmistakable evidence of a spirit and desire upon the part of our Nation to provoke war. For instance the executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War, on January 25, 1928, sent broadcast throughout the Nation a letter seeking to create opposition to the naval program, and in which he used these words:

The issue is peace or war. This Navy program is a war program.

What could be further from the true purpose and desire of America? Individuals such as these either purposely refuse, because of ulterior motives, to understand the real spirit of America, or are unconsciously and inexcusably ignorant of the same. The most casual reading of our national history can not help but reveal to an honest and intelligent mind that this Nation has always been an advocate of peace and good will among the nations, and has constantly sought to avoid war and its distressing consequences. By precept and example abundant evidence of this fact has been given and so plain is our national desire in this respect that none should doubt.

If specific proof should be desired of our national desire to avoid war and remain at peace, what could be more convincing than our continued refusal for nearly three years to enter the great world conflict? We endured insult after insult. We saw American citizens, including innocent women and children, lose their lives by practices that would be hard to believe possible to exist or be permitted in this advanced age of civilization. We had rights challenged and denied, which had previously existed and been acknowledged by all nations. We had been treated as if we were a warring rather than a neutral Nation. To all of this we remained apparently insensible, refusing to become a party notwithstanding the severe criticism and firm conviction of many that we were thereby sacrificing our national honor. And, when at last circumstances beyond our control required our entrance into the war, we did so not merely to punish for wrongs done to us, justifiable though it would have been, but based our entrance upon the highest plane or ideal that ever in all the history of the world characterized the entrance of any nation into war, namely, "the peace of the world and the liberation of its people."

Notwithstanding the peaceful aims and ambitions of our Nation throughout the entire period of its existence, there are those in our midst many of whom are misguided by untrue and unpatriotic propaganda to which they have given full faith and credit who fear that should this naval bill be passed then it would be interpreted throughout the world as an intention upon the part of the United States to enter upon an aggressive policy, and that there could be no other result except to provoke a spirit of war. To sustain this view, they point to the World War as an example of the absolute certainty of war being a direct result of a Nation entering upon a naval building program and creating a military war machine as did Germany prior to the war. They lose sight, however, of the spirit and the purpose that prompted the building.

We are told that for years the German militarists had drunk to the toast "Der Tag." Every act of preparation had the ultimate end in mind—Der Tag. Is it possible that anyone within the boundaries of this country, and especially those who claim citizenship herein, could be so unappreciative of the true spirit of America as to believe that any such warlike spirit dominates their fellow countrymen when their representatives in Congress merely seek to provide for our national security?

Nowhere in all the world is there a more pronounced and outstanding desire for universal peace than in America. Nowhere has there been a more ready and willing response to every effort that has been made to substitute peaceful means for the settlement of international differences rather than resort to military force. As a people we are justifiably proud of the fact that our Nation, above all others, has led in every movement to establish principles upon which international peace might be promoted. The peace of the world, made permanent and secure, is the sincerest desire of our people—an aspiration of the very heart and soul of America. It was for this that America shed her blood in 1917–18. What finer or more sacred contribution to the cause of peace could there be?

OUR EFFORTS TO ADVANCE PEACE SINCE THE WORLD WAR—VERSAILLES-WASHINGTON CONFERENCE—GENEVA

Never in the history of the world has there been a finer example of true, genuine idealism upon the part of any nation than that shown by the United States as it sat at the peace table of Versailles. Notwithstanding the fact that our resources of men and wealth had been the determining factor that finally brought success to the Allies, yet we neither asked nor received anything in return for our sacrifices of treasure and blood. As other nations strained and contested, openly and in secret, one with the other to gain advantage of territory or other worthwhile considerations, America stood aloof from the struggle and refused all material gain; but, with a quiet dignity and majestic spirit, sought only to advance the principles of liberty, true democracy, and justice as would most surely tend to the future peace of the world that those who died should not have died in vain.

WASHINGTON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENT CONFERENCE, 1921–22

In 1921 the strength of the United States naval forces—built, building, and authorized—had gained for our Nation the foremost position among the navies of the world. The great wealth of our Nation and its enormous resources were abundantly sufficient to enable us to easily maintain our position of superiority. Notwithstanding this, President Harding, through his Secretary of State, invited the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan to participate in a conference upon the limitation of armaments to be held in Washington on November 11, 1921. The invitation was accepted, and the conference was accordingly convened with general expressions of good will and friendship and apparent willingness upon the part of each nation to enter into the spirit of the occasion.

The deliberations of the conference, however, when stripped of all diplomatic verbiage, reveal the fact that the United States was the only nation that was willing to make any real sacrifice of existing naval strength. Our Nation, as an evidence of its sincere desire to promote world peace by the limitation of world armament, and in an effort to lead the way, agreed to a basis of maximum tonnage that necessitated the destruction upon our part of 30 battleships, having an approximate tonnage of 800,000 tons and an aggregate value of more than $400,000,000. This act upon our part gave unmistakably evidence of the entire absence of any spirit of aggression or desire upon our part to be a dominating factor in world affairs or with ulterior motives to serve. No other nation taking a part in the Washington conference was called upon to make any such substantial sacrifice as that voluntarily offered by our Nation in its effort to promote peace. This contribution upon the part of the United States was made with the understanding that a ratio of naval strength should exist between the United States, Great Britain, and Japan on the basis of 5–5–3. This term arose by reason of each of these nations agreeing to limit the maximum tonnage of capital ships to approximately 500,000 tons each for the United States and Great Britain and 300,000 tons for Japan.

Notwithstanding, however, the apparent willingness of each of the nations signatory to the Washington conference to accept the basis of 5–5–3 as a proper ratio of naval strength, yet, unfortunately, it was not made a part of the agreement with respect to auxiliary craft, and consequently there was no definite agreement limiting any nation from building as many cruisers and other auxiliaries as it might choose. Yet when

Mr. Hughes presented the treaty to the last session of the conference, he said, in expressing the purpose and intent of those who were parties thereto: "This treaty ends, absolutely ends, the race in competitive naval armaments."

Since the Washington conference the United States has faithfully maintained the spirit of that conference, both with respect to battleships and every other type of war vessel. But, unfortunately, the other nations have not shown the same spirit to respect the purpose and intent of the treaty. In the six years that have intervened since the signing of the treaty Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy have built war craft at a rate and to an extent that has been astounding to those who had supposed they were in full accord with the spirit of the Washington treaty. Since the signing of the Washington treaty in 1922, vessels laid down, appropriated for, built, and building, as of March 31, 1927, as compared with the United States, are as follows:

Country	Number of vessels	Displacement tons
United States	19	150,909
British Empire	37	285,795
Italy	46	102,207
France	96	221,828
Japan	116	339,201
Total	299	1,099,940

Shipbuilding of the maritime nations from 1922 to 1927:

Country	Number of ships	Gross tons
United States	18	195,191
Japan	75	333,327
Italy	87	711,499
France	104	630,613
Germany	192	1,118,635
Great Britain	882	4,905,853
Total	1,298	7,895,118

So that within six years after the signing of the Washington treaty the Japanese had a greater tonnage of modern cruisers built and building than had the United States, and the British had about three times as great. The extensive building program of each of the nations, as shown, would indicate that each of the nations parties to the Washington treaty, with the exception of the United States, has put into cruiser and other auxiliary construction the moneys Mr. Hughes's naval treaty had saved them from having to spend in building capital ships.

GENEVA CONFERENCE FOR FURTHER LIMITATION OF NAVAL ARMAMENT

In the early part of 1927 President Coolidge communicated with the Governments of Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy regarding the further limitation of naval armaments. The President, in his message to Congress on February 10, 1927, with relation to his desire to promote such conference, said in part:

It has been the hope of the American Government, constantly expressed by the Congress since the Washington conference, that a favorable opportunity might present itself to complete the work begun here by the conclusion of further agreements covering cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. * * *

The American Government earnestly hopes that the institution of such negotiations at Geneva may be agreeable to the Governments of the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, and that comprehensive limitation of all types of naval armament may be brought into effect among the principal naval powers without delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am weak when it comes to the gentleman from New Jersey, who has worked so hard on this bill. I am going to take the chance of offending some one else by giving him five additional minutes.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The invitation extended by President Coolidge for further conference on limitation of armaments was entered into by Great Britain and Japan but was rejected by France and Italy. It convened at Geneva in June of 1927, and finally adjourned without agreement the following August of that year. The purpose and intent of the United States in seeking by further conference an extension of the Washington treaty to include cruisers and other auxiliary craft and the mutual responsibility of each of the nations participating in the conference were very plainly set forth in the opening statement made by the Hon. Hugh Gibson, chairman of the United States delegation. He said:

Representing as we do the powers which now lead in naval armaments, it is appropriate that we should assume the responsibility for initiating further naval limitations. If we were not prepared to limit, we could not expect others to do so. * * *

Further, we can start with assured agreement on the following points:

1. That in the interest of international understanding there should be no competition between the three powers in the building of naval armaments.

2. That our respective navies should be maintained at the lowest level compatible with national security and should never be of a size or character to warrant the suspicion of aggressive intent.

3. That a wise economy in government dictates that future naval construction should be kept to a minimum.

4. That the methods and principles of limitation set forth in the Washington treaty are both practical and effective and should be extended to all categories of combatant vessels of the three powers.

Mr. Gibson, in the same statement, very clearly and definitely set forth the policy of the United States with respect to naval armament in these words:

Our policy with respect to naval armaments is guided solely by the desire for adequate defense. We have no intention of maintaining a naval force which could be regarded as a threat to any power. Neither have we any desire to initiate a competitive building program in any class of vessel which might influence others to lay down more vessels than they would otherwise consider necessary.

Pursuant to this policy, the United States is prepared to accept a general program providing for as low a total tonnage in each class of auxiliary vessels on the basis of the Washington treaty ratio as will be acceptable to the other powers here represented.

In an effort to definitely fix a maximum limitation in the cruiser and auxiliary class, in accordance with the principle adopted at the Washington conference in 1921, the United States proposed as a basis of discussion the following tonnage allocations:

Cruiser class:	Total tonnage limits
For the United States	250,000–300,000
For the British Empire	250,000–300,000
For Japan	150,000–180,000

At the present time the numbers and tonnage of modern cruisers built, building, and appropriated for in the case of these countries stand as follows:

	Number	Tonnage
United States	18	146,000
British Empire	63	386,636
Japan	33	206,415

There was, however, an absolute refusal upon the part of the British delegates to limit the cruiser class to a maximum of 300,000 tons, as requested by the United States, and the insistence upon their right to have a maximum of 600,000. Consequently, through no fault of our own Nation, the conference failed to carry out the object for which it had been convened; and this failure was the direct result of the refusal of Great Britain to accept the principle of parity which had been adopted at the Washington conference in 1921.

It is regrettable indeed that notwithstanding the sincere effort that has been made by the United States since 1922 to bring about a general limitation of naval armament among the leading nations of the world, such has not been possible of consummation owing to the opposition and unwillingness of other nations that must and should be a party to such agreements. It is impossible for the United States, however, acting alone and unsupported, to bring about either world disarmament or limitation of armament. Such object can never be attained until each of the nations of the world shall feel an equal responsibility and a corresponding willingness to act in conjunction one with the other.

CONCLUSION

Realizing full well the supreme desire of our citizenship to promote peace and harmony among the nations of the world, I can nevertheless without hesitancy, whole-heartedly and unreservedly, support this legislation now under consideration; for I am conscious to the fact that in no way does it violate, either directly or indirectly, the peaceful traditions of our Nation. As the American Navy in the past has never been other than an instrument in the hands of our people to foster and maintain peace, so with confidence I have faith in its future usefulness because I continue to have faith in the peaceful purposes of America. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, the Member from Massachusetts who took her seat a few minutes ago referred in rather caustic vein to the hysteria of the propaganda against this bill. I do not think she is justified in so referring to and so describing the work that some of us in this House and throughout the Nation are trying to do in opposition to the enactment of this bill into law.

If this work can be designated as hysteria, then there are no words and there are no terms in the English language with which I have any acquaintance that can adequately describe, I will not say the hysteria, I would rather be inclined to say the madness and the insanity that has characterized the propaganda in favor of this large Navy bill.

I have not a set speech and I did not rise because I think I can be instrumental in changing many votes in this House. I have no such illusion. I did not rise because I think I can add a great deal of information to the discussion, for I am not an expert along Navy lines. I rise mainly to put into the RECORD my opposition to this program, and I do so for fear I might have the same experience I did in the debate on the radio bill, when I asked for time during general debate and tried repeatedly to obtain recognition from the Chair under the five-minute rule and was successful in neither because of the large number of Members demanding recognition. In that case it did not matter much, because we were given an opportunity to register our votes on a record vote, but here I am very fearful that the votes in opposition to this bill will be so few we shall not even be able to have a record vote. For that reason I want to record myself in opposition to this naval program.

I am very sorry that this debate in many instances has been so acrimonious and intemperate. I know that there is sometimes occasion for being excited, and sometimes I become excited during debate. I do not so much object to the terms used in describing those opposed to the bill, but I do protest against the implications that have characterized the remarks of certain Members that we who can not go along on a large Navy program are less patriotic than those who favor it.

The gentleman from Texas has come to the defense of my good friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. I shall not repeat what he said, but I want to emphasize this fact: From my intimate acquaintance with the gentleman from New York for five years, I can truthfully say that he is as little infected with the virus of communism and bolshevism as is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], and I esteem them both. I say, the more names you call Mr. LAGUARDIA the more I love and admire him. [Applause.]

I know that we are called pacifists, but that does not worry me at all. I also know from history that the very term "Christian" was a term of opprobrium and shame for 300 years. And 50 years from now it may be that the term "pacifism" and all that it implies to-day may mean something widely different from what it does now.

I am not defending anything in Russia. The gentleman from Illinois knows, if he knows anything about me, that because of my adherence to the tenets of the Christian religion I can not possibly be in favor of the things that are being done over there.

I am opposed to war if in any human way it can be averted, and therefore I am opposed to the enactment of a bill which I think is provocative of war.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. UPDIKE] said that we were being misled by the trash and propaganda that is being broadcast over the country.

Mr. UPDIKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. UPDIKE. Is it not true that they have been sending out literature, and are now doing so at this time?

Mr. KVALE. That may be; but I throw that stuff in the wastebasket.

Mr. UPDIKE. Does not the gentleman think that the people are being misled by it?

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman think that because some one is sending out that literature that anybody is being misled by such trash?

Mr. UPDIKE. I did not say that the gentleman was being misled, but the people generally.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman used the argument against us and the implication was that we were being misled. If I am misled, it is not by this propaganda. I am a little older than the gentleman from Indiana, and those things do not affect me. If I have been misled, it is because I have read the New Testament, because I believe in the principles of the Nazarene, and I am not very apt to be misled if I follow Him. If Jesus of Nazareth was here to-day, how does the gentleman think He would vote? Would He be for or against this bill? I will yield to the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. UPDIKE. He would be for the bill, because He would be for the defense of the country.

Mr. KVALE. Then I ask the gentleman to read the story of Jesus of Nazareth once more.

Mr. UPDIKE. I think I have read it perhaps as many times as the gentleman.

Mr. KVALE. That may be true; but it might interest the gentleman to know that I was ordained to the ministry about the time he was born.

You may call me a pacifist, but I am for an adequate Navy, a Navy for defensive purposes. I am for the retention of the Navy in its present strength. I think it is still too large; but if those who govern think it is necessary I would favor it until we can reach an agreement with other nations as to disarmament. But, I say, when in the name of reason do you expect to reach such an agreement with other nations if we adopt this program and continue to increase the present Army and Navy? Do not tell me that the people of the United States are back of this program. The metropolitan newspapers are back of it, but the people are not; and least of all the Christian people of the Nation. The gentleman speaks of a cross section being represented by the majority on the committee. I differ with the gentleman. The cross section of my country is against the program that we have before us here.

Why do we have to have such a large Navy of cruisers and battleships and what not? I tell you it is to protect foreign investments. That is what our Navy is being largely used for. We have now in foreign investments $14,000,000,000, and the investments are increasing at an alarming rate. That necessarily means that we must increase the strength of our Navy to protect all these investments in every corner of the earth.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is my friend opposed to the protection of American money invested abroad?

Mr. KVALE. I am not opposed to the protection of legitimate investments.

But here is the point. A great deal of this so-called property in foreign lands owned by citizens of the United States has been acquired by fraud and corruption, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman, of course, is casting a very serious slur on American business. American business does not usually grow that way.

Mr. KVALE. I did not say all the investments, but I say a great deal of the property; and if the gentleman will investigate he will find out that is so. It was brought out in a debate which I attended at one of the universities in this city the other night. The reason I went in particular was because the question to be discussed was—

Resolved, That the United States should not protect by armed force capital invested in foreign lands, except after formal declaration of war.

And for the further reason that the affirmative was maintained by Carleton College in my own State. The three debaters were Heman Johnson, Rolf Lium, and Ben Duniway. The Members will recognize the second name as the name of the young pastor who served the President during his sojourn in the West on his summer vacation. I was wishing that the President had been there, because when this young man got up to speak—and they were three fine young men and excellent debaters—he did not criticize the President, and he so stated in so many words. Then the young man proceeded to rip wide open and tear to shreds and smash to smithereens the President's present program in Nicaragua. The gentlemen from Carleton especially emphasized the fact that much of the protection we are to-day giving to foreign investments is in reality protecting fraud and corruption.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes; gladly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has it not been the declared policy of this country for over 130 years that when an American citizen invested money and went into business in a foreign country, he naturally had to submit himself to the laws of that country, just as any foreign capital invested in the United States must submit itself to the laws of this country?

Mr. KVALE. Certainly; and he has had the protection of the laws of that country.

There are several factors that enter into this program. They have been spoken of as the admiralty and the shipbuilders of the United States. The United States Steel Corporation is back of this program and Morgan & Co. are back of this program. I am not so sure but that it might be found on investigation that the United States Steel Corporation had something to do with the fiasco at Geneva. They say that it is a replacement program. Then, how do you explain the fact that President Coolidge a little over a year ago had this to say:

No navy in the world, with one exception, approaches ours, and none surpasses it.

And in one year we have seen such deterioration that we now have a Navy, in some respects, about one-third as large as that of Great Britain, we are told. In the hearings—and I have read these hearings until 1 o'clock in the morning—on page 1681, I find the following:

The CHAIRMAN. I have not been able on account of physical reasons to sit during all of these hearings, but until yesterday I never heard a statement made that this proposed construction of 25 cruisers would replace or take the place of cruisers that we now have in service.

He repeated that and said:

I did not know that these ships would be for the purpose of replacement.

Mr. BUTLER. I stand by that.

Mr. KVALE. That ought to open the eyes of some people. We now hear about replacement. It is now replacement pure and simple, yet during all of this hysteria, this madness, this propaganda in favor of a large Navy, we have not heard about replacement until very lately.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes; if the gentleman will give me five minutes more time.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; of your own time.

I simply would not think of replacement with the miserable old tubs that the American Government now maintains and calls ships. I want good ships. I did say that I never called it replacement, I would not think of keeping such ships, I would not endanger human life by asking people to be on them.

Mr. KVALE. Then, according to the chairman, this is not a replacement program.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know what it is.

Mr. KVALE. I am glad to have that information. Several others do not know what it is, but I know what it is. It is a program for war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman give me five minutes more time?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; he is entitled to it, if they have the time. But I say to the gentleman, he must not charge me with ever thinking that these ships hung up here last year are fit to have in the Government service or to think of putting human beings on—without smokestacks, some of them, and some of them without rudders.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania grant the gentleman five additional minutes?

Mr. BUTLER. I do.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Does the gentleman believe that any ships sailing the seas ever become obsolete?

Mr. KVALE. Certainly they do. That is one reason why I am opposed to this program, because before there is any possibility of any war they will all be obsolete and it will be money wasted.

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is ridiculous, and the gentleman knows it. Further than that—and the gentleman has made some extravagant statements—if he will inform himself, he will realize, if he believes that obsolete vessels should be replaced, that this is a replacement program and nothing else.

Mr. KVALE. I am glad that the gentleman, who is so well informed, tells us that. The chairman of the committee himself admits that he does not know what it is.

Mr. WOODRUFF. He will see that it is a replacement program, and not anything else.

Mr. BUTLER. If you give us new ships, why I would throw away these old ones.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Certainly, throw away the old ones.

Mr. KVALE. I beg of the gentlemen to let me have the floor.

Again, this is spoken of as being a preparedness program. I can not, with the best of intentions, understand how any intelligent human being can find it in himself to speak in favor of preparedness as a way to avoid war, after what he has seen of history throughout the ages, and after what he saw in 1914. That is to me a psychological problem. It seems to me that for all time, at least in our lifetime, we should be disillusioned in that respect and know that what Senator Sumner said is true. He said:

History teaches that the nations possessing the greatest armaments have always been the most belligerent; while the feebler powers have enjoyed, for a larger period of time, the blessing of peace.

Of course Senator Sumner was right, and, of course, this will tend to inveigle us into war. Germany and 1914 is the answer to that specious argument. And when they say we must be prepared, I ask, "What about our attitude toward Canada? How have we been prepared against a possible war with Canada, with 3,000 miles of border and only a few policemen there?"

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think the gentleman might state, while speaking of the situation that has prevailed on the Canadian border for many years, that that position is the result of a definite agreement between us and Great Britain.

Mr. KVALE. Oh, very well. Then let us have the same kind of an agreement with the other nations. If we can have it with one nation, we can have it with other nations. [Applause.]

I ask, Whom they would expect to go to war with? With England? That is impossible. With France and Germany? They have not much of a navy. With Italy? Of course not. Our settlement with her proves that she is almost bankrupt. With Japan? She has not anywhere near the resources necessary for a war with the United States. One might be pardoned for waxing a little sarcastic and suggesting that some of our people must be expecting us to go to war with Switzerland, with its large navy! [Laughter.]

I make this appeal to you, my friends: Stop and think before you cast a vote for a bill of this kind. It is uncalled for. It is unnecessary. It is a waste of hundreds of millions of the taxpayers' money that might better be used for education, for roads, for farm relief, for flood relief, and a hundred other necessary things. And worse than all, it will be misunderstood and misinterpreted by our sister nations and tend to bring on war, that curse of civilization.

We already have an adequate Navy now for the protection of our interests in foreign lands, for the protection of such interests as warrant legitimate protection. We have an adequate Navy for defense purposes. If it shall be found necessary for national defense, bring in a program for air carriers and airplanes, and if that program is within reason I shall vote for it with enthusiasm, because everyone knows that if there is to be a future war it will be fought in the air and with airplanes, not with battleships and cruisers which are obsolete. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am a little loath to ask time to-day to speak on this program, for I am on record in my district and in my State as opposing the original program that was submitted by the Secretary of the Navy. I am going to make just these few remarks here, and insert in the RECORD, without taking the time of the committee, the reasons why I reached that conclusion, and why I think the country has reached the same conclusion.

However, to-day we are not confronted with the program that was laid out at the beginning of this Congress for an expenditure of $740,000,000, with a program for 71 ships, and with the further consideration that did not apepar on the program as launched, that it meant the expenditure of a billion dollars in the completion of that program. I am here to add my word of commendation, as that of a man who is looking toward amity between the nations of the earth—my commendation of the committee that has brought this present bill before us for our consideration. [Applause.]

I want to say to you that with the bill laid before them by the naval management of the Nation for that large expenditure, and seemingly upon grounds that were justifiable, this committee, after weeks of hearings and patient consideration of the needs of national defense, and also the needs of the taxpayers of the country and the needs of international relationship, has rendered a distinct service in bringing forward this program to-day; and I do not think there is a single person in the House who is not a fanatic but can vote for it.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. No; I regret I can not yield. I am discouraged sometimes at what occurs on the floor in debate. There is nothing gained for national defense by calling any body of citizens in this country "pacifists." There is nothing gained on any hand by a group of Members attacking the Secretary of the Navy because he happens to take a seat on the floor of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUDSON. Not at this time. I have only 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas had 15. If the gentleman gets me more time, I will yield.

I want this House, when it comes to a debate like this on a great question, to forget personalities and confine the discussion to the issue before it. It seems to me it is beneath the dignity of such a legislative body as ours. I am in friendship with my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] and my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] when I say to you that it lowers the dignity of this House when you attack the Secretary of the Navy when he sits on the floor, where he has the right to be.

What is the program before us? After weeks of consideration by the Committee on Naval Affairs, it is a program that can be called a program of compromise. And again I compliment the splendid senior Member of this House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], for the weeks he has put upon this bill. I also compliment his associates. And I want especially to commend the member of that committee from New Hampshire [Mr. HALE] for the plea he made the other day. It was a plea for amity between the nations and a plea for peace. But it was also a plea that the defense of this country might be adequate for its people and its property. I am not afraid of this country going into war, but I do say that wherever the Stars and Stripes float the American citizen shall be protected in his life and property with every dollar that this Nation possesses. [Applause.]

Now, what is this program before us?

It is a program which provides for an annual expenditure for the maintenance of an adequate Navy over a period of six years. It breathes in no way of bombast or false superiority. It can not be taken as an offense against the amity of the nations. It can safely be called a program of a peace-loving and peace-seeking nation in maintaining her line of just defense. It provides what? It provides an authorization for the construction of 15 light cruisers with 8-inch guns and 1 aircraft carrier, a total of 16 vessels, at an outlay of $274,000,000. Contrast that program before us as a Committee of the Whole with the program that seemed to confront us in the beginning of this Congress. It is an authorization for the construction of 16 vessels instead of 71 vessels. That goes a long way in giving in to the demands of this country for peace and for amity among the nations.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman think that they ever expected to get the 71?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; they did and more, too. I can answer the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HUDSON. Let me answer one at a time. I would suppose they expected to get that as much as they would expect to get any bill that they proposed to this House; in fact, from the nature of the naval set-up they had a right to demand 71 vessels, and I would suppose they could use them. However, I do not think the temper of the country woud have allowed that construction, and this committee yielded to the temper of the country by bringing in a sane and wise program.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my friend if the people of Lansing and the State of Michigan do not expect the Secretary of the Navy to run the Navy, and if they do not expect my friend from Michigan and his 434 other colleagues to run this House of Representatives without Secretary Wilbur's interference?

Mr. HUDSON. No; I would not say they would expect that.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield to me so I may clear up this matter?

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman ought to remain in Lansing and let the Secretary of the Navy vote his vote.

Mr. HUDSON. Let me answer the gentleman. The people of my home city, sir, would expect that every Cabinet officer shall have the rights and privileges of this floor at any time and at all times.

Mr. BLANTON. Socially, yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. HUDSON. I am not so sure but what it was a wise thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Socially, yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I am not so sure but what it was a wise thing for the Secretary to come here and find how Congress feels about the matters which they control, and in that way they can probably find out something to their advantage.

Mr. BLANTON. We are learning how they in the Navy feel slowly but definitely.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield to me so that I may clear this up?

Mr. HUDSON. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin want to answer the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Then I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER. I would suggest that you answer the gentleman from Texas by telling him that the Members of Congress should run the Congress and not try to run the police department of the District of Columbia. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. The Constitution requires us to do that. I have not taken any of the gentleman's perquisites away from him.

Mr. HUDSON. Gentlemen, I have a prepared address here which I would have liked to have gotten out of my system, but this is not the kind of a day to do it. However, I want to call your attention, and the attention of those who seem to be opposed to this bill, to section 4, which is placed in the bill in direct consideration of the gentlemen that my friend from Minnesota and I are joined with.

When you speak of pacifists I imagine they put me on the same ground, for I try to follow the teachings that you, sir, were saying you were following. But we must remember, sir, that while the Master sent His disciples out once two by two, without scrip or wallet, the next time He sent them out He told them to be prepared.

Mr. KVALE. With guns?

Mr. HUDSON. So there is in the teachings of that Man, after whom I want to shape and fashion my life, the teaching that we render unto Cæsar the things that belong unto Cæsar, and there is, of course, the necessity of a nation having its adequate and its natural defenses. But in this section the committee has yielded to the demand over the world for peace.

If we read the morning papers, we saw what the Secretary of State at a meeting last night in New York City said. Does that look as though we were headed toward war? Does that look as though we were headed toward international strife?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HUDSON. I want you to take into consideration section 4, which says that in the event of an international agreement for further limitation of naval armament the President is authorized and empowered to suspend in whole or in part this entire program. We are not raising something here that can stop peace between the nations of the earth. We are for world peace. We want world peace, and the committee has brought before us in this provision the grounds upon which we can continue our counsels for world peace, and we are going to do it. [Applause.]

There is no reason to-day why we should not vote for this bill in the way the committee has brought the bill before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, the failure of the Geneva three-power naval conference of the summer of 1927 to agree on the ratio of naval vessels outside of the limitation of the Washington Disarmament Conference, led immediately to the launching of a propaganda throughout the country for a great naval-building program. The word was sent forth by our Navy Establishment and various auxiliary organizations that England was building a huge navy and therefore we must immediately launch a similar program.

If this was not done, we would find ourselves with a very inferior fleet and personnel in 1936.

The proponents of this program said the Nation was rich; that it was the world power to-day, and that our dignity and ability demanded the greatest Navy of any power anywhere in the world.

This discussion and propaganda, fed by the Navy League, the admirals, and other organizations, made a setting for the bill introduced in the House on December 14, 1927, as submitted by the Secretary of the Navy.

This bill called for the construction of the following naval vessels: 25 cruisers, 9 destroyer leaders, 32 submarines, 5 aircraft carriers, a total of 71 vessels, estimated to cost $740,000,000, but which would have reached into $1,000,000,000. While the bill did not call for a definite period of years in which the program was to be completed, the press of the country carried the impression to our citizenry that it was a program to be completed within five or six years.

Secretary Wilbur stated before the committee that the General Board, in the preparation of the program submitted primarily was considering the needs of the national defense, but added:

It is true in determining this need the General Board has at all times taken into consideration other nations and their construction program.

In other words, in the language of the Secretary, expressing the views of the General Board, the matter of a competitive building program for the Navy was one of the objects to be accomplished by the bill introduced.

Now, let us see what effect this would have upon the public in general, who had been led, by the President's message to Congress in their opening sessions of 1926 and 1927, to believe that the defenses of this Nation were in fair order. I want to quote you first in substantiation of that statement from the President's message to the two Houses of Congress at the beginning of the second session of the Sixty-ninth Congress, delivered in December, 1926. Under the subhead of national defense I quote:

Our policy of national defense is not one of making war, but of insuring peace. The land and sea force of America, both in its domestic and foreign implications, is distinctly a peace force. It is an arm of the police power to guarantee order and the execution of the law at home and security to our citizens abroad. No self-respecting nation would neglect to provide an army and navy proportionate to its population, the extent of its territory, and the dignity of the place which it occupies in the world. When it is considered that no navy in the world, with one exception, approaches ours and none surpasses it, that our Regular Army of about 115,000 men is the equal of any other like number of troops, that our entire permanent and reserve land and sea force trained and training consists of a personnel of about 610,000, and that our annual appropriations are about $680,000,000 a year, expended under the direction of an exceedingly competent staff, it can not be said that our country is neglecting its national defense. It is true that a cult of disparagement exists, but that candid examination made by the Congress through its various committees has always reassured the country and demonstrated that it is maintaining the most adequate defensive forces in these present years that it has ever supported in time of peace. Particular points may need strengthening, but as a whole our military power is sufficient.

The one weak place in the whole line is our still stupendous war debt. In any modern campaign the dollars are the shock troops. With a depleted treasury in the rear, no army can maintain itself in the field. A country loaded with debt is a country devoid of the first line of defense. Economy is the handmaid of preparedness. If we wish to be able to defend ourselves to the full extent of our power in the future, we shall discharge as soon as possible the financial burden of the last war. Otherwise we would face a crisis with a part of our capital resources already expended.

While our policy of national defense will proceed in order that we may be independent and self-sufficient, I am opposed to engaging in any attempt at competitive armaments. No matter how much or how little some other country may feel constrained to provide, we can well afford to set the example, not of being dictated to by others, but of adopting our own standards. We are strong enough to pursue that method, which will be a most wholesome model for the rest of the world.

The foreign policy of this Government is well known. It is one of peace based on that mutual respect that arises from mutual regard for international rights and the discharge of international obligations. It is our purpose to promote understanding and good will between ourselves and all other people. The American people are altogether lacking in an appreciation of the tremendous good fortune that surrounds their international position. We have no traditional enemies. We are not embarrassed over any disputed territory. We have no possessions that are coveted by others; they have none that are coveted by us. Our borders are unfortified. We fear no one; no one fears us. All the world knows that the whole extent of our influence is against war and in favor of peace, against the use of force and in favor of negotiation, arbitration, and adjudication as a method of adjusting international differences.

Here you have a Nation whose Executive, Commander in Chief of its Navy, had said within the 12 months previous that "No navy in the world, with one exception, approaches ours and none surpasses it," confronted with a building program of 71 vessels of defense costing $1,000,000,000.

What was the average citizen and taxpayer to think?

These average citizens were further told by their President at the beginning of 1927 in a special message to Congress:

The American Government and people are convinced that competitive armament constitutes one of the most dangerous contributing causes of international suspicion and discord and are calculated to eventually lead to war.

Could anyone expect anything else than that the average citizen and taxpayer, after those words by his President, should be alarmed and incensed at the program thrust before us at the opening of Congress.

And would that sentiment not be further increased by the very words used in the President's message sent to the two Houses of Congress at the beginning of the first session of this Congress.

In that message of last December, under the title of national defense, the President addressed Congress as follows:

Being a Nation relying not on force but on fair dealing and good will to maintain peace with others, we have provided a moderate military force in a form adopted solely to defense.

Continuing he said, speaking of the Navy now:

We can plan for the future and begin a moderate building program.

Could the people understand that 71 vessels and seven hundred and forty millions of expenditures was a moderate building program when it was understood especially that this expenditure should be within a five or six year period?

I quote again from the same message on the same subject:

The failure to agree—

Referring to the Geneva conference—should not cause us to build either more or less than we otherwise should. Any future treaty of limitation will call on us for more ships. We should enter on no competition.

Again he says:

It should especially be demonstrated that propaganda will not cause us to change our course. Where there is no treaty limitation, the size of the Navy which America is to have will be solely for America to determine. No outside influence should enlarge it or diminish it.

The duty of this Congress is to provide for the increase of the Navy up to the point where it may be kept intact in its present strength. Beyond that we have no right to go, either in the expenditure of money or in inciting other nations to rush into lavish constructive programs. We are convinced, in spite of lurid statements by certain organizations and men, that the American people are opposed to naval expansion merely for the purpose of competing with other nations.

While we were discussing the pending bill on the floor yesterday, Secretary of State Kellogg was speaking to the Foreign Relations Council in New York, in the course of which he said:

The United States has been a party to conciliation treaties for 15 years, and while there has never yet been an occasion for invoking them, I know of no reason why this country should object to an inquiry by a commission of conciliation if war is threatened. It is claimed in some quarters that purely domestic questions might be inquired into by these commissions of conciliation. While I can not conceive that any government would feel justified in demanding an inquiry by the commission into a matter solely within the domestic jurisdiction of another government, I do not feel that the point is material. The object which is sought to be attained by conciliation treaties is the prevention of war, and in my opinion any government can well afford to submit to inquiry any question which may threaten to involve it in the horrors of war, particularly when as in the Bryan and other treaties I have just mentioned, the findings of the commission have no binding force and to be effective must be voluntarily accepted.

The world is more and more alive to the necessity of preventing war, and I think it is significant that the Sixth International Conference of American States which recently concluded its labors at Habana adopted two antiwar resolutions, one of which contains the unqualified statement that "the American Republics desire to express that they condemn war as an instrument of national policy in their mutual relations.

We could not very well approve of the original Navy program with those words in our ears.

Now, after many weeks of hearings in consideration by the committee they have laid before us their reaction in the form of the present bill.

We desire at this point to commend the honored chairman, Mr. BUTLER, of Pennsylvania, and members of the committee for the moderation and saneness which they have revealed in submitting for our consideration the present bill and the report accompanying it.

The program is one which can safely be called a program of moderation, a program of meeting the actual needs for the maintaining of an adequate Navy. It breathes in no way of bombast or false superiority. It can not be taken as an offense against the amity of the nations.

It can safely be called a program of a peace-loving and peace-seeking nation in maintaining their line of just defense.

It gives authorization for its construction program of 15 light cruisers of 8-inch guns, 1 aircraft carrier, a total of 16 vessels, at an outlay of $274,000,000.

So our program that is to be considered is not one of 71 vessels and $740,000,000, but one of 16 vessels and $274,000,000.

A program not of excessive expenditure or a race in tonnage with other nations, but it is a program of replacement and stabilization.

I want you to take into consideration section 4, which says that in the event of an international agreement for further limitation of naval armament the President is authorized and empowered to suspend in whole or in part this entire program. We are not raising something here that can stop peace between the nations of the earth. We are for world peace. We want world peace, and the committee has brought before us in this provision the grounds upon which we can continue our counsels for world peace, and we are going to do it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, it is all right for a gentleman [Mr. KVALE], who lives about 1,500 miles from the seaboard and who has a cyclone cellar to enter in case of an emergency, to get up here on the floor and say that we should keep our Navy only up to the standard that is necessary for defense. The gentleman says he is in favor of Navy for defense only. Where are you going to draw the line of demarcation between defense and offense? I am sure it would be very difficult for one to draw that line.

And, again, about replacements; the gentleman, I believe, is a crackajack farmer. I think he yields to no one in this House as a farmer, and yet if he had a tumble-down barn he would not replace it with another tumble-down barn, would he? Why, certainly not. He would want a barn that had every modern equipment and was right up to the minute.

On the same theory we should replace old, worn-out ships with new, modern ones.

I am with our respected and beloved colleague, the former Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in a desire for universal peace. I would say God speed the day when the nations of the earth agree upon universal peace; but, gentlemen, that hour has not yet arrived and we must use the means at our command to carry on.

There is only one objection I have to the bill before us, and that is it does not go far enough, because, after this program is completed, what will be our position at that time? I will just read the conclusion of the committee in their report:

> The foregoing program is intended to so round out our naval forces as to make them reasonably competent to support our policies and safeguard our interests throughout the world. Its purpose is to insure that these policies and interests will be respected and peace maintained. It is in no sense a competitive program, since the essence of competition is the effort to excel or outdistance another. The program when completed will still leave our Navy in a secondary position.

I know we did a very foolish thing after the Washington conference. We scrapped splendid war vessels that were ready for service and were worth while, whereas the other parties to the contract scrapped beautiful sets of blue prints. Now, surely the gentlemen do not want to have that same thing repeated at this time. It is little enough for us to have a building program that will bring us up to the 5–5–3 ratio. This bill does not even do that.

We have had gentlemen here in this House—and I do not know whether they are licensed or not—yet they posed here as crystal gazers and as psychics. Under the regulations of the District I understand that crystal gazers and psychics must take out a license in order to practice, and yet men have deliberately within the last two days stood on the floor of this House and used the prerogatives of these crystal gazers and psychics by telling us that it will be impossible for us ever to have war with England, Japan, France, or Italy. I purpose, gentlemen, to offer a motion or resolution in the House that no Member be permitted to exercise the business of forecasting or foretelling events unless he is properly and duly accredited on the license books of the District of Columbia. [Laughter.]

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KVALE. Then what about the gentlemen who are continually forecasting war?

Mr. BOYLAN. That is what I am saying. I say I am opposed to any forecasters holding forth here without a license, either predicting war or saying it is impossible to have war. [Laughter.]

Mr. KVALE. I understood that applied only to those who said it was impossible to have war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. BOYLAN. What we ought to do is to keep our Navy right up to the minute, and keep it up not beyond the ratio that has been established, but keep it up to that ratio.

I am sure even the gentlemen who are opposed to this bill would regret very, very much if one of our seacoast towns, either on the Atlantic or the Pacific, were bombarded by an enemy. They would say then, if they could, they would be willing to use every resource and every help in their power in order to help their brethren.

One of the gentlemen says, "Oh, I am for airplanes and I am for all sorts of air machines rather than for new ships."

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman would not believe in applying the principle of a 20 per cent contribution for the defense of cities on the coast, as is proposed in defending us against the floods of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, that is a different proposition. I would be pleased to give you all the help you need. I am willing to go the whole way with you and without asking for a 20 per cent contribution from you.

But speaking about airplanes, one of the gentlemen states that he is in favor of airplanes. That is all right, but they have not reached the stage of development yet where they can take off of themselves. They need mother ships, they need protecting cruisers, and we have to have these aids for them in order that they be of any service at all.

Gentlemen, we ought to keep our fighting forces right up to the minute. We should not only adopt a building program, a well-balanced one, but we should also keep all our navy yards fully manned and equipped to carry on at a moment's notice should necessity demand it.

If we do this, our Navy will not be a menace to the world; it will be a most effective agency for the preservation of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, while it may be that I can not add anything either to the facts or arguments which have already been presented in support of this measure, I feel it my duty to voice my views on the subject in the hope that it may serve to emphasize what has already been said.

In determining whether or not Congress should authorize this building program, it is important at the very outset to ascertain what is the mission of the American Navy.

The primary duty imposed upon it is to afford protection and defense to the United States—the home land—from invasion or conquest.

In addition to that important duty, it must at all times be ready to defend our far-flung insular possessions; to maintain for American commerce the freedom of the seas; to afford and guarantee adequate defense to the greatest engineering enterprise and commerce carrier of the century, the Panama Canal; to maintain our policies in the Orient; to enforce our policies of noninterference by monarchial governments in Central and South American Republics; and to defend our national honor and protect and redress American citizens whenever wronged.

We are the richest nation on earth; we are the greatest export nation on the globe; our trade routes extend to every ocean; our coast line does not only embrace the coast line of the United States but under our Monroe doctrine the coast line of every country of Central and South America becomes our coast line.

As long as we are dependent upon the Chilean nitrate fields for nitrates from which explosives are manufactured, that route of trade must ever remain impregnable; our communications with our insular possessions, with the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, thousands upon thousands of miles from the home land, must be uninterrupted.

Therefore such a naval mission as I have briefly outlined requires that this Government at all times maintain a Navy in the highest state of efficiency, and that it be so balanced—consisting of different types of ships—that it will be able at any moment to meet any emergency that might confront the Government.

If there is one policy firmly fixed in the minds of the people of this country, it is that they are opposed in times of peace to a large standing army. But knowing that the Navy is the first line of our national defense the American people have always stood for a program—of whatever character it may be—for a Navy of sufficient strength and so balanced and proportioned that it will be in readiness at any and all times to meet any and all national emergencies.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman and members of the committee feel that way, why did not the committee give us what President Coolidge asked for—a real Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Because in our judgment we are giving you all the naval mission required. In our judgment the naval mission did not require what the President recommended. If it did require it I would be standing here and advocating it. After examining the naval needs of the country we concluded that the program that we present here meets the naval needs at this time. [Applause.]

It is absolutely essential that our Navy be in condition and prepared at all time. It must ever remain in a state of readiness, for in the event of national emergency it can not wait to be prepared, but must be prepared at the time to cope with the emergency.

The naval mission to which I have referred requires that this Government maintain a strong Navy. The primary duty of government is self-preservation, and no sophistry of logic can justify it in stripping itself of its means of defense and relying for its preservation upon the mercy, the pity, or the love of other nations.

Mr. Chairman, at the Washington conference it was proposed by this Government that the same ratio applicable to battleships be extended to include cruisers, destroyers, and submarines.

That proposal submitted by our Government was not accepted by the other powers, who propose to retain unlimited discretion in the building of this type of vessels.

Since the Washington conference it has at all times been the hope of this Government that an agreement could be reached with the other maritime nations with reference to a limitation on cruisers, destroyers, and submarines.

Therefore, as you will all remember, the President requested the five nations signatory to the Washington treaty to meet at Geneva for the purpose of seeing if limitation could not be secured. England and Japan accepted the invitation.

In his opening statement to the conference Mr. Gibson, the American representative, stated:

> Our respective navies should be maintained at the lowest level compatable with national security and should never be of a size or character to warrant the suspicion of aggressive intent.

For the purpose of bringing about a genuine limitation of naval armament he proposed to the conference that the total tonnage limitation for cruisers for the United States should be 250,000 to 300,000 tons, and the same for the British Empire, and 150,000 to 180,000 tons for Japan.

It is to be deeply regretted that the other nations at the conference could not agree to the American proposal.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will.

Mr. WOODRUFF. As a matter of fact, the amount of tonnage we will have as a result of the building program is the amount of the tonnage stated by Mr. Gibson at Geneva as the basis of the discussion.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course. If this program goes through, we have to-day 144,000 tons of cruisers, and adding the 150,000 proposed at Geneva makes 294,000 tons of cruisers, which was the proposal at Geneva at that time to meet our mission in the event of a compromise with 300,000 tons.

The building program now before you for consideration is the same proposal that was submitted at Geneva by this Government. If that proposal had been agreed to as submitted, we would have been authorized to build 15 additional cruisers of 10,000 tons each, or an additional tonnage of 150,000 tons.

We now have built, building, and authorized 18 cruisers of a total tonnage of 144,000 tons. Add to this tonnage the 150,000 tons proposed at Geneva, and provided for in this bill, and it will give us a total tonnage of 294,000 tons.

Surely if the proposed agreement had been reached no one would object to the Government building the tonnage agreed upon. Having failed to reach an agreement, we are not asking that any more tonnage in cruisers be authorized at this time than was proposed at the conference.

This building program is nothing more or nothing less than the straight proposal submitted at Geneva.

This Nation has never engaged in competitive building and does not intend to do so. The program we are presenting is in no sense competitive, but is based entirely upon the needs of our Navy to enable it to meet, in case of a national emergency, the mission for which it is built and maintained.

We are not asking this House to build the 15 additional cruisers for the reason that Great Britain has 63 cruisers and Japan 33. We are asking the approval of this measure because the mission of the Navy to which I have referred demands these additional ships, and it more nearly affords the Nation the security to which it is entitled.

Inquiry concerning the strength of other naval powers is always germane to the question, so let us see what is the cruiser strength of other nations. In modern cruisers of all caliber, Great Britain has built and building 63 cruisers, of a total tonnage of 385,076 tons; Japan has 33 cruisers, of a total tonnage of 206,415 tons; and the United States has 18 cruisers, of a total tonnage of 146,000 tons. While I am crediting the United States with 18 cruisers, she has only 10 cruisers of the modern class, is building 2, and has authorized and appropriated for 6, but they have not been laid down nor the contract let for their construction.

So you can readily see that the great maritime nations recognize that cruisers have an important mission to perform in the defense of a nation.

Let me call your attention to the fact that during the six years since the Washington conference England has laid down and appropriated for 57 ships of war, Japan 127, France 101, Italy 71, and the United States 19. Therefore during the six years since the Washington conference England has built warships at the rate of 9 a year, Japan at the rate of 21 a year, France at the rate of 16 a year, Italy at the rate of 11 a year, and the United States at the rate of 3 a year.

Of the 57 warships built and authorized by Great Britain since the Washington conference, 17 are cruisers; and of the 127 warships constructed by Japan, 16 are cruisers; and of the 101 ships constructed by France, 7 are cruisers; and of the 71 ships built by Italy, 6 are cruisers; and of the 19 ships of war built and authorized since the Washington conference by the United States, 8 are cruisers.

Mr. Chairman, this measure provided for the construction of the ships within a definite period of time; that is, the laying down of these ships within three years, five cruisers a year, and the completing of them within six years.

Our responsibility is to provide for the national defense of the country, and I am opposed to delegating that authority to some bureau. If there is no time limit within which these ships are to be constructed, Congress and the country would have no assurance when they would be built. I am opposed to a paper navy. The naval mission of this country requires ships of steel, and for one I want Congress to say when ships for the defense of the country shall be built and not leave that important question to the Budget or any other department of the Government.

Authorizing that these ships be built within six years is in the interest of economy. They can be built within that time, and to string out the building to a longer period of time entails additional expense.

If this program is adopted and these ships are constructed within the six years, we will then have a cruiser strength in 1934 of 33 modern cruisers, of which 23 will be 10,000-ton cruisers carrying 8-inch guns and 10 of 6,600 tons each with 6-inch guns. We will then have the same number of cruisers that Japan has to-day, and 30 less than Great Britain has at this time. Then our fleet will be far better rounded out and properly proportioned than it is to-day.

The cost of this program will be $274,000,000, which will be spread over a period of six years and as this program must be commenced during the fiscal year 1929 to be completed within the time limit prescribed in the bill, an appropriation for the commencing of the work on five cruisers must be carried in the present appropration bill. It is estimated that $5,000,000 will be sufficient for this year.

The present appropriation bill will carry $72,760,000 for the existing program heretofore authorized. Therefore we are safe to assume that the total appropriation for building for the year 1929, including this program, will not exceed $77,760,000 and in 1930 the existing program heretofore adopted will call for an expenditure of $52,703,600 and this program will call for an expenditure of $47,916,666 making for 1930 a total building program of $100,620,266, and the total building program for 1931, including the present existing program and this proposed one, will be $114,061,816, and for 1932 the existing program and the proposed one will be $75,716,668.

In 1932 we will complete the existing program heretofore authorized. In 1933 this program will entail an expenditure of $47,250,000; in 1934, $26,000,000. This, therefore, is an average yearly expenditure for six years, from 1929 to 1934, of new construction of every character for the Navy of $73,568,125.

After a most exhaustive hearing, your committee concluded to authorize but one airplane carrier. By our failure to authorize the five carriers recommended by the Navy Department, let no one conclude that the members of the committee are not fully cognizant of the great value and absolute necessity of aviation in the Navy. It is the eyes of the fleet and in future naval engagements will play a most important part.

I yield to no one in enthusiastic support of aviation and the important function it has. The facts are these:

Under the Washington treaty we have still available 69,000 tons that can be used in constructing airplane carriers. We have now the Saratoga, the Lexington, and the Langley.

In view of the fact that an airplane carrier of 13,800 tons as proposed in this bill is somewhat experimental in nature, and it has not yet been proven as to whether or not a ship of that tonnage has the stability of deck required for the taking on and taking off of airplanes, to use all the tonnage until it had been definitely established would, in our opinion, be unwise.

As soon as the Navy Department concludes the exact tonnage that they desire the airplane carrier to be, then I know that I voice the sentiment of an overwhelming majority of the committee when I say that they will ask Congress to provide them.

Mr. Chairman, the nations signatory to the Washington treaty under its terms meet again in 1931. This Nation has always taken, and will continue to take, a leading part in seeking to bring about further limitation of Navy auxiliary vessels, and our committee did not desire to lay down a program beyond the date at which the Washington conference would convene in the hope that at that conference an agreement can be reached limiting the tonnage of cruisers, submarines, and destroyers. It is devoutly to be hoped that the day is not far distant when the great maritime nations of the earth will reach an agreement. To do so will be a step in the interest of the peace of the world, and America must take and will take a leading part in bringing this about.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the lowest intimation that England made to America at Geneva on cruisers? Was it not over 400,000 tons?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Six hundred thousand tons; and if America had gone to England's proposal, instead of its being a limitation of armament conference it would have been a building program. Our delegates did not do so, and rightly they did not do so, and we are not asking you to build any more ships than Mr. Gibson submitted at the Geneva proposal.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Was it not said that they could have agreed if they had put 6-inch guns on cruisers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. A great debate took place, but the result was that England said that on account of her position in the world she needed a larger cruiser fleet than we thought her position demands. Therefore we were unable to reach an agreement. If Mr. Gibson's proposal had been brought home and the sentiment of America ratified it, there is not a man here who would not have readily voted to let America's ships be brought up to her treaty strength. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

The Chair will state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has remaining 15 minutes in favor of the bill and 32 minutes against the bill. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has consumed all of his time and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] has 38 minutes left.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I think it is fair to yield to the opposition some time.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I would like to yield some of my 38 minutes to myself. I yield now five minutes to the lady from California [Mrs. KAHN].

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I certainly appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGUARDIA], because he knows I am going to speak in favor of the bill.

I have a habit of drifting in to all sorts of gatherings just to hear what the other fellow has to say, and just before the recent upset in China I happened upon a pacifist meeting.

As I came in the brilliant Chinese editor of a daily paper in San Francisco was speaking. He was picturing China as the realization of the pacifists' dream. In effect he said: "Here is a country absolutely nonmilitaristic, hardly a trained soldier, not a semblance of an army worthy of the name, no navy, not even a merchant marine."

A country such as you would have this country become. And with flashing eye and fiery voice he turned on them and said, "And what has this made of China? A pie counter for almost every nation on earth." [Applause.] Every predatory nation has rushed and grabbed a piece, and China has had to stand tamely by for they feared her not. She dared not protest for she had nothing with which to back up her protest. Would England, France, Germany, Russia, or Japan have refrained from taking her fairest possessions because, forsooth, she said, "I am helpless; rob me not." And to-day what is the condition of China? No stabilized government, overrun with bands of bandits, fighting with each other, and preying upon the innocent multitudes.

We are not entering upon a competitive program, we have no ulterior motive, no dream of imperialism, no nightmare of world domination, no desire to camouflage a navy of offense as one of defense. Simply a Navy sufficient to keep open the lanes of commerce in case of necessity.

Aside from the international obligation to keep open the canal, so ably presented by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], we have a moral as well as a legal obligation toward our island possessions, their welfare, and their commerce.

We carried the spirit of altruism to the *n*th degree in living up to the spirit as well as the letter of the Washington conference, otherwise we would not be in the position we are in to-day, far below our agreed quota.

That is all that need to be said to the people of the country that we are below not beyond the 5-5-3 agreement; that we are not entering upon an orgy of building, so quiet the epidemic of hysteria, in spite of the objection of the Member from Minnesota, spread through the land by an unfortunate presentation of the program, on the one hand, and by deliberate misinterpretations and false statements, on the other, which are being kept alive by continued propaganda. As soon as I realized what the propagandists were doing I issued a statement to the newspapers in my district explaining the program, and the flood of protests almost ceased. Many in audiences before whom I have spoken came to me and said, "Oh, is that what it is; why, of course, that is all right. I am so glad you explained. I thought it was a competitive program with billions to be spent at once."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the lady from California has expired.

Mrs. KAHN. May I have one more minute, Mr. LaGUARDIA?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. Mr. LaGUARDIA will yield. [Laughter.]

Mrs. KAHN. I thank you.

We who dwell on the Pacific have a keen appreciation of the Navy and know what it means and for what it stands. We know the Pacific will be the great commercial highway of the future and the part the Navy will play in the building up of its trade, and I wonder how many of you have seen as I have the fleet steaming in majesty through the Golden Gate, felt the thrill of pride as you realize here is something that will maintain the inviolacy of our flag; that will command respect abroad; that will guard our citizens and enforce our rights on the high seas and on foreign shores, the symbol of our Government—power, peace, protection. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Chair how much time I have?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 15 minutes for the bill and 26 minutes against the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like very much, indeed, to yield to a member of my committee one-half of the time I have, and then I am going to beg the House give the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] 10 minutes outside of the arrangement. I now yield seven and one-half minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EVANS]. That is half of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for seven and a half minutes.

Mr. EVANS of California. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, along with my friend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr WOLVERTON], who preceded me this afternoon in this debate, I want to say that I am proud of the privilege, the first time I appear on the floor of this House, to speak in defense of my country and in behalf of national defense. I believe that that is a rather wholesome and deserving cause on which to embark, and I trust that when my service here is completed, whether it be short or otherwise, I can still look on this privilege in the same light. [Applause.]

The bill before the committee at this time is one of the most important with which the present Congress will have to deal. It involves the matter of our national defense, and it will doubtless be conceded that no problem with which the country is confronted is of more vital importance. Everyone recognizes the desirability and urgency of internal improvements, such as flood control, development of our waterways and harbors, and other improvements of similar nature, but we believe that it will be conceded that no basis of comparison lies in the need for internal improvements with the imperative need of maintaining our national defense. In other words, if we need protection in any degree we need it above all other things. Our policy of adequate national defense is traditional and coextensive with our national life and the history of our country. But the proposed legislation can not be held as being in the way of or to the exclusion of adequate legislation for flood relief. This bill calls for only the sum of $45,000,000 annually for six years, and no one will seriously claim that this amount would create a very heavy obligation for our Government to assume.

Our country has for more than 30 years advocated the principle of settling international disputes by arbitration and agreement. Every President, including and since the time of the Cleveland administration, has stood aggressively for this great reform. The people of our country have unitedly supported our leaders and statesmen in their efforts in that direction. Our Government has taken the leadership and responsibility of calling and causing to be held two international conferences for that purpose. The willingness of our Government and of the people of the United States to make any reasonable contribution to the principle of outlawing war and conflict by friendly negotiations and arbitration can not be discounted. While it is true that the results accomplished so far in this behalf are not all that were hoped for, it can nevertheless be said that they were not altogether disappointing, and it is hoped that further efforts may be crowned with a greater degree of success.

In the absence of such international agreement we have left only the one course to pursue, and that is to continue to maintain our Army and our Navy, not for the purpose of intimidation of or threat to any other nation, but for the perfectly legitimate and reasonable purpose of upholding national integrity and the protection of our people, their lives and property, both at home and abroad. For this purpose our Navy is the most potent factor, and the question that irresistibly forces itself upon us is that if we are to have a navy what sort of navy shall it be? Are we to be content with a mere makeshift, or shall we insist on a navy in keeping with our place and standing among the nations and one reasonably adequate for our national defense? We believe that we are safe in acting on the assumption that the people of our country will not be satisfied with anything less than a navy worthy of the name and, as well, the purposes for which it is maintained. If we are to have a navy of this kind, it is imperative that we build new ships from time to time as the old ones go out of commission and become useless.

Mr. O'CONNELL. If we go along with the program of the committee we shall still be behind the provisions of the 5-5-3 ratio, shall we not?

Mr. EVANS of California. Yes. Regardless of what may be said to the contrary, every Member of this body knows that the question of maintaining a navy for adequate defense depends on the size of other naval powers. In other words, it is impossible to deal with this question without taking into consideration the relative strength of other navies. Ambassador Gibson, before the Geneva conference last June, said in his opening statement:

> Before suggesting tonnage allocations in the various classes, I desire to state that we frankly recognize that naval requirements are relative, that building programs on the part of one power may well require expanding programs on the part of others, that if these limits are adjusted they should be adjusted for all.

At this point I wish to divert for a word. I concur with our beloved chairman, Mr. BUTLER, in every word he has said in commendation of Admiral Hilary P. Jones, who was one of our representatives at the Geneva conference. In my opinion too much praise can not be given Admiral Jones for his work and effort in advocating the truly American principles for which he stood at that meeting. I want to extend these same words of praise to our ambassador, the Hon. Hugh Gibson, the chairman of that conference. I have read his speeches and have been impressed with the true American manner in which he presented the cause of this Government and the high ideals of our people. He is a man of whom all America is justly proud. I feel it a distinct honor to be able to say that Ambassador Gibson, together with his much loved and highly respected and talented mother, are residents of the district and of the city which I have the honor to represent in part, and I deem it a privilege as well as an honor to be able to say of Ambassador Gibson and of his dear mother that no finer type of American citizens can be found in this country.

Going back to the subject of comparative armaments among the nations, it can be well said that if no other nation had a navy our country would correspondingly have no use for one.

Your committee has conducted hearings over a period of two months, meeting almost daily and remaining in session from two to three hours each meeting, at which hearings every possible effort was made to gain information with reference to the true and actual conditions of our own Navy and its needs, and further endeavored to gain information from which reliable comparisons could be made of our naval armament with that of other world powers. Before authorizing the construction of additional naval armament the members of this committee and this body are entitled to know, and should know, just what we have in the way of naval strength so as to be able to pass some judgment on whether or not it is reasonably adequate for the purposes for which it is maintained and how it compares with the same sort of defense maintained by other powers. The information set forth in the report which accompanies this bill is a concise statement of the deductions made by 20 of the 21 members of the committee. I know that every member whose name is attached to the report will concur with me in saying that due to the capable efforts of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW] the facts set forth in this report are correct and that they may be relied upon by the Members of this body.

Some of the salient features are as follows:

As to capital ships, we have under the Washington conference a parity on a 5-5-3 basis with Great Britain and Japan.

At the present time the number of modern cruisers built, building, and appropriated for in these three countries stand as follows:

> The United States has 18, with a total tonnage of 146,000.
> Great Britain has 63, with a total tonnage of 386,000.
> Japan has 33, with a total tonnage of 206,000.

In numbers these cruisers rank in order of importance as follows:

United States	1.4
Great Britain	5.0
Japan	2.6

In tonnage they rank as follows:

United States	1.9
Great Britain	5.0

It has already been emphasized by other speakers on this bill that the United States has in the service now 22 cruisers of the average age of 24 years. These are in addition to those included in the ratios just above mentioned. The standard life of a cruiser is 20 years. Every one of these old cruisers is over 20 years of age except 5, and those 5 will be over 20 years of age in less than one year from this time. Every one of these cruisers is perfectly worthless for offensive and defensive use in case of conflict. Therefore the only cruisers we now have in the service of modern and useful type are ten 6,000-ton ships mounted with only 6-inch guns. When the eight new cruisers heretofore authorized, two of which are now under construction, are completed this will give us 146,000 tons, as set forth in the report.

If the 15 ships called for by this bill are authorized and built, we will then have a total cruiser tonnage of 296,000 and will yet be approximately 100,000 tons below Great Britain in cruiser strength. These figures should prove to be reassuring to those who warn us against any sort of a constructive program that tends toward competitive building. We would have to add to this program another 100,000 tons before we could be said to be in the competing class.

At this point I wish to refer to what seems to be an overdeveloped antipathy on the part of some of our countrymen to any move on the part of our Nation to bring our naval strength up to that of Great Britain. It is urged by this line of thought that if the lanes of the sea were closed to the British Isles suffering would result in a short time. It has been claimed that Great Britain more than the United States is in need of types of ships, such as cruisers, that are swift and of widest range of action; and to stop the lanes of trade of Great Britain suffering would be brought to the people within a few weeks, while, on the contrary, our country could be cut off from the rest of the world and there would be food for the people. The same thought was injected into this discussion by a question addressed to the gentleman from Massachusetts while he was on the floor making the opening statement on this bill. Some of us can not fully subscribe to this line of thought. Followed to its final analysis it amounts to substantially saying that our world trade is not a necessary factor in our economic life, and in case it became necessary for the purpose of avoiding conflict with other nations it would be better to yield our rightful place on the sea and among the commerce of the world than to go to the expense of maintaining a Navy on a parity with the other large navies of the world. If we concede the right of any other nation to maintain a navy far superior to our own in the light of our own needs, we acknowledge a willingness to assume a place of inferiority in naval power. If this is our attitude, we were not justified in standing out for a parity on the 5–5–3 basis at Washington in 1921, nor were we justified in asking for the same ratio at Geneva.

Our commerce is equal to and greater than the commerce of any other nation and is deserving of as high a degree of protection as that of any other nation or country in the world. It will be remembered that we were closed to the sea in 1914. We were not then in war, nor were we in war for nearly three years thereafter. At that time we had on the seas approximately $16,000,000,000 worth of American goods. Production was going on throughout our land. All at once our commerce ceased to move. What happened? The Southern States of our Union were the first to suffer. There was found baled and piled up in the towns of the South more than $500,000,000 worth of cotton which the producers were anxious to turn into cash with which to pay the costs of production and other pressing obligations, but the market was closed because American commerce, that of a neutral nation, had been driven from the seas.

Suppose the seas were closed to our commerce to-morrow by reason of a conflict between two or more other nations over which we had no control or with which we had no direct concern. We would be caught with over $20,000,000,000 worth of American goods on the seas bound for all ports of the world. Is it not inevitable that there would be suffering as a result of this condition? It is a mistaken idea to say we are sufficient unto ourselves in the matter of food supplies as well as in other commodities. In 1926 we purchased and imported into the United States $266,000,000 more in food supplies than we exported. It has already been pointed out by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] how we are absolutely dependent on foreign markets for practically all the manganese and rubber used in this country. Admiral Hughes testified before our committee that if we were deprived of importing manganese for a short time our iron and steel industries would disappear. We could build no railroads, bridges, or other improvements employing these products. He also said that our large automobile industry in this country is wholly dependent on the foreign supply for rubber.

As proud as we are of our great resources, both developed and undeveloped, we think it is altogether proper that we occasionally take stock and ascertain whether we are, after all, a really self-contained nation. I, for one, believe that it is just as important that we keep our lanes of commerce open to all the ports of the world as it is for Great Britain or any other country to keep her trade lanes open. Freedom of the seas is a tradition with America and has been since the birth of our Nation, and, in so far as I am concerned, and in so far as my vote is concerned as a Member of this body, until some better plan can be agreed upon through the means of disarmament or otherwise, our Navy will continue her rightful place on the seas with a standard of equipment and efficiency for which this country will have to make no apology. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven and one-half minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT]. My friend on the other side has given him five minutes. That will close me out for the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 12½ minutes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be not interrupted until I have concluded my remarks.

Gentlemen, I rise to support this bill. I approach the matter under consideration from the standpoint of one who believes that this country should lend itself in every way, by every means at its disposal, and exert its influence to secure a reduction of naval armaments. I believe we should do everything we can to reach an agreement with the other great powers of the world to relieve the people of our country and the people of other countries of the burden of naval armaments. But until that day arrives, and until we can reach such an agreement, I believe that we should have a Navy as large as the navy of any other country in the world.

I was glad to hear the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] say that he believed in an adequate Navy. Gentlemen, that is the whole question before us. What is an adequate Navy for the United States under the present situation and in the absence of such an international agreement?

This bill involves our highest responsibility under the Constitution, namely, the assurance of the national defense. Others may recommend, but the ultimate responsibility is ours. It has aroused much discussion and caused much agitation both at home and abroad. Well-meaning people have sought to influence our action and divert us from our responsibility, but that responsibility is such that it can not be shared with others. It is inspiring to contemplate that our Committee on Naval Affairs have so splendidly arisen to their responsibility and declined to be diverted from their duty by pressure the other way from well-meaning but misguided sources. The action of that committee representing all sections of the country, the interior as well as the seaboard, reflecting various shades of public opinion, should foreshadow the action of this House, of which they are so worthy a part. In matters involving the national security we are not justified in relying merely on fortunate chance and providing for the national security upon the assumption that we shall never, never be called upon again to resort to force either to repel aggression or to protect our just rights or interests.

I feel quite sure, in fact it has been indicated in this debate, where the opposition to this bill has been really perfunctory, that the action of the House will ratify, and ratify in a most impressive manner, the recommendations of our Committee on Naval Affairs.

The charge at home here is that this measure is unnecessary; that it involves competitive naval building, the very thing which we should seek to avoid. It comes principally from those who would be quite content, I am sure, that we should indulge in no naval building at this time or at any time, who feel that because no war clouds darken the sky that we may well let the Navy remain as it is, and they urge us to pass no such bill as this.

And as to the criticism from abroad, may I recall to your minds the recent words of our President—> where there is no treaty limitation, the size of the Navy which America is to have will be solely for America to determine.

And the fact that there is no treaty limitation, notwithstanding our efforts to secure one, is precisely the reason why it is incumbent on us now to regulate and provide for the size of our Navy in relation to our own security and possible needs.

But they say this program of naval construction will involve us in competition in naval building with England. Not at all. As the committee so clearly shows, even with the ships here provided for, we shall still be far behind Great Britain in cruiser strength, and certainly it is furthest from our thought or intention at this time, or at any time, I hope, to engage in a course in anything that will involve us in difficulty or misunderstanding with the British Empire. God grant the day never comes again when there will be serious controversy between the United States and the mother country of so many of us of English origin. We have tried to agree with her on the number of cruisers and other craft apart from battleships that each of us shall have and failed. What then? Are we to refrain entirely from building? Are we to engage in merely sporadic or desultory building, leaving construction to the chance whim of each session of Congress? Or are we to adopt some program or standard of strength and provide for a well-rounded Navy adapted to our possible needs, with the various elements bearing some logical and definite relation to each other?

Clearly prudence and our duty as representatives of the American people require the latter. Cruisers, aircraft carriers, and submarines are as vitally necessary as battleships, yet shall we provide no adequate cruisers for our Battle Fleet, or so few as to leave the fleet impotent in that vital element? Imagine either of the grand fleets having entered the battle of Jutland, without cruisers and cruiser screens. Shall we also make no provision to replace our obsolete cruisers? No provision for the protection of our trade routes, for the full protection of the Panama Canal, or our island possessions. If we are to maintain our battleships at the 5–5–3 ratio, are we to give no concern as to the necessary auxiliaries for those battleships? These are questions that must be answered. At the time of the Washington conference we had a program adopted way back in 1916, the completion of which would have given us naval superiority or supremacy. That we cheerfully renounced and destroyed 30 battleships, 15 of which were afloat and 15 approaching completion, with a total displacement of at least 800,000 tons, on which we had spent at least $300,000,000. Then at the conference we offered to conform our cruiser strength and the other elements to the capital-ship ratio to be agreed upon. But that was refused by the other conferees, and all were left free to develop and increase those other elements as they chose or saw fit, and the others have built far more than we have, until, as Admiral Hilary Jones puts it, "We are too far behind the procession." The 5–5–3 ratio for battleships was solemnly agreed upon; the treaty ratified by our Senate. Is it to be ignored? Will anyone say that it is not the duty of those responsible for the public welfare to provide for our adherence to that ratio in capital ships? And, if that be so, can we neglect the other necessary components?

The Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, brought in a much more extensive program, looking much further into the future. It was tenable and sustainable in that it would have tended to bring us up to the 5–5–3 ratio in the auxiliary components. But the committee brings in this much more moderate program carrying us only to 1934. To-day the ratio in cruisers of the 5-5-3 countries is Great Britain, 5; Japan, 2.6; the United States, 1.9. If this program is authorized and appropriated for, and the ships completed, we shall still be in a position of inferiority, with Great Britain with 63 cruisers with 386,636 tonnage and a ratio of 5 both in numbers and tonnage, with the United States with but 33 cruisers of 296,000 tonnage with a ratio of 2.6 in numbers and 3.8 in tonnage, with Japan with 33 cruisers of 206,415 tonnage with ratio of 2.6 in numbers and 2.7 in tonnage. And this on the assumption that the other countries indulge in no further building in the meanwhile.

Gentlemen, the question presented to us here and now is, Shall we reduce our present inferiority in naval strength or shall we permit it to increase and our ratio of naval strength to go down and down until we are less than third rate among the naval powers? For one I am not satisfied to lend myself, by failure to support this bill, to any such contingency, and I am confident that the overwhelming majority of our countrymen and countrywomen, too, are of the same mind and that the taxpayers will cheerfully contemplate the moderate burden of only about $45,000,000 a year involved in view of the vastly important object in view.

Of course, the whole weight of this country should always be exerted to preserve harmony among the nations. Of course, no one need have any fear that we ourselves shall give just cause for offense to any other nation. We must, and we certainly shall, lend ourselves in every way to the perpetuation of peace in the world. Heaven knows we in common with others have recently had the bitter experience of war, and now know how liable we are to be drawn into the maelstrom in case of another world conflict. But in the light of history, in the light of our recent experience, would it not be folly, worse than folly, for us to regulate our affairs upon the assumption of the existence of a condition in the world which does not exist? Certainly we should strive to be leaders and moulders of that world spirit and sentiment without which there can never be any assurance of lasting peace. But, until conditions in this world change very much, no serious statesman will feel that this country can afford to neglect considerations affecting the security of his own country. And the standard of the measures for our security must be not probable conflict, but possible conflict. In conclusion, may I say, Mr. Chairman, that I for one am in favor of taking no chances, but of making the most complete provision for our national security on the seaside until and unless we can arrive at some definite agreement for further reduction which at the moment unfortunately seems impracticable. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time in favor of the bill has now expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a unanimous-consent request. Because of my remarks on yesterday, directed toward the National Council for the Prevention of War and really against Mr. Frederick J. Libby, its president or operating chief, who is in the gallery again to-day, I have been requested to insert at this place in the RECORD the action of the Board of Education in the District of Columbia on January 21, 1925, in which, by unanimous agreement, they refused Mr. Libby permission to address the school children at any time. This request comes from the gentleman in the gallery through the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS]. In fairness I think it ought to go in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what has that to do with approving or disapproving the merits of this bill?

Mr. BRITTEN. Nothing, except that this organization has sent out, I suppose, tons of literature in opposition not only to this bill, but to everything else connected with national preparedness. On yesterday I called the attention of the House to this Board of Education report, and I think in fairness to the gentleman this complete report of the board of the District of Columbia ought to go in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to say that the Boston Daughters of the American Revolution has had quite a revolt against the action of the lady who appeared here in behalf of this bill, and inasmuch as their protest has been given wide publicity, I think permission ought to be given for their statement to go in at the same time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has a newspaper clipping in his hand. It is different from the official action of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I object to both of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has not the floor. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 16 minutes.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a half minute?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For a half minute; yes. I will yield to the gentleman for the purpose of making a unanimous-consent request, but it must not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 16 minutes.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, in a spirit of fairness and after investigating the situation, I ask unanimous consent that this official report——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. SPEAKS. I am preferring a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For the purpose of preferring a unanimous-consent request, but not to be taken out of my time.

Mr. SPEAKS. My request is simply that the complete report of the District of Columbia Board of Education, from which a quotation was made yesterday, be permitted to go into the RECORD.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I am going to object to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois if you play fair with all parties.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I shall object to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma, because that is an aspersion upon a very patriotic organization.

Mr. SPEAKS. What I am asking is that the official report of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, over the signature of the secretary, be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, was my request granted?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been heard.

Mr. SPEAKS. Where did it come from? I did not so understand it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Unless you allow all of these articles to go in, I shall have to object. If they will permit this to go in, I will have no objection to the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that these unanimous-consent requests should be made in the House and not in the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 16 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] made some reference to this matter, and to-day the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS] asked to put the complete letter and report in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent at this point, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD by putting in the RECORD the complete report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read a document with respect to the Board of Education of the District of Columbia:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE LIBBY CASE

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1925.

To the Members of the Board of Education, Washington, D. C.:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Your committee appointed in accordance with the action of the Board of Education at its meeting of December 3, 1924, with instructions to investigate the views and affiliations of Mr. Frederick J. Libby in order that the board might determine whether Mr. Libby should be permitted to speak in the schools has the honor to submit its report.

On the evening of December 18, 1924, your committee conducted a hearing at the Franklin School, at which time a large number of friends and opponents of Mr. Libby were present and asked the privilege of being heard. Some of the speakers appeared before the committee to present their individual views. Others spoke as representatives of organizations. It was evident that there was considerable opposition from citizens and bodies of citizens to Mr. Libby's request for permission to speak in the schools. All persons who participated at the hearing were requested to submit briefs to the committee setting forth in writing their reasons for or against Mr. Libby being granted the privilege to speak in the schools. The request was freely complied with and a great quantity of printed circulars, typed memoranda, and briefs was submitted. Your committee has reviewed the evidence presented at the hearing and, after giving consideration to the statements submitted for the information of the committee, desires to present to the Board of Education the following conclusions and recommendations:

(1) The discussion of the issues underlying the questions before the committee became more or less acrimonious as the opposing views were presented by the contending parties. It became evident as the hearing progressed that extreme views were being expressed on both sides. Your committee was impressed with the fact that important national and international political issues were being debated; that far-reaching principles of political economy involving the friendly relations of world powers were under consideration; perplexing questions of such magnitude and complexity that even statesmen of international repute were in doubt as to their best solution. The committee is of the opinion that the discussion of such important political issues in assemblies of high-school pupils, made up mainly of boys and girls only 14 or 15 years of age, must undoubtedly be confusing to young minds. When they acquire more mature judgment our young people have a better basis in thinking for themselves and thus to arrive at opinions on vital public questions. Political science, however, is a subject for the university more than for the high school. The average boy or girl of high-school age has difficulty in exercising sound judgment on the merits of a discussion that presents an extreme view on the national defense act, the inefficacy of national preparedness, or a partisan view of the League of Nations.

(2) Not only should it be deemed unwise to permit the expounding of big national political issues from a partisan point of view in our high-school assemblies, but it would be contrary to the rules and practice of the public schools of the District of Columbia to allow such discussion from a religious point of view. This is in conflict with certain principles underlying the operation of our American public schools. Although the rules of the Board of Education require the reading of the Bible in the opening exercises daily, teachers and others are not permitted to comment on or to discuss the Scriptures and their meanings. In the hearing Mr. Libby stated that his views in regard to war and national preparedness are based upon his religious convictions.

3. The American people as a Nation expect that patriotism and love of country shall be taught in the public schools of the land. Much of the inspiration giving rise to feelings of patriotism in our boys and girls grow out of the achievements of our American ancestors. Our history is rich in the noble deeds of illustrious Americans, deeds that stand for achievements by explorers, inventors, pioneers, statesmen, soldiers, captains of industry, poets, scholars, and men of science. Our school histories recite the deeds of these renowned Americans so that we are not surprised that in the hearts of our boys and girls they stand out as national heroes and rightly so. Every American boy and girl should be permitted to cherish the memory of these heroes. Whatever may be the horrors of war, and however we may be opinioned in regard to war or the means for its prevention, we can not permit the heroic sacrifice of the men who gave their lives for their country to be minimized. In practically every household the memory of one or more loved ones who paid the supreme price is held sacred. Your committee is convinced that the patriotic sentiments of the average American boy or girl should not be confused by any teaching that the ancestors may not have been prompted by the highest motives in the prosecution of war or that the war in which they fought was a great national blunder. We are convinced that the American people by and large have "highly resolved that these dead shall not have died in vain."

For the several reasons set forth in this report your committee recommends that the discussion of far-reaching, controversial political issues in our high-school assemblies should not be permitted by any person or persons whose presentation of such questions is from the point of view of an extreme partisan. Nor should persons be permitted to speak in our schools to whom there is opposition to an unusual degree by large numbers of citizens and organizations of citizens. Your committee holds that Mr. Frederick J. Libby entertains extreme views on the public questions that he has discussed in regard to war and preparedness, and therefore, recommends that his request to speak in the schools be denied.

LILLIAN Y. HERRON,
F. I. A. BENNETT,
Committee, Board of Education.

A true copy.

HARRY O. HINE,
Secretary Board of Education, District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] without doubt has made the best argument in favor of the bill. The gentleman made a most forceful argument for his side of the question.

Yesterday I endeavored to make what I will call a spiritual appeal, an appeal based upon what I considered would be the best policy for this Government to follow. All the Navy experts, I am sure, will agree that not only the present naval power of a nation must be taken into consideration, but its potential power, and as to potential power, resources, finances, geographical situation, and home industries we are so far ahead that I repeat I see no danger of this country's safety being impaired in the next generation.

I will not attempt to continue on the spiritual side of the opposition. Let me to-day set forth the material side of this question. I want to make clear for the RECORD that the country should understand that besides the additional cruisers and the plane carrier in the present bill calling for an appropriation of $274,000,000, we have now authorized and appropriated for a program for which we carry in the naval appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, which will be before us in a few days, over $72,000,000, and which carried to its conclusion will cost the people of this country $201,561,450, in accordance with the figures presented by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] to the House this morning.

And let me say, in referring to the figures of the gentleman from Idaho, there is not a better-informed man on the Navy in this House or in this country than the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]. [Applause.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER and Mr. VINSON of Georgia rose.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman permit me to add another figure which I have just taken from the figures the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] gave us? In addition to the figure of $201,000,000 which the gentleman speaks of, there is the maintenance program of $2,255,000,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is in a certain period of time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is a slight discrepancy of $40,000,000 between the figures I cited and the figures of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will help the gentleman to correct his figures if he will permit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The existing program now in the 1929 appropriation bill will call for an expenditure of $72,760,000. Assuming this bill becomes a law and assuming the ships must be built within the time prescribed, it is necessary for the program this year to carry at least $5,000,000 to authorize the commencement of five ships. This will mean, therefore, this year an expenditure for new building, including what is already upon the books, of $77,760,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Five million dollars more. That is the way it goes—continually piling up.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In 1930 this program and the one already adopted will cost $100,620,000. In 1931 this program and the one already upon the books will cost $141,000,000. In 1932 it begins to decrease because the program upon the books has been finished, and the cost will be $75,000,000, and in 1933 the cost will be $47,000,000, and in 1934 it will cost $26,000,000. By 1934 we will have finished the 15 ships, the airplane carrier, and everything that we have on the books to-day, including the five-year aviation program and including the two dirigibles, which will be at the rate of $73,000,000 a year for the next six years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly. I make it $475,561.450, and the gentleman is slightly below that, but what is a difference of a million or two million dollars in the consideration of a program of this kind?

Besides this I want to emphasize the point made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] that to operate each one of these additional cruisers will cost us about $1,247,500 a year, and to operate an airplane carrier will cost us $1,400,000 a year. So as soon as the ships are completed the operating and maintenance cost of the Navy will increase permanently several million dollars a year.

And let me add right here that the figures stated by the gentleman from Georgia do not include the building of the 12 destroyer leaders authorized by the act of 1916. That will be over a hundred million dollars.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course not, because the Navy Department has not asked for them to be built.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But they will before we are out of here very long, and also for the three additional submarines.

Now, as to the relative strength of our Navy. May I point out that comparisons of all classes of ships have not been made? I want to show here, for instance, that on submarines of the first line we have 50, with a tonnage of 43,822 tons, to England's 29, with a tonnage of 24,150, and Japan's 45, with a tonnage of 36,497.

As to submarines of the second line, for coast defense, we have 65, with a tonnage of 31,282; England has 23, with a tonnage of 9,928; and Japan has 10, with a tonnage of 3,259.

Surely these figures, which are official and which I obtained from the Navy Department, indicate that our Navy is well ahead in these classes of ships.

It has been said by the experts that the destroyers are what we need to protect the merchant marine, which, by the way, we have not got. When we come to the destroyers, we have 262, with a tonnage of 312,479. England has 164, with a tonnage of 187,150. Japan has 83, with a tonnage of 193,470.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. What is the gentleman quoting from?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. From the Navy Department. We also have 25 destroyers of the second line, assigned to the Coast Guard.

I want to emphasize these figures for the purpose of showing that we are not as weak as some gentlemen desire in emphasizing their arguments as to the needs of the Navy.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield? I have been trying to get time, and I wish the gentleman would allow me to make a short statement.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I have been listening all afternoon to gentlemen of Congress defending the right of the United States even to create any Navy at all. I do not see them standing up here as a patriotic proposition and saying that we should have a navy as large as England. They say we should not have the temerity to create cruisers and battleships and aircraft carriers, because England might not like it.

I do not like that kind of talk coming from Members of Congress of the United States, especially on the eve of St. Patrick's Day. [Laughter and applause.] St. Patrick's Day brings back memories of fighting Jack Barry, the father of the American Navy, with Irish blood in his veins, who never kowtowed to England and never asked England's permission about building ships, but went out and fought the British Navy to save this country. This same Jack Barry, who, when Lord Howe offered him $300,000 in gold and the command of the best frigate in the English Navy, replied, "Not for the value of the English Navy and the command of it all could I be seduced from the cause of my country."

I am sick and tired of these pacifists throughout the United States who are saying that this bill is aimed primarily at the mother country. The only mother country I recognize is the United States of America. [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the House, I stood in France in the front-line trenches, and I saw my buddies die because the United States was not prepared in 1917 and 1918; they did not have an opportunity to teach these boys how to handle the rifle. I saw them die, and realizing our unpreparedness I do not want to see the same thing happen because the Navy is unprepared. I would like to speak at length on this bill, but have not had the opportunity, so I would like my colleagues to know that I will vote for this bill, but would much rather vote for the program set out by President Coolidge, which would give us an adequate Navy, which this bill does not give us. I thank the gentleman from New York for his courtesy. He has always been my friend; I have always admired his courage and ability, and I thank him again. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, that is a very powerful interruption to make in a speech when I am opposing the bill. [Laughter.] But I love my friend CONNERY and am always glad to hear him. But let me say to my colleague that I, too, saw these boys die; but I also saw the boys of Germany, who had the most perfect training and were part of the greatest military machine, beaten by those boys who, he says, had no training at all. [Laughter and applause.] You can not get away from that.

No; I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts. I still believe, gentlemen—of course, the bill will pass—I still believe we have a great opportunity at this time. As well off as we are domestically and financially and in every other way, we have the opportunity to show the world that we have learned a great lesson from the World War. We can inspire the people of all nations and make the hope for peace something real.

It is going to be extremely difficult for other nations to understand why at this time we are adopting this naval program. I will concede that it is not a competitive program, but I say it is "keeping up with the Jones's" policy.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is not this the largest program we have ever offered in a time of peace?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With what we have already authorized and appropriated for, it is one of the largest naval bills; yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And larger than that of any other nation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; I do not see the necessity of it at this time.

Now, you gentlemen of the Mississippi Valley, we have a greater war on our hands—the war against the elements. We have to regulate the whole Mississippi Valley. That is a war for humanity. I will vote for three or four hundred million dollars for a humane purpose of that kind. [Applause.]

Now, let me say to you from the farming districts that when the farmer asks for relief you will have to tell him that you can not give it because we are building a navy to protect the ships which we have not got—that carry the wheat we do not export. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I announced at the outset of this debate that I intended to support the President's program, and it is a pity that I have to obtain time from the gentleman who is opposing the naval program generally. Many times I have been humiliated in the course of this debate. I hardly wanted to speak at all at this time, when this American Congress is about to haul down the American flag on the high seas for the cheapest kind of politics I have seen since I have been in Congress. The logic has been a little diverting at times. The whole debate on both sides should be summed up in a jingle:

There ain't going to be no war,
There ain't going to be no war,
But how in hell can the people tell
There ain't going to be no war?

The Republican convention at Cleveland promised this country a Navy living up to the 5–5–3 ratio. They promised this country a regular party government and they promised this country a cooperation between the President and the Congress. They promised this country that they would live up to their constitutional obligations, and the Constitution calls upon us to provide for the national defense. The country is committed to a 5–5–3 ratio and the Republican Party is committed to it, and yet this committee has come in with a bill, and they confess that it does not live up to the 5–5–3 ratio. They come in with a bill that is a compromise between those who want no Navy and those who want to go to the country and say, "We are trying to do something about the American Navy." I have been disgusted during this debate to hear men get on this floor and quote from British experts, British admirals, and British statesmen. I was going to use some quotations from Commodore Barry, but I would be ashamed to quote from Barry on the day before St. Patrick's Day when we are doing this disgraceful thing to the American Navy that is proposed in this bill. Every man on this committee knows that this thing that they are presenting here does not provide us with an adequate Navy. And the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] in an honest fashion exposed them this morning. They said that the reason they did not go down the line with the President is because there is already existing authority in law for destroyer leaders and for submarines. I asked the gentleman from Idaho on the floor this morning if the Appropriations Committee intended to appropriate this year for submarines and destroyer leaders, and his honest answer was "no." So from the beginning that statement, in which they predicated their desertion of the President on existing authority, has been without foundation in fact, and it is the cheapest kind of political bunk.

We are doing more to-day than providing for a Navy. Great Britain knows what we are doing to-day. Great Britain knows that this policy of a naval parity means the end of Great Britain as the economic leader of the world. Great Britain is not being fooled about this situation. I shall quote some British experts too, if it will be of any consolation to the committee. First, I quote from Hector Bywater, who says that this is a fine bill and that the President's bill was all wrong. Then, Admiral Bridgeman said yesterday in Parliament that this naval bill is not offensive to Great Britain. Of course it is not! The only naval bill that could possibly hurt her feelings is the bill that would give us parity on the high seas. In view of our economic leadership we are entitled to supremacy on the high seas, and when we create a parity with Great Britain we make concessions to her, and however you look at it, you gentlemen on the Republican side of the House are false to your Constitution, are false to your President, and are false to your Republican Party platform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired except that in the control of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC], who is recognized for 38 minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I may not use all of the time that remains. I am very much pleased that it is my privilege to close the debate of what has been a most interesting discussion. I regret exceedingly, as I said before, to differ in opinion with many Members of the House and of the committee. However, I think every person who has followed my course will admit that my difference of opinion has been an honest one. Since I have been a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I have conscientiously tried to do that which, I think, is best for our Nation, and in presenting my side of this question I hope to give you some figures to show that the statements that I make are warranted. I look at every public question in this manner. If I am right in my viewpoint, eventually I shall win, and if I am wrong, then, I deserve to lose. I took that position about 10 years ago on the subject of aircraft. At that time I was practically alone on the committee, and notwithstanding the fact that at different times it was somewhat humiliating to be defeated by votes of those with whom I was associated, yet I persevered and continued my activity as best I knew how, and I am glad to say that 90 per cent of the American people to-day realize that aircraft is the most important factor when it comes to dealing with the subject of national defense. So I say that while the membership of my committee does not agree with me with respect to the necessity for submarines, yet if the other nations of the world continue to build this kind of ship in large numbers, and there should come to us an unfortunate conflict, this country would be in an embarrassing situation because we would be unprepared to that extent, and our commerce will have to pay the penalty.

I am presenting a plan as a substitute for that of the majority of the committee which would cause 15 of the larger types of submarines having the latest safety devices to be built in place of the cruisers. Feeling and believing that the record of the last war and the record that relates to the destruction of merchant tonnage fully support my position, I make the statement that the most disastrous type of ship ever invented in peace or in war time is the submarine.

There are those here who would like to see some submarines added to this bill, and they will vote for the amendment that I intend to offer. I would be much pleased, notwithstanding the fact that I wish it were possible for the nations of the world to abandon this type of destructive ship, to see this country be able to cope with any kind of a situation that might arise.

Now, much has been said concerning the subject of cruisers. Some of the members of the committee have made statements in their speeches which I consider rather unfortunate, for the reason that if these statements are printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the same should be sent to some of the foreign nations they are bound to come to this conclusion, that America, the United States, is trying to build up a Navy having in mind making preparation for war against some particular country.

Now, I would rather take the position that the five major nations of the world are sick of war. I would rather take the position that the amount of their public indebtedness at this time is so enormous as to practically stagger the imagination of the ordinary mind. What is the public debt of the five major nations at the present time?

A little more than $75,000,000,000; $75,000,000,000! And what is the population of the world at the present time? A little more than 1,800,000,000. In other words, the five major nations of the world owe more than $40 for every man, woman, and child all over the world. And why has this great debt been created? To pay the enormous losses occasioned by war.

So there is a justification for those of us who would like to economize and expend our money for the development of those enterprises which are closer to our homes. We want to expend our money for the improvement of economic, agricultural, and other conditions that need so much improvement at the present time, particularly agricultural and flood relief. So I have joined with those who have spoken on this floor in saying that we should first take care of the conditions that vitally affect our own people.

Everyone who has ever testified before the great Military Committees of Congress has said—and I think it can be said without fear of contradiction—that as long as we maintain in this country an adequate aircraft defense or force no nation on earth can encroach upon our shores.

So if that is true, why is it not safe to first take care of those things that are urgent, such as the great Mississippi flood, the Mississippi disaster, and other economic and industrial conditions that exist in the land?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I am one of those in the House who have to differ from the gentleman from Oklahoma in regard to this matter. But does not the gentleman think the United States ought to be on a parity with the other nations with which we have this agreement?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I thank the gentleman for the interruption. That brings me to a statement that I desire to make at this point; a statement which will probably be interesting, or should be interesting, to the Members of the House. Nearly all of the comparisons that have been made with respect to this legislation referred to England and the number of cruisers that England has in comparison with those of the United States. Now, I want to tell you something, and I hope you will take out your pencils and figure a little with me, and if I make a wrong statement you will correct me. England has 49 cruisers, with a tonnage of 246,776. Of this number, 42 have a tonnage of less than 5,200, with a maximum speed of 29 knots; a total tonnage of 186,410, leaving a balance of only 7 cruisers, with an aggregate tonnage of 60,366 tons.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Where is the gentleman getting those figures?

Mr. McCLINTIC. From the Navy League, the organization that always asks for an adequate Navy. Referring to the seven cruisers, there is the Vindictive, with a tonnage of 9,996; the Hawkins, with a tonnage of 9,820; the Frobisher, with a tonnage of 9,860; the Eppingham, with a tonnage of 9,770; the Emerald and the Enterprise, each with a tonnage of 7,100; and the Adventurer, with a tonnage of 6,740; making a total of seven cruisers, and all of them but two having a speed of less than 33 knots per hour.

On the other hand, the United States has 10 of the Omaha type, cruisers of 6,600 tons, with a speed of 34 knots, as against an average of 29 knots to those belonging to England, and twelve 6-inch guns in comparison with seven 6-inch guns on the English cruisers. You are bound to admit this fact, that if the United States has cruisers which have on them twice as many guns of the same caliber that they exceed in efficiency the ships which belong to England, and if the United States has 10 cruisers that have a speed of 34 knots as against 7 cruisers that have a speed of less than 29 knots, and with double the efficiency when you consider the number of guns, then we must admit that we excel England on that basis.

It is true England has laid down 14 cruisers, but I have here a statement, which I will read into the RECORD, from an English official who ranks sufficiently high that no one can impugn his motives or deny the authenticity of his statement, and he is Mr. Churchill. He says:

> The decision of the Government to postpone the laying down of the three cruisers included in the program for this year is an earnest, and a most striking one, that they regard the work of the Geneva conference as by no means abandoned. We congratulate and thank them. Nothing is more valuable just now than a plain sign flashed through a night of misunderstanding that Great Britain wants peace and means to have it. The larger cruiser is one of the two that are dropped. The Government have given just such a proof as we desired to the United States that we do not intend to invite her to a competition in cruisers.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I suggest to the gentleman that he disclose to the House the type of cruisers that England has laid down since 1924.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I want to say that according to that statement England has abandoned the program of building any more until the United States acts. The United States is now confronted with this situation: We have a bill here which authorizes the construction of 15 cruisers, which means this is a competitive proposition. You can not call it anything else, and if we continue the construction of 15 cruisers, of course England will have to go ahead and lay down and complete the 14 that she has on her program.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I asked the gentleman to inform the committee as to the type of cruisers already laid down by Great Britain since 1924. The gentleman did not answer that or give the committee the information.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I have just made the statement that England has practically abandoned that particular program.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am speaking of ships already laid down since 1924.

Mr. McCLINTIC. And that is what I have been talking about.

Mr. WOODRUFF. They have not been abandoned.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I say they have, or Mr. Churchill has deliberately falsified.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Wait a minute.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not care to yield further.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I do not blame the gentleman. If I were in the gentleman's place, I would not yield either.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I have quoted from the records of the Navy League.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And I am speaking from the same record, which I hold in my hand.

Mr. McCLINTIC. You had an opportunity to talk about this, and I hope I may proceed without being interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I want to state to this House that when you talk about a parity on cruisers you ought to give all the facts and not one or two facts. Every single, solitary destroyer we have in our Navy to-day has an excess of speed over 42 of the 49 cruisers belonging to England. In other words, all of our destroyers can exceed them in speed, and can move away from them or move up on them, so long as they have these little tiny ships called cruisers—I have classed them as cruisers because they are in what I term the destroyer class. So much for the cruisers.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. My impression is that there is some confusion about the remarks you read as made by Lord Churchill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will put them in the RECORD, and that will be sufficient.

Mr. BRITTEN. I know, but all the ships the gentleman has referred to as not being laid down and as having been abandoned are now under construction. They are not being abandoned, and I want the gentleman to be set right.

Mr. McCLINTIC. For the benefit of the House and the gallery, I will say I will put the statement in the RECORD. I will put in the names of these little, tiny ships that this Nation uses in comparison, calling them cruisers, because they average less than 5,000 tons. When you make a comparison with the seven cruisers that England has remaining, which are a part of these cruisers built, every one of them is far less superior when a comparison is made of their strength from the standpoint of guns and speed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman please yield there?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I would rather not yield any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am trying to help the gentleman and not trying at all to confuse him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in what is termed the majority report. The majority report bears the name of one of the highest class members of our committee, Mr. ANDREW, of Boston, Mass. Mr. ANDREW has let it be known to this House on different occasions that he wanted the indebtedness of France reduced, and there are many of the citizens of the Nation who feel that he would like to remit all of the debt that France owes this country. I was interested in the statement made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Georgia, in which he called attention to the number of ships that have been built by France, by Italy, and by the other nations with whom we had proposed settlement. In other words, it showed that notwithstanding the fact that we had settled with Italy, that Italy was using what might be termed this reduction or this saving on her war debt, for the purpose of building competitive armament.

Italy's debt, including interest, was reduced approximately two-thirds, and it is proposed to reduce the debt of France one-half. Thus it can be seen no real good can be accomplished by cancelling the debts of any nation, when it will allow the money saved to be used in war preparations.

I take the position France ought to pay her debts like any other nation, and I can not understand why the Member who wrote the report for this committee should want to saddle on the people of the United States an enormous building program and then turn right around and give France a debt that amounts to over $4,000,000,000. It seems to me this is inconsistent. I take the position that every nation in the world ought to pay its debts, and I do not think any situation could ever arise where this country would be warranted in remitting the honest obligations due it. So I am going to suggest to my friend from Massachusetts if he will read the history that relates to France and her treatment of the United States when Talleyrand acted in the position which corresponds with our Secretary of State, when Chief Justice John Marshall was over there trying to get that nation to deal fairly with the United States, and then go on and read about the administration of "Old Hickory" Andrew Jackson in dealing with France, he will get some information that will show that this country has dealt fairly with France or has dealt more fairly with that country than she has dealt with us. So I was somewhat amazed to find this gentleman the author of the report on the bill in view of this situation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, going back to the legislation, this morning in the papers there is a statement by the Associated Press which reads as follows:

LONDON, March 15.—The correspondent is able to state definitely that the British Cabinet has secretly considered Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg's proposal for outlawing war and decided it must accept. The Government now is busy seeking a formula which will permit frank, unreserved acceptance without infringing on existing liabilities such as the League of Nations. The Dominions, especially Canada, are also being consulted.

In addition to this, the morning papers carry another statement which is headed:

Arbitration treaty offered to Japan.

I am only calling the attention of the committee to this kind of statement published to-day to show that there is no war cloud on the horizon; that there is not a single reason that could be based upon fear for this Nation to engage in a building policy that will immediately excite the animosity of some of the major nations.

I take the position that the United States ought to be prepared to face any kind of situation. I say to you that I would be the last one to ever oppose a program that was needed to defend our country; but when one takes into consideration the results of the World War and compares them with the conditions that exist to-day, he is bound to admit that it was the newer and modern appliances that finally brought victory to the Allies.

What about the Battle of Jutland? Did England win it? No. Germany would have been given credit for winning the Battle of Jutland had it not been for other situations and conditions existing at that time.

In the Battle of Jutland, if I understand it correctly, there were no airplanes that carried big bombs. Such bombs had not been invented up to that period of time. Since that date a new era has developed in this respect, and to-day we are able to load in aircraft enormous bombs and fly out a distance of 200 miles and with one bomb sink or destroy the usefulness of any kind of craft afloat.

We have 18 battleships from which could be launched aircraft suitable to carry these bombs, and these 18 battleships represent an investment of $720,000,000. In view of this situation how can anyone say it is wrong for us to spend about $1,000,000 in order to make it possible to carry this larger type of bombing plane, thereby enabling our battleships to be their own aircraft carriers, and have a fighting range of approximately 200 miles?

This is the kind of preparedness we want this Nation to have. This is the kind of amendment I shall offer to this bill. I want this Nation to have the best offense and defense possible, but I do not want to build a lot of cruisers just for the purpose of allowing a large number of officers, who are now stationed in this city or in other ports, to have a nice, comfortable berth in peace times.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have been seeking during this debate to get information such as the gentleman is now giving us, and I gather from what the gentleman has stated that it is his judgment the United States is superior to Great Britain in submarines. Does the gentleman also state we are the equal of Great Britain in cruiser strength in battle if we were to go to war with that country to-morrow; and I would like to also ask the gentleman how we stand on battleships with respect to that country?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am very glad the governor has asked that question.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like to summarize the statement about the strength of the two navies. All we hear here reads very much as though we are going to fight Great Britain, and if we are going to fight Great Britain I want to know how we will stand. I have not heard anything but that during this debate, and I want to know how we stand with regard to Great Britain.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I regret the fact that the debate as it will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will leave the impression with the British people that the United States is secretly preparing for war. This is not the fact, and I have read at least a half dozen statements from the highest authorities in Great Britain showing they have a most friendly disposition toward this country.

Now, as to submarines, the United States have a great many submarines of the smaller type that are out of commission. Here I have only made a comparison of the newest type, the V type. I have put in the RECORD the information that France had authorized the construction of 27 of the newest type and has 20 now being built. Italy has authorized 20 of the newest type and has 12 under way. Japan has authorized 24 of the newest type and has 14 under way. England has authorized 24 and has 6 under way. The United States has authorized 6 and has only 3 building.

These are the latest figures given to me in respect to submarines. In addition, I have a statement from the Wall Street Journal that calls attention to the Electric Boat Co. making the statement that it has a contract involving the sum of $50,000,000 for submarines for one of the major nations. In other words, the major nations of the world, or some of them, are asking the shipbuilding concerns of the United States to build for them submarines.

I was informed to-day that this contract for $50,000,000 of submarines was ready for signature and that work is to begin within the near future. I do not want to put a statement into the RECORD as to what country this refers to, but if any gentleman wants to know I will show him this record.

I want to say further that it seems to me that if representatives of this Nation on this floor were confronted with the fact that the four major nations of the world exceed us by a ratio of more than 5 to 1 in the type of ship that sunk 11,000,000 tons of ships during the World War, the type of ship that the highest authority admits is the most disastrous to commerce, surely we would resolve ourselves into a mental condition whereby we would listen to arguments along this line.

I say to you that if war should come upon us to-morrow we would be in a very embarrassing condition if 20 or 30 of these newest types of raiders should go out on the sea and attack our commerce.

I say that if your house is on fire and burning down and you are not willing to put water on it, something is radically wrong with the individual who takes this position. Submarines ought to be banned, and every other death-dealing instrument ought to be banned, poisoned gas ought to be banned, and every other death-dealing instrument ought to be banned. But when other nations use them we have to use them to protect ourselves. That is the situation with respect to the submarines.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when this bill was under consideration by the Naval Affairs Committee many distinguished citizens came before the committee and offered their testimony. One of these distinguished citizens was the chairman of the American Legion, Mr. Stafford. I do not know why he came before the committee; I suppose he was invited to come. The American Legion is one of the highest-grade organizations we have. I would be the last person on earth to say a word against the American Legion; but when an officer, be it the president or anybody else, comes before our committee and makes certain statements which are not carried out, I then wonder what is wrong.

When Mr. Stafford came before the committee with a great deal of pomp and ceremony he announced that as an individual he stood for this policy. His language was:

> I have followed the discussion here, and I am of the opinion that we better strengthen the hands of the committee in every way possible. Therefore I shall send out to the different branches of the American Legion a statement of the facts and they will send back letters or telegrams to Members of Congress, who will have to answer therefor.

I made a careful canvass and can not find a single American Legion organization that sent an indorsement in reply to Mr. Stafford. So I came to the conclusion that he was giving us a lot of hot air or he has been repudiated by his own organization. If the organization was for this bill and he called upon them to indorse it, certainly somebody would have received an indorsement before this time.

Mr. CONNERY. Let me say that from the Legion post in Lynn, Mass., I have received a resolution saying that they favor President Coolidge's proposition.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman read from the RECORD the resolution passed by the Legion at the national convention at Paris indorsing the naval construction program which would keep the United States in the ratio adopted by the Washington conference?

Mr. McCLINTIC. When that convention was held this child had not been born. The authenticity of its parentage is denied. The President has said that it is not his bill, and the Secretary has said that it is the President's bill. The American Legion does not claim to be its parent, and so I have about concluded that the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] is correct, that it is the child of the Committee on Naval Affairs. And I say further that every single Member who has spoken for the bill has either a lake or an ocean in his back yard. [Laughter.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Except me.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Oh, the gentleman has one that is about 400 miles long. So it only goes to show you that these Members here wanted to defeat flood control and agricultural legislation, and I make the prediction now that if this bill becomes a law and the sum of $274,000,000 is appropriated, we will not get a dime for the Mississippi River Valley flood control or for agricultural relief.

Mr. UPDIKE. Surely the gentleman would not say that I have a lake or an ocean in my back yard?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Indiana borders on the Great Lakes.

Mr. UPDIKE. Borders on the Great Lakes, but they are not in my district.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I know that, and I still stand on the statement that I made.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does the gentleman wish to leave the inference that he is against this proposition because he has neither a lake nor an ocean in his back yard?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No; I do not leave any inferences at all. I make the statement that this bill has not any place here at all until we take care of the Mississippi River flood situation and agricultural legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake prior to July 1, 1931, the construction of 15 light cruisers and 1 aircraft carrier according to the following program:

(a) Five light cruisers during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, 1930, and 1931, to cost, including armor and armament, not to exceed $17,000,000 each.

(b) One aircraft carrier prior to June 30, 1930, to cost, including armor and armament, not to exceed $19,000,000: Provided, That if the construction of any vessel herein authorized to be undertaken in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, or 1930, is not undertaken in that fiscal year, such construction may be undertaken in the next succeeding fiscal year.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLINTIC: Strike out, on page 1, after line 4, balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "15 modern submarines of a tonnage not less than 2,000 displacement when submerged, and the construction of an extra deck or platform suitable for the launching of aircraft on each of 18 battleships, according to the following program:

"(a) Five submarines during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, 1930, and 1931, to cost not to exceed $5,000,000 each;

"(b) One aircraft launching platform on one battleship during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929;

"(c) One aircraft launching platform on two battleships during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930;

"(d) One aircraft launching platform on three battleships during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931; and

"(e) One aircraft launching platform on each of four battleships during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, 1933, and 1934, respectively, the cost not to exceed $1,000,000 each: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy in letting contracts for such construction shall give a reasonable preference to bids made by the Government navy yards: And provided further, That no funds shall be expended for any other kind of reconditioning for such ships until plans and specifications shall have been approved covering the proposed aircraft additions."

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is distinctly out of order. It provides for a character of ship which has never yet been built. It provides for modernizing battleships, when there is no indication in the bill under consideration by the House that modernization or repairs are intended. The bill provides for a number of new ships, and I contend that the amendment is out of order. I make the point of order that it is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, all I have to say is that this is a bill to increase the efficiency of the Navy. As I view it, it would not make any difference whether it is a destroyer, a cruiser, or an aircraft carrier, or whatnot. A battleship, as I look upon it, at the present time is an obsolete instrument of war. Battleships in the last war were not utilized. I do not think a Member can show that a single shot was fired by an American battleship in the last war. I do not believe that anybody can say that there were a dozen shots fired by American cruisers. If we are considering a bill to increase the efficiency of the American Navy, it ought to be germane to offer any kind of addition that will make a ship more efficient.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the Chair to understand that these aircraft launching platforms are to be put on existing battleships?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This bill distinctly provides for the construction of new naval vessels. Nowhere in the bill is there provision for the improvement or alteration of existing battleships.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if there is any question in the Chair's mind about this amendment being in order, I should like to be heard upon it for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Without reference to the merits of the amendment, it seems to me it would be a dangerous precedent to hold that the proposal offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is not in order. This is a matter of construction of the Navy. It was held long years ago in a decision which used to be cited every time we had the naval appropriation bill under consideration, before the adoption of the Budget system, that an amendment to an appropriation bill providing for an entirely new vessel was in order, because the Navy was a continuing work. To say that in a bill providing for the establishment or the continuation of navy structure one must be limited to the program laid down by the Committee on Naval Affairs—and that would be what a decision sustaining this point of order would amount to—would be to deprive the House of an opportunity to pass upon the kind of vessels that it thought ought to be constructed in connection with the Navy, and, in my opinion, would be a most dangerous precedent.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And did not the vote on an appeal from the decision of the Chair the other day emphasize the necessity for a greater latitude on the question of germaneness? I refer to the ruling of the Chair when the radio bill was under consideration, and the decision of the committee on appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I think so, but even that is not necessary to be cited for maintaining my position upon the matter immediately before us. I do not think there can be any question about this matter of germaneness in this instance. I believe the Chair on the day referred to by the gentleman from New York quoted from a decision which I had the honor to make once when I was in the chair, when I said that the fundamental purpose of an amendment must be germane to the fundamental purpose of the bill. If that is admitted as good law—and I think it is, and I thought it was at the time—undoubtedly the fundamental purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] is germane to the fundamental purpose of this bill, which is to increase the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will not withdraw his point of order so that the House can have an opportunity to vote upon this amendment? I think we could have passed upon it by this time if the point of order had not been made.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word. This is your Navy just as much as it is mine. As I view it, the efficiency of the Navy can be increased five times by an expenditure of not to exceed $100,000,000. If we adopt this amendment we will have just that much more to take care of our internal conditions, and at the same time we will make our Navy very much more efficient than it is at present.

I have discussed this subject with officers of the Navy. I am convinced that it can be done. I know that there is not a single ship in the Navy to-day that carries a bombing plane other than an aircraft carrier, and by the adoption of this amendment it will not bring about a situation which is prohibited by any treaty that we have made with other nations of the world, for the reason that if you can carry observation and spotting planes on battleships now, we would also have the right to carry bombing planes. So let us strengthen our Navy so that each one of these battleships can maintain a fighting radius covering a distance of 200 miles, instead of depending on guns that shoot approximately 24 miles. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, for nine long hours have we discussed this matter, and I hope the House will vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 129.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLINTIC: In line 5, page 1, strike out the words "15 light cruisers" and insert in lieu thereof "15 modern submarines of a tonnage of not less than 2,000 tons displacement when submerged"; and in line 7 strike out the words "light cruisers" and insert in lieu thereof "modern submarines with a tonnage of not less than 2,000 tons displacement when submerged"; and in line 9 strike out the figures "$17,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$5,000,000."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I trust the committee will permit the gentleman to speak for 15 minutes. In that case I think, after he has used his 15 minutes, we shall be able to have a vote on the bill this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I endeavored to obtain some time to speak in favor of this bill under general debate but I could not do so. I thank the membership of the House for giving me this opportunity to speak.

At the time of our entrance into the World War and during the war the slogan was that it was a war to do away with wars. inhuman methods of warfare, and large Military and Naval Establishments. However, we find that the nations of the world are now expending more than double the amount for Military and Naval Establishments which they expended before the war. Our country has taken the lead in endeavoring to reach agreements with other nations for the reduction of Military and Naval Establishments and has not been very successful. The recent conference at Geneva clearly showed that some other method must be used than that of reducing our armament and endeavoring to have other nations do likewise. I have always been in favor of curtailing expenditures for our Military and Naval Establishments, preventing their rapid increase, and saving the taxpayers from excessive burdens. But since the recent conference at Geneva was not fruitful of results, and since the attitude taken by the other nations indicates that they desire to increase and not reduce, I now believe it is absolutely necessary, in order to bring the other nations to their senses, to create an American Army, Navy, and air force inferior to none. It is not outside the bounds of possibility for this Nation to build the greatest war machine in the world. If this Nation were earnestly to begin such a building program, the other nations would soon realize they could not compete and would be forced to agree to a reduction program.

Some of our debtor nations have been welching on payment of their war loans, holding that they are not financially able to make payments. And yet these very nations have found sufficient finances to greatly increase their military and air forces. The French debt settlement was ratified by Congress, but rejected by the French Parliament. The loans of the French debt were financed by Liberty bonds, sold to the people of America, on which our Government paid 4¼ per cent interest. Under the agreement of the Debt Funding Commission, which was ratified by Congress, the United States would receive in principal and interest $6,847,674,104.17. The total amount we would receive in principal and interest on a 4¼ per cent basis would be $11,474,900,000. Therefore, the agreement ratified by Congress, and refused by France, would relieve the French taxpayer and burden the American taxpayers to the amount of $4,627,225,895.83. Unrefuted testimony before the House of Representatives showed France as industrially more prosperous than before the war. It showed that she is rich in valuable territory acquired as a result of the war; that she has seen fit to maintain and augment a large war machine which has been used to carry on oppressive, unjustifiable wars against the Riffs and Syrians; and that at the time of the agreement France had a military force of over 686,000 men. Further, France had sufficient funds to make extraordinary provisions for her navy and air forces, and when the committees of Congress asked the House to increase America's appropriations for the air forces, it was stated that this increase was necessary in order to bring our air force equal to the strength of the French.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SCHAFER. Not now.

I shall vote for this bill.

There are some in the great State of Wisconsin who could consistently vote against this legislation. They could with equal consistency vote for a bill to abolish the entire air force, Navy, and Army of America.

I hold in my hand La Follette's Magazine of August, 1926. On the first page of this magazine it is stated:

> Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

This magazine is edited by ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr. In 1926 I took a stand for adequate appropriations for our Army and Navy and on certain other fundamental questions. This La Follette Magazine of August, 1926, contains an editorial written by ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., the editor, in which he states:

> In common with all sincere progressives, I greatly regret that in this critical campaign Representative JOHN C. SCHAFER, of the fourth district, has of late denounced some of the major planks of the progressive platform and has repudiated sound progressive principles long advocated as an essential part of the Wisconsin progressive program under the leadership of Robert M. La Follette.

I denounced the following plank then, and I do now, and I challenge any Member of this House to stand up and say they believe in it. [Applause.]

Listen to this. I now read a plank from the platform in question as it appears in La Follette's Magazine:

> Congress has a constitutional right to an authoritative voice in foreign affairs. We favor its exercising that right to—
> Promote firm treaty agreements with all countries to outlaw war, abolish conscription, and provide for a referendum on questions of peace and war.

Is there any Member of this House who favors legislation which provides that before a shot or shell could be fired to repel an invader we must put the ponderous referendum machinery into operation and have a vote of the people on the question of peace and war? If there is I ask him to stand up. [Applause.] I see no one rises.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. I want to ask the gentleman whether he has been read out of the party?

Mr. SCHAFER. I am talking about our national defense. This is the principle that the late Senator La Follette set up, and I quote from page 114 of the La Follette-Wheeler textbook used in the 1924 presidential campaign, wherein plank No. 11 states:

> We favor such amendments to the Federal Constitution as may be necessary to provide for the direct nomination and election of the President, to extend the initiative and referendum to the Federal Government, and to insure a popular referendum for or against war except in cases of actual invasion.

To-day we find in the State of Wisconsin presidential delegate candidates running on a platform supported by Editor ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., containing the very principle of the 1926 platform which, if carried into effect, would not permit our Army, our Navy, or our air force to fire a shot or shell to repel a foreign invader until we had submitted the matter to a referendum of the people. I say again that anyone who believes in this principle supported by Editor ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., as contained in the 1926 platform and in his present delegate candidate platform, can consistently vote against the pending bill and with equal consistency can vote to abolish every piece of our Army, Navy, and air force. [Applause.]

The people of Wisconsin do not want written into the law of America legislation which will permit an invading foreign government to lay waste the great State of Wisconsin and destroy the lives and homes of our people and overcome the Nation while waiting on the ponderous referendum machinery. Foreign policy and navies are closely associated, so I would like to call attention to another plank of Editor ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr.'s platform of 1926, which appears in his magazine. Listen to this:

> FOREIGN POLICY
> We are unalterably opposed to the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations and we denounce the administration and the Members of the Senate who voted to put this country into the League of Nations' World Court as a betrayal of a sacred public trust. We favor a resolution by Congress withdrawing America's adherence to the World Court.

I denounced that plank at that time. I voted against the World Court resolution in the House, as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will indicate. And I now pause and ask if any Member of Congress from any part of the country, particularly Wisconsin, favors that plank. I see no one rises.

Four Members of Congress from Wisconsin voted for the World Court resolution in the House. Seventy-six Senators voted for our entrance into the World Court, including the man who ran for the Vice Presidency on the ticket with the late Senator Robert M. La Follette in 1924, and the man whom Editor ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., is now supporting as a presidential candidate. Did Editor ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., think for one moment that I would join him in denouncing those mentioned above as betrayers of a sacred public trust?

When I would not stand for a referendum before a war of invasion could be repelled, and when I would not stand for a condemnation of the late Senator La Follette's running mate in the last presidential election and four Members of Congress from Wisconsin because they supported the World Court as betrayers of a sacred public trust, Editor ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., sent out letters into my district saying what a great repudiator I was and asking for my defeat, and pledging that if I was not defeated in that election of 1926 he would see that I was defeated the next time.

I was opposed to our entrance into the World War, and if I had been in Congress at that time I would have voted against entering that war; but after war was declared it was our war, and I did my little bit. [Applause.] I do not tremble and crawl on my knees when Editor ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., falsely, maliciously, willfully, and ridiculously attacks me as one who is repudiating progressive principles. [Applause.] If I run for reelection to Congress, I will be glad to meet the gentleman in any part of my district; and if I run for any office in the gift of a greater part of the voters of Wisconsin, I will be glad to meet him face to face and discuss the issues.

I think this bill is a good bill, and I shall support it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, having listened to the testimonial of the prodigal son, I ask that my amendment may be read again for information.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a privileged motion. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the enacting clause of the bill and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I know at this late hour, and in the present temper of this House and of the Members, it would be impossible to pass this motion, but we are entitled to have a vote on it. We are entitled to know how many men there are in the Congress, and especially in the House, which ought to be more representative of the wishes of the people than the other end of the Capitol, who stand for this big Navy plan. Two hundred and seventy-four million dollars are involved in this bill besides the one hundred and sixty-four millions we have already authorized, and it does constitute a "big Navy program." I am not a pacifist and I never have been one in my life, but I am not in favor of letting these admirals put everything over on us they want to put over, just like the big generals in the Army put things over on us.

I have been getting this propaganda that you have been getting from the Navy League, which is made up of admirals and other naval officers. I have been getting their propaganda the same as you have, and I have been watching their Army and Navy Register and their other Army and Navy publications that are published for their Army and Navy Club here in Washington, and I know that any man who does not go with them is denounced by them every week, but I am willing to take their denunciation.

I want to see just how many men there are on this floor who are willing to stand up here and say they are against spending this $274,000,000. I am one of them, and I am going to vote against the bill and in favor of striking out its enacting clause. I do not care if I am the only one here who does so vote. It is time for the people to find out who is responsible for all of the "big Army" and "big Navy" plans.

I have voted against the encroachment of the Army and the Navy upon the rights of the people ever since I have been here, and I am not a pacifist. I voted for the war. I voted for the draft act. I voted for every bill that gave the President, as the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, the resources and power to win the last war. But we have had enough of war.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman says he has been getting propaganda from the admirals. I will say to the gentleman from Texas I have not had a single letter from anybody in my district or in the country asking for a large Navy, but I have had hundreds of letters from ministers of churches asking me not to vote for the naval bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman get a communication from the Navy League yesterday?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I did not.

Mr. BLANTON. My friend the gentleman from New York got it.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Yes. I was very glad to get it. It was very informing. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I know the gentleman was very glad to get it. The gentleman is one of those who does not agree with me on this question.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman is proud of the fact that he voted for the war and voted for war measures during the war?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. They were absolutely necessary then.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that if he had voted the other way with others we might have saved hundreds of millions of dollars and thousands of human lives?

Mr. BLANTON. No; for we might have been in wars 20 years earlier. When you are highly prepared for war, you will have to fight sooner or later; when you have plenty of admirals and a bunch of generals prepared to fight and trained to fight and who want to fight and who know how to help get us into war, when it might be avoided. When one of them commits an act of war in a foreign country and our flag is insulted, then we are all forced into war. We demonstrated in the last war that we can prepare adequately in a short time, and the whole world then found it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 14 ayes and 105 noes.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out lines 7, 8, and 9 and insert: "(a) two light cruisers during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, and 1933, each when completed to be designated as a leader for units composed of 25 destroyers and to cost, including armor and armament, not to exceed $17,000,000 each."

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment not for the purpose of retarding the bill, but to take care of the needs in the Navy, as has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, who claimed that the President approved a bill that had in it a recommendation for destroyer leaders.

When this came before the committee I said this Nation could use destroyer leaders, but they would have to be sufficiently large to be able to carry aboard an observation and scout plane. In other words, if destroyers are to be maintained as separate units, that unit must have eyes.

A destroyer leader as stressed in the legislation would not have been an efficient ship because it is too small to be utilized for carrying any kind of aircraft. Therefore if this kind of ship was proved during the World War to be the most efficient of any in the fleet, then destroyers should be placed in the unit with a leader; a ship sufficiently large so that they can take the lead in action where destroyers alone are used.

Therefore in the interest of efficiency I want to say that destroyers should be given the kind of a leader which will make it possible for a nation to send out 25 under the leadership of a destroyer leader, and this should be a cruiser, so that such a fleet can operate independently. Such a leader must carry aircraft so that it can send planes out a hundred miles if necessary and report back what is necessary to take care of the situation. Therefore the 10 cruisers, if authorized, should be assigned as destroyer leaders, each one taking care of 25 destroyers in their separate units.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not wish to detain the committee, but is not there authority in the act of 1916 to build these?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No, sir; this provides for the allocation of cruisers after they are constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLINTIC: Page 1, strike out lines 7, 8, and 9 and insert "three light cruisers during each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, and 1933, to cost, including armor and armaments, not to exceed $17,000,000 each."

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment so that the period for the laying down of the cruisers can be extended five years, having in mind that we have representatives at the present time at Geneva for the purpose of seeing whether or not they can arrange another disarmament conference. Also it will be remembered that in 1931, three years hence, we are to have the disarmament conference here in Washington. This is mandatory. Therefore if we lay down in three years the 15 cruisers as proposed in this bill, and it could be shown by the other nations, as I state it can be shown, that they do not have an excessive tonnage of cruisers, then the United States will not be confronted with the situation again whereby we will have to scrap a lot of ships, thereby penalizing the taxpayers of the country several hundred million dollars, as they were penalized in 1922.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 2, line 5, after the word "year," add the following: "And provided further, That the first and each successive alternate cruiser upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engine, armor, and armament for such eight cruisers, the construction and manufacture of which is authorized by this act, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill. The bill is to construct cruisers. The Government has the right to construct them anywhere its officials may desire. It has the right on behalf of the people and the taxpayers to use judgment and discretion to save money. This amendment would limit the discretion of the officials of this Government and confine them to certain places only, with certain equipment only, and would mean an added expense of from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000. It is not germane to the purpose of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks that this amendment is clearly germane. The bill provides for the authorization of certain cruisers and vessels for the Navy, and the Chair thinks it is germane that certain details of their construction shall be provided. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, during the greater part of our history the construction and equipment of naval vessels was considered to be exclusively a Government function, and navy yards were established at convenient points along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts on which many millions of dollars of the people's money have been expended.

Of late years, however, the policy of the Navy Department has been to have most of the new vessels built in private shipyards, while the navy yards have been used to only a small fraction of their capacity.

Believing that in the interest of economy existing Government facilities should be utilized and that the manufacture of armaments on a large scale by private corporations organized for profit has been in the past one of the chief incentives to war among nations, Congress incorporated in the act approved December 18, 1924, authorizing the construction of 8 cruisers, 6 river gunboats, and the modernization of 6 capital ships, the following language:

Vessels to be constructed or reconditioned by this act shall be constructed or reconditioned in the Government navy yards of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy such construction or reconditioning would not involve an appreciable increase in the cost to the Government.

Congress has also, for a number of years, incorporated a similar provision in the annual Army and Navy appropriation bills.

Due to the manner in which this elastic language has been interpreted, however, these enactments of Congress have not had the effect which we believe Congress intended, and therefore I have offered this amendment.

For instance, when the construction of the cruisers Pensacola and Salt Lake City, authorized by the act, December 18, 1924, was contemplated in March, 1925, the New York Navy Yard's estimate, including the main engines, was $7,799,449, and the bid of the Cramp Ship Building Co. for one cruiser, including the main engines, was $8,673,833. The New York Navy Yard was awarded only the construction of one vessel, while the Cramp Ship Building Co. was awarded the other vessel and both sets of engines for the two cruisers. The New York Navy Yard has one of the best engine-building plants in the country, and in order to keep its industrial organization intact one of these sets of engines should logically have been awarded to the New York Navy Yard. This act on the part of the department placed the New York Navy Yard at a disadvantage in securing work of this character on a competitive basis with private shipyards.

On April 5, 1927, bids were opened by the Navy Department for the construction of the remaining six cruisers authorized by the act of December 18, 1924. The Mare Island Navy Yard's carefully revised estimate for two cruisers, including main engines, was $7,539,815 each. The Puget Sound Navy Yard's estimate for two cruisers, including the main engines, was $8,045,000 each. The other navy yards did not estimate on these vessels, but the presumption is that such navy yards as the New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Norfolk, which are equipped to do this work, could perform it at about the same cost as Mare Island and Puget Sound. This assumption is reasonable because the estimate of the New York Navy Yard on the Pensacola was about the same in March, 1925, as was the western coast yards estimate two years later.

Notwithstanding the low and carefully prepared estimates of the Mare Island and Puget Sound Navy Yards, they secured only one vessel each, while the remaining four cruisers were awarded to eastern private shipyards. The contract prices were as follows: The American Brown-Boveri Corporation was awarded one vessel at $10,815,000, the Bethlehem Ship Building Corporation was awarded one vessel at $10,675,000, and the Newport News Ship Building Co. was awarded two vessels at $10,567,000 each. The estimates submitted by the Mare Island and Puget Sound Navy Yards and the bids submitted by the three private shipyards above mentioned are for exactly the same type of vessel according to the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department and therefore all the figures are directly comparable.

The average of the estimates submitted by the Mare Island and Puget Sound Navy Yards was $7,792,407.50. The average bid of the three eastern private shipyards above mentioned was $10,656,000. This is a difference favoring the navy yards of $2,863,592.50 per vessel, and shows that our Government could have saved $10,656,000 if all of these vessels had been built in the navy yards. It is therefore difficult to determine how that section of the act of December 18, 1924, was interpreted which provides, in effect, that this work must be done in the Government navy yards when it would not involve an appreciable increase in the cost to the Government. Certainly when these navy yards have been operating at less than 50 per cent capacity no legitimate claim could be made that time and facilities would not permit of the work being performed in the navy yards. The Mare Island and Puget Sound Navy Yards claimed that they were equipped to construct two vessels. The New York Navy Yard had a building slip that was not being used alongside the one upon which the Pensacola is being constructed, and a machine shop well equipped for building the engines, due to the fact that they did not secure the engines of the Pensacola. The Boston Navy Yard had a building slip which by an expenditure of $90,000 for modifications, could accommodate one of these vessels.

Furthermore the navy yards' estimate was based upon each yard carrying along its work independently. Savings could be effected by coordinating the facilities and work of the several yards, and therefore any increase in the cost above that estimated would be improbable. On the contrary, coordinated efforts would doubtless have resulted in materially reducing the estimated cost.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money are invested in our Government navy yards and arsenals. They are operated at present only from about 10 per cent to 50 per cent of their capacity. If more work is provided for these establishments the overhead will be reduced and greater and greater economies effected as the work proceeds. Navy yards and arsenals have the best facilities for doing this work existing in the United States, because that is the purpose for which they were established. They have a trained civilian personnel and a trained and experienced set of officers and supervisors. They have made good on this kind of work in the past; and we feel confident that they will make good in the future if given the opportunity by Congress.

My amendment, if adopted, will provide ample competition among the several navy yards and arsenals for this work to insure economy of construction and manufacture; and I am confident that millions of dollars will be saved the American people as a result.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell the House how much an estimate from a navy yard means? It does not mean anything.

Mr. DALLINGER. It does mean everything. I was informed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] that he was going to speak against this amendment because he had some figures from the navy yard. I tell the Members of this House that I know how the commandants of these navy yards and arsenals feel. They are not allowed to come to Washington and tell the truth. They are instructed to add to these estimates a whole lot of overhead expenses which the taxpayers of the country are paying anyway in the Regular Army and Navy appropriation bills. It stands to reason that where a private corporation organized for profit bids on a ship of this kind, it has to get interest on the immense amount of money invested in their plant, in their building, in their machinery, and in their overhead. In the case of the Government navy yard that is all borne in the regular appropriation bills, and if the true facts should be obtained from the Navy Department, it would show that every one of these cruisers can be built in these navy yards and arsenals where the people of this country have hundreds of millions of dollars invested in these plants, for $3,000,000 less per vessel. But the facts are suppressed, because it is in the interest apparently of certain people to give these contracts to private corporations so that they can make big profits from them. I trust the amendment will prevail.

Memorandum regarding proposed Dallinger amendment to naval construction bill (H. R. 11526)

First. The amendment reads as follows:

Provided further, That the first and each succeeding alternate cruiser upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament for such eight cruisers, the construction and manufacture of which is authorized by this act, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States.

Second. If the four cruisers awarded in 1927 to the American Brown-Boveri Corporation, the Bethlehem Ship Building Corporation, and the Newport News Ship Building Co. had been awarded to navy yards the amount saved the United States Government would have been $11,454,370, according to estimates prepared by the Mare Island and Puget Sound Navy Yards.

Third. The reliability of the present system of preparing navy-yard estimates is indicated by the fact that in the reconditioning of the battleships Florida, Arkansas, Texas, Utah, Wyoming, and New York, which according to the authorizing act of December 18, 1924, was to cost not exceeding $18,360,000, the Boston, Philadelphia, and Norfolk Navy Yards, which did this work, did not exceed their estimates in a single instance.

Fourth. The navy yards and arsenals are adequately equipped for constructing the eight cruisers, their main engines, armor, and armament within the time limit provided in H. R. 11526, now under consideration, as will readily be seen by the partial outline of facilities available in the following:

(a) The Mare Island and Puget Sound Navy Yards each submitted estimates in 1927 upon two cruisers, including the main engines. Each of these yards secured only one vessel, therefore they are each equipped for taking on one additional cruiser.

The Puget Sound yard, according to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, has a shipbuilding dock capable of accommodating two cruisers.

The fact that the Puget Sound yard submitted estimates on four sets of engines in 1927 indicates they have ample machine-shop facilities for building four sets of engines.

The Mare Island yard is likewise qualified.

(b) The Boston Navy Yard has at present a vacant building slip which can accommodate one cruiser, by an expenditure of about $90,000 for repairs and modification.

When navy yards submit estimates, a portion of the estimate contemplates certain necessary work on the building slips to place them in condition.

(c) The New York Navy Yard has two splendid building slips alongside of each other with traveling cranes between them. Only one is occupied in the building of the cruiser Pensacola at present. Another cruiser could be built on the building slip alongside of it.

The New York yard possesses one of the best engine-building plants in the country. They did not obtain the engines for the cruiser now being built; and that yard, therefore, possesses ample machine-shop facilities for building two sets of engines.

(d) The Philadelphia Navy Yard has at present two vacant building slips capable of accommodating cruisers. The cost necessary to repair these building slips will be a small item compared to the difference between the last navy-yard estimates and the private shipbuilders' bids, which amounted to nearly $3,000,000 per vessel. The Philadelphia Navy Yard also has ample machine-shop facilities for building the engines for two cruisers.

(e) The Norfolk Navy Yard has one building slip, upon which it is necessary to expend about $125,000 for repairs. This would be a small item to expend in order to save from two and one-half to three million dollars on the cost of a vessel. The Norfolk yard also has ample machine-shop facilities for building the engines.

(f) The Naval Gun Factory at Washington, D. C., has ample facilities for manufacturing the ordnance for these vessels. That establishment is not operating more than 50 per cent of capacity at present.

(g) The Watertown Arsenal is equipped for turning out large quantities of heavy ordnance and is operating only at a small fraction of its capacity.

(h) The Watervliet Arsenal has in the past served as an auxiliary to the Washington Navy Yard for the production of heavy ordnance. That establishment is operating only at a fraction of its capacity.

(i) The Rock Island Arsenal is well equipped for producing the smaller types of ordnance and a large variety of equipment. It is operating at present with a force of less than 500 employees, whereas during the war 15,000 were employed.

(j) The naval ordnance plant at Charlestown, W. Va., is the best equipped plant in the country for manufacturing armor and forgings for heavy guns. It is being maintained at present in condition for operation on short notice. Practically no work is performed there at present, but the plant is kept in readiness so that when work develops it can be handled efficiently on short notice.

Fifth. As industrial managers know, when a small quantity of work is performed in a large plant the overhead becomes excessive. If the Government's industrial plants above enumerated were operated at greater capacity, millions of dollars additional could be saved in the construction and manufacture of these vessels and their equipment, due to the fact that the recent estimates were based upon a relatively small amount of work compared to their respective capacities.

Sixth. All of these plants above enumerated are located in large industrial centers, and therefore have excellent labor markets.

Seventh. All of these governmental facilities, costing hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money, provide the best equipment in the United States for doing this work and they should be used. There is no more reason for closing down these plants in order to favor private shipyards than there is for closing down all of our post offices and having the Post Office Department move into private buildings in the interest of realty companies.

Eighth. The Dallinger amendment provides that eight of the cruisers shall be assigned to the navy yards without competition with private shipyards. This is justified by the fact that even though the navy yards' estimates are materially less, contracts may nevertheless be awarded to private shipyards, as heretofore.

The navy yards and arsenals compete among themselves for work, each one desiring as large a proportion of it as possible. This furnishes far more competition than exists among the private shipyards, inasmuch as the number of navy yards and arsenals exceed the number of well-equipped and well-financed private shipyards. This competitive feature among the navy yards and arsenals for the work will insure to the Government not only economy in production and manufacture but will improve the quality of the product as well. Furthermore, no navy yard or arsenal will have any incentive for running up the costs by reason of any desire to enhance profits. Any one of them would attempt to produce the work as economically as possible even without competition. Competition among the navy yards, however, doubtless would stimulate the ingenuity of the respective managements in turning out the work economically, on time, and in producing first-class workmanship.

Ninth. Considering the availability of all this Government equipment, the highly skilled and trained naval and Army officers, the highly skilled corps of civilian mechanics, and with ample appropriations available, there appears no good reason why these agencies of our Government should not be amply qualified to perform this work at a tremendous saving to the taxpayers.

Tenth. The Cramp Shipbuilding Co. during a long term of years turned out over 100 naval vessels. Notwithstanding the fact that in 1926 they secured the building of a cruiser and two sets of engines, they went out of business by selling their shipbuilding property to the Reading Railroad Co. This action was taken in the face of a prospective large naval building program, in which they doubtless would have participated as builders if they had stayed in the business. The closing up of the Cramp Shipbuilding Co. is regarded by the Navy Department as a serious loss to that department.

If, instead of having all of these vessels built in a private shipyard, some of them had been built in the navy yards, the experience thus acquired would still have been the property of the Navy Department, and there would be no danger to the department of losing these Navy facilities due to the vicissitudes or financial considerations of an individual private business. It is better for the United States Government to retain control of its industrial naval and military experience and facilities than it is to rely upon the contingency of private individuals remaining in business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want merely to say that every ship you build in a navy yard will cost a million dollars more than if you built it outside.

Mr. BUTLER. Here are the figures: One ship built in a navy yard cost $7,000,000 more than when built in a private yard. Place the discretion where it has been, so that we can get these ships for a decent sum of money. I am not for this bill if the money is to be wasted in construction.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact that Japan and the other countries use their navy yards to the limit of their capacity?

Mr. BUTLER. Well, I know the gentleman has a navy yard in his district, and I have one in mine. But that should make no difference.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to challenge the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BUTLER], as to the excessive cost of building ships at Government navy yards over the cost of building them at private yards. The history of the matter is entirely different. In the building of the last cruisers the eastern navy yards were not allowed to bid.

Again, on the hearings of this bill the private contractors came before the committee and stated they required $17,000,000 for the building of each cruiser, and the western navy yards estimated the cost at about $10,000,000 last year, a difference of $7,000,000 in favor of the navy yards. The Navy Department did not allow the New York Navy Yard to bid on the last cruisers. They are supposed to maintain the yards to build these ships in the cause of national defense. If they do not want to build all the ships in Government navy yards, they should at least have used the Government navy yards as a check on private contractors.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does not the evidence show that, after all, the underlying purpose is to give business to the private shipyards?

Mr. BLACK of New York. It does not show any such thing. It shows that there is a school in the department in favor of private yards. I am in favor of utilizing the public yards. The America was reconditioned at the New York Navy Yard. In that transaction the navy yard exceeded its figures. Why? Because when they tore up the deck they found additional things that had to be done. Of course the navy yard had to expend a little more money on it in view of the new developments. New items were added by the Shipping Board.

Gentlemen should remember that the Government navy yards are part of our system of national defense, and you gentlemen are to-day doing nothing to help in that direction. You are hurting the national defense when you adopt the policy of stifling the navy yards. I say maintain the navy yards and thus strengthen the national defense. You are not doing very much, anyhow, for the Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I realize the sentiment here is to vote this thing down hurriedly. I am conscious, too, that a great deal of truth exists in the suggestion that was made a moment ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. There is an uneasy feeling in the country, a belief, that this program has been evolved to give work to the private shipyards of this country.

Now, for my part, I am in favor of reasonable preparedness. I favor some kind of declared policy in a building program which will enable us to protect our interests here and abroad, to police our shores, and to discharge our full duty to our South and Central American neighbors and to fulfill all obligations incident to our insular possessions. I am sorry we have not considered the needs of a merchant marine first and the needs of our Navy second. Our Navy should be adequate for peacetime purposes, but not a threat to any nation.

We ought to do what is here contemplated in a fair spirit. It is just as important an element of preparedness that our navy yards and arsenals should be efficient as it is that we should have vessels and that we should have guns and ammunition. Our arsenals throughout the country are lying idle. Our navy yards are abandoned in great part.

It is important and necessary to keep a personnel of skilled men in these arsenals and navy yards in order that we may quickly expand in time of necessity, sending out to the private manufacturing concerns of this country men who are capable of assuming leadership, to become foremen and directors of important industrial movements, men who are acquainted with the purposes of the departments and who can go ahead with the work. May I also say we ought to be fair to those who are employed in our navy yards and in our arsenals and should give them a reasonable amount of work. It does not show good business or good judgment to allow our arsenals and navy yards to remain idle and to destroy the organizations that exist there. The overhead costs go on whether our Government plants are in use or rust in idleness.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LETTS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Have not the navy yards the equipment and the men to do the work just as well as the private yards?

Mr. LETTS. Exactly so. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] a moment ago made the suggestion that the navy yards could not produce any of these ships within a million dollars of the cost of producing them in private yards.

Mr. MADDEN. I said they would not. They might be able to do so, but they would not.

Mr. LETTS. I know that out at the Rock Island Arsenal, which adjoins my district, estimates have been made and contracts have gone to private manufacturers on bids which exceeded the estimates of the Rock Island Arsenal. This has been done on the ground or claim that all the Government arsenal can do is to make an estimate, and that while the estimate may be satisfactory, it is deemed to be better to pay a larger figure which is a binding bid than to accept the estimate of the arsenal, which is regarded as uncertain.

It would be better, I think, to permit our arsenals and navy yards to make binding bids on work offered by departments of the Government other than the War and Navy Departments. In this way they would be able in reality to compete with private manufacturing plants and private shipyards, all to the great advantage of the Government and the people, who foot the bills. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] is just and equitable and should pass.

An investigation was made at the Rock Island Arsenal last fall at my request which revealed that over a considerable period of time the arsenal had, in the aggregate of its contract costs, been under the aggregate of the estimates and that only in one or two cases in all of those years did the cost actually exceed the estimate.

It seems a necessary conclusion that this policy, by which departments of Government refuse the estimates of our arsenals and of our navy yards because they are estimates and not binding bids, is only a method of explanation which permits a great amount of work to be taken from them and given to private builders and individual concerns.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LETTS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and that in the extension of such remarks I may be permitted to include a radio address which I made on the subject of "Roosevelt and the Navy" on Navy Day, which was the last anniversary of the birth of that great American—Theodore Roosevelt.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The address referred to follows:

Friends of the radio audience, my fellow citizens, this program is in celebration of Navy Day. To-morrow is the birthday of Theodore Roosevelt. To know the great interest which Roosevelt had in the American Navy is convincing that Navy Day is not celebrated on Roosevelt's birthday by accident nor as a coincidence but by design.

The observance of Navy Day carries a message to the American people concerning the importance of sea power and commerce. The business man and the farmer should know how it affects his welfare. His interest in ships should be stimulated, and the matter of building up an American merchant marine should be of general concern.

Theodore Roosevelt was the champion of the American Navy. He was inspired with a great zeal for preparedness. His career was one of great activity along diversified lines. He typified the strenuous life. A devotee of outdoor sports, he was a great hunter and the enemy of nature fakers.

As a statesman he was resourceful and bold in making needed reforms and a leader whom his people delighted to follow. All his life he gave to his country his time, his thought, and, in the highest sense, himself.

As an orator, fluent and convincing, he was the coiner of catch phrases and forceful expressions. As a moralist he stood for the square deal. He was an enemy of crooked business and the opponent of race suicide. His life was the expression of idealism in action. Above all he was an enthusiast, an American. Gentle in disposition and refined in character, he was the wielder of the big stick.

Roosevelt dedicated himself to the service of America. He announced the policy that the American Navy should be large enough to enable this country to display its flag in all seas for the protection of its citizens and its extending commerce. He recognized that as a world power our Government had corresponding international rights and duties. He said that the Navy will not provoke war, but that an adequate and trained Navy is the best guaranty against war and the cheapest and most effective peace insurance. It was his conviction that the American people must either build and maintain an adequate Navy or accept a secondary position in international, political, and commercial affairs. A sure way, he said, to invite national disaster is to be opulent, aggressive, and unarmed.

International agreements have done much to curb the size and power of the United States Navy. The number and tonnage of capital ships and cruisers, the caliber of guns, and their elevation have all been at issue. Existing agreements are concerned with sizes, numbers, and quantities. Upon quality no limitation is placed. Respecting such matters as are untouched by these international conventions we should, in the exercise of ordinary prudence and good sense and in accord with national needs, go a very long way in providing ship for ship, gun for gun, and man for man. The fewer ships we have the better they should be, and as for man power, skill, knowledge, and manhood must be par excellent.

Our Navy should be a symbol of our Nation's strength. Our flag in foreign ports a gesture of good will, a display of strength, and the guaranty of our security. It should inspire Americans, at home or abroad, with a great pride of country.

The Navy supplements and supports the labors of diplomacy. It aids peaceful adjustment of international dispute. It is an instrument of wholesome pressure. It sustains peace and promotes prosperity and happiness, which is the true object of government.

The Navy is an index of the character of a nation's commerce. International trade is a mixed matter, involving the question of equipment and of its protection. We can not make a start in international commerce with any amount of equipment without the promise of protection upon the seas and in foreign waters. An adequate Navy alone can guarantee freedom from interruption and molestation.

The Navy was the pioneer in the development of the radio and continues to be an active agent in its progress.

There are three outstanding reasons why we must support an American merchant marine: First, for national defense; second, for the expansion of our foreign trade; and third, to have a voice in the control of ocean freight rates.

Our annual foreign trade amounts to $10,000,000,000, and the freight bills for transporting it total $600,000,000. At least one-half of this sum should be turned back for circulation among the people of America. Our prosperity depends on the continued expansion of our industries and our ability to dispose of our surpluses in the markets of the world. Expanding our foreign trade expands our industries, and the greater this expansion the greater our prosperity.

Here in the agricultural region of the country it is our business to plow the soil and reap the crops which are produced by adding mental and physical labor to the resources of nature. It is doubtful whether we fully appreciate how much the prices received for our commodities are influenced by ocean shipping. More than one-sixth of the total products raised on American farms is sold in foreign markets.

For the last several years there has been annually available for export more than 250,000,000 bushels of wheat. Our prosperity rests in a large measure upon the satisfactory disposal of this exportable surplus. The amount of ocean freight which must be paid on this surplus is a controlling thing in the degree of success, which American agriculture can enjoy. As a matter of economic law, the price of the surplus in the world market determines the price in the domestic market. It must be the business of the Government to see that ocean freight rates are reasonable. This can be accomplished only through an adequate and well-conducted merchant marine. It must be protected, and such can only result from the cooperation of a well-trained Navy.

The ships that carry the trade control it. The nation that owns the ships is the master of the markets which it supplies.

During war times American agriculture was greatly expanded because we found it necessary to feed a large part of the world. This increased production is continuing. New and larger markets must be found for the products of American farms. Such markets can be held and controlled only if America provides ocean-going freighters, rendering service at reasonable rates.

It is well known that there is a difficult farm problem, and there is distress here in the Middle West because of it. But, aside from that condition, ours is the most prosperous of all the nations of the world. Fortunately for us, we are the creditor nation of the world. Our foreign trade equals that of Great Britain and surpasses that of any other nation.

The growth of America and her expanding interests have been attended with increasing obligations. Long ago we adopted a policy known as the Monroe doctrine. By it we assumed a new national duty, which must never fail of performance. South, beyond the waters of the Caribbean Sea, is the Panama Canal. There lie the South American countries. They place full reliance upon our political doctrines.

We do not favor imperialism, but we have, in a most satisfactory and orderly way, acquired important insular possessions, not through the desire for acquisition, but in aid of humane policies. Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and Hawaii all rely upon us for that protection which we may not in honor withhold.

There should be a greater pride in our Navy. Our writers of novels and short stories, our poets and our composers of song might well think of America's host of ambitious youngsters and provide them with choice yarns of adventure and sing of our old sea heroes and of our gallant ships of war. The youth of the land should know the Navy as an essential element of our national life, to be loved for what it is. Such attitude would do as much for the Navy as large appropriations by Congress. By literature and art we can sell the Navy to those who have paid for it, but do not yet know what they have got.

No navy can be better than the men who man its ships. There was a time when the Navy offered young men adventure and prize money. To-day it offers them a profession of the most exacting type. It offers opportunities for a career. In manhood, as in materials, the Navy requires the best the Nation affords.

It is fitting, in the discussion of our Nation's armed forces, the development of a national spirit, and the matter of our Nation's material progress, to invite attention to the important influence of naval training and the physical and moral well-being of the young men of America who are connected with the regular service and of the reserve.

The regular Navy takes annually into the active service from 15,000 to 25,000 young men at the formative stage of life. Habits of obedience, cleanliness, and good order are molded into character and ambition. Any young man who has had the privilege of this training is fitted for any struggle for preferment in civil life.

The influence of the Navy on the young manhood of the Nation is augmented by its contact with civil life through Naval Reserve activities. The Naval Reserves have the same relation to the Navy that the National Guard units throughout the country have to the Army. It is the American system, and is contrary to the system of compulsory military service, which is the policy of many continental nations. The American system more nearly meets the ideals of democracy. It avoids the appearance of militarism and yet it makes provision for the security of the Nation in time of emergency.

There are obligations of citizenship as well as its benefits. I am happy to say that the Naval Reserve unit, which sponsors this program to-night, is composed of young men of this community who are rendering to the Nation a service of far-reaching benefit. The service of these young men is the contribution of this community to our Nation's well-being, and evidences a generous and friendly attitude on the part of our people to the great purposes of the American Navy.

There is in the Congress of the United States a big Navy group and a little Navy group. There may be a like division of opinion in the press of the country and in the minds of the general public. It is practical to build an army of volunteers and by conscription. Not so the Navy. Roosevelt understood this and expressed it well when he said, "You can not send volunteers to sea unless you want to send them to the bottom."

May the Navy of the United States exemplify the life and the works of Theodore Roosevelt by always fighting on the side of right.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate has been exhausted.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I reply to that by saying that the gentleman from Iowa was recognized on a motion to strike out the last word and I am rising in opposition to his motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not take more than five minutes of your time because I know you are impatient. I meet the issue that has been made by the gentleman from Iowa, that this is a question of preparedness. I want to call to your attention the fact that the private yards of this country are trembling on the border of absolute dissolution and starvation. Do you know that within the last year a private yard of this country that has been in the business for the last 100 years—Cramps—has gone out of business because it did not have work?

Now, gentlemen, you know that when this great World War came on the private yards of this country constituted Government yards; and it was by reason of the operation of those private yards that you were able to build the bridge of boats that carried your boys and your munitions across the seas and put them in a position to carry on that war.

The question is not whether you shall give this work to a private yard or to a navy yard, but whether you shall leave this discretion in the Navy Department, a discretion that will possibly permit the existence of private yards that otherwise might go out of business.

Another thing I desire to bring to the attention of this committee is the consideration of the absolute necessity of the situation. The gentleman from Illinois has said that an estimate amounts to nothing. I agree with him as to that. There is another consideration, and that is that you have private citizens who have invested their money in organizations built up for the purpose of carrying on the work of this country, of building up your merchant marine, and of helping to build up the Navy. Now, the Government, according to this amendment, would attempt to bring those organizations into such competition as might break them down.

If the officials of the Navy find upon an investigation that the work can be done more cheaply in the navy yard than in the private yards, if they find that the purposes of government can be better subserved by construction in the navy yard than in the private yards, if they find that it is to the interests of the great Government of the United States and of all of its people to construct in the navy yard rather than in the private yards, they have that option, they have that right, they have that discretion. Is it not a reasonable discretion to leave in their hands, allowing them to consider the situation as it exists when the question arises, and thus to work out the problem in such a way as will permit the existence of the private yards of this country and at the same time permit the existence of the navy yards. If your private yards go down, this Congress can not restore them. This Congress has it in its power to preserve the navy yards and to keep them as an organization, and thus it may also preserve and keep in existence the private yards.

The question before you, gentlemen, is a question of preparedness. It is the question of retaining those institutions and those organizations that shall help this country in time of need and stress to meet the dangers of any situation that may arise or confront it. I beg you to vote down the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I have an amendment pending and I just want to know whether the motion just adopted will shut off debate on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It will. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCMILLAN) there were—ayes 92, noes 78.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BRITTEN, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DALLINGER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 102, noes 78.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, if I could understand the wishes of the members of the committee I would be very pleased to express them to the Chair. It seems to be the desire of the committee to read the bill through. I would much prefer to move to rise, but I am not going to go contrary to the wishes of the membership of the committee. To-morrow we can have the roll calls in the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I will be delighted to yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut, if this bill were finished this afternoon, could the House probably adjourn over to-morrow?

Mr. TILSON. I do not think so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of New York: On page 1, strike out lines 5 and 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Twenty-five light cruisers to cost, including armor and armament, not to exceed $17,000,000 each; 9 destroyer leaders to cost, including armor and armament, not to exceed $5,000,000 each; 32 submarines to cost, including armor and armament, not to exceed $5,000,000 each; and 5 aircraft carriers to cost, including armor and armament, not to exceed $19,000,000 each."

Line 7, after the word "five," insert the word "such"; line 10, after the word "one," add the word "such."

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a question of personal privilege can not be raised in committee. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes in behalf of the President's program.

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division. There is gag rule here and the machine is operating too quickly. I want to see how many Republicans will rise in support of the President's program. I want to see how many of the leaders will vote for it. There is not a one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I know it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK of New York) there were 8 ayes and 105 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Was that the plan proposed by President Coolidge?

Mr. BLACK of New York. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is directed to submit annually through the Bureau of the Budget estimates for the construction of the foregoing vessels.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "annually," strike out the word "through" and insert the word "to."

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered at the instance of the committee, and at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The word "through" would make it in violation of the Budget law, so the report is to be made to the Budget instead of through the Budget.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. In the event of an international agreement for the further limitation of naval armament, to which the United States is signatory, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to suspend in whole or in part any of the naval construction authorized under this act.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "agreement," insert a comma and the following words: "The President is hereby directed to encourage."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, that is not the proper language. It should read "The President is requested to encourage."

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I will modify my amendment to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SPROUL of Kansas: Page 2, line 14, after the word "agreement," insert a comma and the following words, "The President is requested to encourage."

Mr. BUTLER. We accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, strike out the words "ship disasters" and insert in lieu thereof "submarine disasters."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee will now rise.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BACON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. I demand a separate vote on the Dallinger amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "year," add the following: "And provided further, That the first and each successive alternate cruiser upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament for such eight cruisers the construction and manufacture of which is authorized by this act, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DALLINGER) there were 115 ayes and 102 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and four Members rising, not a sufficient number, the yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. Evidently that can not be done.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the completion of the bill now under consideration and a bill from the Ways and Means Committee which is privileged, the House proceed to the consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole of bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is the bill from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a bill with reference to the admission of certain cattle. It will not take more than five minutes, I think.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut.

SPANISH WAR VETERANS

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a resolution which I introduced to-day, and also resolutions adopted by the Worth Bagley Camp, No. 10, Department of Georgia, United Spanish War Veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolutions:

[House Joint Resolution 242, Seventieth Congress, first session]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 16, 1928.

Mr. EDWARDS introduced the following joint resolution, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to certain veterans attending the thirtieth annual encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans to be held at Habana, Cuba, October 7 to 12, inclusive, 1928, at the invitation of the Government of the Republic of Cuba.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to provide not less than four Army transports of sufficient capacity, and as many more as may be necessary, with ample furnishings and provisions, to convey from the ports of Savannah, New York, New Orleans, and San Diego to Habana, Cuba, and return such veterans of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps and auxiliary service in the war with Spain and the Porto Rican and Philippine campaigns with proper service credentials as apply for such transportation in order to attend the thirtieth anniversary of the liberation of Cuba, on invitation by the Government of the Republic of Cuba, where the thirtieth annual encampment of United Spanish War Veterans will be held. Such transportation and subsistence shall be free of charge.

Resolutions adopted by Worth Bagley Camp, No. 10, Department of Georgia, United Spanish War Veterans

Whereas the thirtieth annual encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans is to be held at Habana, Cuba, October 7–12, 1928, at the invitation of the Government of Cuba; and

Whereas it is necessary that the veterans and their families who attend this encampment travel by steamer; and

Whereas the port of Savannah, Ga., has splendid railroad connections and other terminal facilities; and

Whereas Savannah has one of the largest camps of the Spanish War Veterans in the South; and

Whereas Savannah was one of the principal ports of embarkation in 1898 and 1899 and the Seventh Army Corps having encamped here for several months make it highly desirable for those comrades to again visit Savannah and view old scenes and renew old acquaintances; and

Whereas the residence of our senior vice commander in chief, William L. Grayson, is located at Savannah, Ga., and the designation of Savannah, Ga., as the port of embarkation would be a compliment to Vice Commander Grayson: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we respectfully petition the committee of arrangements to designate the port of Savannah, Ga., as one of the ports of embarkation for Habana, and we urge the Senators of Georgia and the Congressman from our district, Hon. C. G. EDWARDS, to support the joint resolution offered by Senator GEORGE to furnish governmental water transportation on this occasion, and further that they also use their influence in having Savannah named as one of the ports of embarkation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the chairman of the water transportation committee, William Jones, of New York, and a copy be furnished the two Senators of Georgia and the Congressman from this congressional district.

ADDRESS OF HON. FINIS J. GARRETT

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] before the Real Estate Board of New York City at the Hotel Commodore, New York City, February 4, 1928.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks I submit the following speech:

OUR GOVERNMENT

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies, and gentlemen, visible and invisible, you will not be surprised, I am sure, when I tell you that as I look upon this audience and as I look upon the list of speakers with whom temporarily I am thrown that I feel somewhat tremulous and abashed. As I look over the hall, possibly the suggestion comes by reason of the name of the city, possibly it comes by reason of the placards upon which these numbers appear, but somehow there is something reminiscent of the year I spent at the Democratic convention here in 1924. [Applause.]

Now, of course, I know very well that you did not invite me here to talk about real estate. Some years ago I had an invitation to deliver an address in a New England city to the annual meeting of the Iron and Hardware Association, and the gentleman who invited me said, "There are two conditions that we impose upon the speakers whom we invite. One is that they shall not talk partisan politics, because it is not appropriate to the occasion, and the other is that they shall not mention iron or hardware, because if we want a talk about that we will send for somebody who knows something about it. [Laughter.] I obeyed his instructions. I am sure that they must have felt that I gave all that was in me to the occasion, because they have never invited me there any more. [Laughter.]

To be sure, coming from Washington and being a Member of the House, you might expect that I would tell you something of what Congress is doing, and I would except for one thing, and that is that Congress is not doing anything. [Applause.]

I might take you into my confidence—and I know that you and the outside radio listeners will all treat it confidentially—and tell you, since the toastmaster has referred to the work done by a committee of your organization relative to tax reduction, and since, perhaps, some of you have been alarmed about that, I will console you by informing you that all the indications are that there will be no tax reduction by law at this session of the Congress. The House has done its part. The Committee on Ways and Means brought in a bill and we Democrats took it and made a pretty respectable bill of it in the House, and now they will not report it in the Senate. [Laughter.]

The rumor hath it in Washington that Captain SMOOT is unwilling to try and steer the vessel between Scylla ROBINSON of Arkansas and Charybdis NORRIS, of Nebraska. [Laughter.] And so, since I can not talk about Congress and can not talk about real estate, the question is, What shall I talk about? I suppose I will simply have to be like Plug Jenkins said his cow was. A gentleman down in my county became very much interested in a good breed of milch cattle, and he collected quite a stock. Plug Jenkins had a milch cow and he wanted to sell it, and he went to this gentleman who was building up this herd of Jerseys and told him that he had a good milch cow that he wanted to sell him, and he said, "I am interested in good stock; what have you, a Jersey?" He said, "No; it is not a Jersey, I don't think." He said, "Is it a Guernsey?" "I don't know; I don't really know what breed that cow is." "Well," he said, "Why do you say she is a good milch cow; does she give lots of milk?" "Well," Plug said, "I want to be honest with you, Tom; I won't say that she gives lots of milk, but she is a good kind of cow and gives all the milk she can." [Laughter.]

With your permission I shall venture to talk to you a few moments about some historical fundamentals of government.

One of the States of our Union has in its constitution the declaration:

"A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is essential to the preservation of individual liberty."

That is a very fine sentence and it is a fine sentiment. I think that sometimes in the hurly-burly of our busy lives we fail to recall as often as we might the fundamental things upon which our Government rests. Less than 200 years ago, strange as it may seem, when we consider all the developments of all the centuries, the art and the literature, the poetry and the romance in history; these things developed to the most exquisite refinement, yet less than 200 years ago nowhere in the world was there a government of any substantial importance predicated upon the principle of self-government. Upon the contrary through the thread of every governmental institution of importance in all the world there ran the line of the divine right of kings and of class control, the conception that by reason of birth certain individuals held the exclusive right to exercise the executive and the legislative functions in behalf of all mankind.

The striking things of the Declaration of Independence were not those referring to taxation without representation. Struggles over taxation sprinkle all the pages of history. There was nothing new about that. The new thing was that there was for the first time in the history of man formally inserted by a body having the power and the authority to assert it the doctrine that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. [Applause.] The sword of Washington made that good. The American Revolutionary War was fought under what was probably the weakest form of civil government ever instituted among men. It had no executive head. It had no judicial branch, and the legislative powers which it assumed to exert were so compassed about with limitations and restrictions as to render the old confederacy practically impotent. It had not the power to levy a single dollar for its own support, nor had it the power to send a single man to arms. As we look back upon it now and observe the tenuousness of its lines, see its weaknesses, the wonder is that under it liberty could have been achieved. But somehow, some way it was done. So weak was this Government that when the treaty of peace was written it was not therein recognized as a sovereign power. But each of the thirteen original States were specifically mentioned by name, and each stood forth among the nations of the earth clad with all the sovereign authority which any nation can possess. Following this Revolution and through the years there sprang up three conditions which necessitated a closer union and a greater central power. Two of these conditions were of a business nature; the third was political. That third we shall mention first. That was the political necessity of forming a Government which was able to protect all of its ports against outside aggression. The two business elements which created the necessity for the formulation of this National Government were: The difficulties growing out of the commerce between States; and, second, the fact that certain of the States, exercising their sovereign power to issue money, had deliberately debased their currency to the point where it had brought universal distress and widespread desolation.

Those three things occasioned the call for the Constitutional Convention issued finally by the Continental Congress, and in May 1787, 55 men, composed of much of the intellectual, moral, and financial aristocracy of America, assembled themselves together in Philadelphia and labored for a period of nearly four months. There was nothing new, my friends, about the idea of a confederacy. All history is filled with tales of leagues and alliances and confederations between sovereign powers, and all history is cluttered with their wrecks. Through the dim and misty corridors of the ages there stroll and swarm the ghosts of innumerable dead confederacies, "the hollow wraiths of broken fame." The weakness of these confederacies of the past lay in the fact that the governments formed under or by them were not coalitions of their peoples, but combinations of their States. That was the weakness of the very confederacy under which these men were laboring, and because they knew both history and the current law they proceeded to do a new thing in the world.

They proceeded to bring forth a Government which is at once a confederacy and a Nation. It draws its power and holds it authority, not from the States as States but from the people of the States. Its perpetuity, so far as the Constitution is concerned, does not depend upon the whim or caprice or even the intelligent will of the States as States, but upon the wish and the wisdom of the peoples of the States. It exerts its authority, it enforces its decrees not only upon the States as States but upon the people of the States. [Applause.]

And so, for the first time in the history of man, they created a condition under which those then living and those who were to come after were to exist under two distinct forms of government, each sovereign within its sphere. That was the uniqueness of the instrument called the Constitution of the United States. Its greatness lay in two things: First, the nicety with which they divided the powers between the three great bodies, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial; and, second, in the nicety with which they divided powers between the Nation itself and between the States, the people of which composed that Nation. [Applause.] That was the system which these men dreamed and which they put forth, which has come down to us for 140 years. Those men from the wilderness carved out this new thing in the world of men. They, for the first time, gave to democracy, through the means of a Republic, which is the only method by which democracy can be made practical, "a local habitation and a name."

I have sometimes wondered what would happen if overnight these governments of ours could be destroyed, and not only destroyed but all the law books and all the histories that bear account of them wiped from the shelves, and we were suddenly called upon in the morning to bring forth a new form of government. What sort of States, what sort of a nation would we build? It is an interesting speculation, but we do not have to speculate about it. If those men who wrote that Constitution could come here to-night and walk down a single block of this great city, how many things would they see about them concerning which they would have to obtain information from a 10-year-old child? You could hear Washington or Hamilton or Madison or Franklin, the greatest scientist in his day, inquiring, "What is that? What is that I see going by?" Why, that is the automobile. "And what is that I hear?" That is a human voice coming over thousands of miles through what we call the radio. "And what is that I see in the air?" That is the airplane with which man is challenging the eagles for mastery of the empyrean.

Oh, how many things those men would see that would be mysterious and strange to them. But, thank God, they did know how to build States and lay them as the beams of the chamber of a nation. [Applause.] And we have their handiwork as our heritage.

We do not have to speculate about what we would do—we have it. Men coming up out of the wilderness building a nation for 3,000,000 people which has met all the exigencies and the requirements of social evolution and political development until it covers 8 and 40 sovereign States with 120,000,000 of people. We do not have to speculate; all we have to do is to preserve. I think we ought to preserve.

It is as important now to keep separate the legislative and the executive and the judicial branches as it was 140 years ago. [Applause.]

It is as important now as it was in the beginning to maintain with scrupulous fidelity the respective powers and duties of the State and the Nation. [Applause.]

It is trite to say, but it should be said often, nevertheless, that there is too much of bureaucracy. Government by bureaucracy is worse than monarchy. In a monarchy you can at least know who to hang or shoot, but in a bureaucracy, with their divided powers, you can not find the individual upon whom to place responsibility for abuses to freedom and wrongs to liberty.

I do not wish to think of the Republic as a painting upon canvas, the color of which will fade in the sunlight or the fiber of which will rot in the rain. I wish rather to think of it as a great mosaic composed of 8 and 40 imperishable gems, each lustrous with its own local beauty and color, so cemented together with love and law and human reason as to be itself indestructible, however violently human passions may beat against it. [Applause.]

HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT, SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the hydroelectric development in South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks on the hydroelectric development in South Carolina I want to call to the attention of the Members of the House and to the citizens of this great Republic the wonderful strides

South Carolina, the State I have the honor to represent in this great lawmaking body, is making.

On January 1, 1927, according to a statement issued by the Federal Power Commission, it was shown that South Carolina had advanced from eighth to fifth place among the States in hydroelectric development.

You remember in a previous Congress I called your attention to the proposal of the building of a very large electric-power plant in Lexington, S. C., my district. I am glad to say to you that this project is a reality now, and when it is completed bids fair of putting South Carolina right around the top as an electric-power State.

South Carolina to-day leads all other States in the manufacturing of cotton. Since the commencement of the building of this tremendous power plant manufacturing concerns of every type are moving into our State.

Why not? If you and your friends want to locate in a section where the climate is ideal the year around, where labor is cheap because of its efficiency, where strikes are unknown, where the taxing powers have given recession to manufacturing interests that want to locate their plants, come to South Carolina.

The following article, written by George Garner, in the Manufacturers Record will be very interesting in connection with the building of this great power project. It deals with the wonderful strides along the above lines in and by the State of South Carolina:

SOUTH CAROLINA'S $20,000,000 HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT UNDER WAY—A GREAT ENTERPRISE INDICATIVE OF THE SOUTH'S EXPANSION OF POWER FACILITIES TO SUPPLY ITS GROWING INDUSTRIAL NEEDS

Two thousand men, toiling day and night, except Sunday, week after week, without intermission, are working to complete by 1930 a hydroelectric project on the Saluda River near Columbia and Lexington, S. C., which will cost $20,000,000, and will constitute one of the greatest waterpower enterprises in the United States and also will embrace some of the largest features in their way of all such construction in all the world. The project is owned by the Lexington Power Co., a subsidiary of the General Gas & Electric Corporation, New York City, of which W. S. Barstow is president, and associated with which are T. C. Williams, of Columbia, originator of the project, and the firm of Murray & Flood, engineers, New York.

No more convincing illustration of the industrial development of the South in the last few years can be found than in this prodigious enterprise. First visioned in 1903 by G. A. Guignard, of Columbia, it remained a fascinating, but only an idle, dream for years, because the South in general and that section in particular provided no adequate industrial market for consumption of the power. Now, so great is the market that not only were contracts signed for sale of the power even before this work was started, but also another project is in prospect in South Carolina which will exceed this in magnitude.

So it is that 2,000 men now are working to complete a project which the designers claim is to become the base-load plant for the superpower system of the Southeast—a plant not only to supply the power needs of its area, but also to reinforce, when needed, the power systems of North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Alabama, and Georgia.

As this is written the Saluda River at Dreher Shoals, where the monster plant is to be established, is an unobtrusive stream meandering southeastward through the center of the State, through an area of mixed woodland and farms. On completion of the work it will be the feeder for a lake, of its own creation, 33½ miles in length, 14 miles wide at the broadest point, and twice as large in area as Lake George, in New York State. And in this lake will be impounded 100,000,000,000 cubic feet of water—sufficient to provide a discharge of 5,000 cubic feet a second for half a year even without a drop of inflow. Incidently, the lake formed by the great Roosevelt Dam in Arizona is 25 miles long and from 1 to 2 miles in width.

For the creation of this lake, an earth dam will be constructed, 206 feet in height and 7,989 feet long, or 1.5 miles. Eleven million cubic yards of earth fill will give it the largest cubical content of any dam in this country, and it is described as the largest earth dam in the world. To build such a dam of concrete, it is explained, would be an economic mistake, as the returns would not nearly measure up to necessary dividends on the investment; so an earth dam will arise, reinforced with an impervious dirt core, fully as substantial, say engineers, as the strongest concrete dam ever constructed. Upstream the slope will be 3 to 1, with a face of riprap, while downstream the slope will be 2½ to 1, with a riprap toe. The maximum head will be 180 feet and the minimum 118 feet, with an average head due to operating schedule of 165 feet.

As construction of the power plant is regarded as a comparatively easy work, that will be held in abeyance until probably the last step in the project. Plans provide for initial installation of four units of 43,500 horsepower each, with an ultimate installation of six units and an aggregate of 261,000 horsepower.

"In effect, 2,600,000 willing, obedient slaves will be put to work, without necessity for feeding them," said Mr. Williams.

And what will be the contribution of this huge plant to the industrial development of the South? It will furnish power for the Broad River Power Co. system, from Union in the north to Denmark in the south, with ramifications through a great territory. It will add thousands of kilowatt-hours of service to the great system of the Southern Power Co., which covers northwest South Carolina and the western half of North Carolina. It will reinforce the power product of the Carolina Power & Light Co., whose system extends from the southeast corner of South Carolina up through the eastern half of North Carolina, and terminates at Danville, Va. Among these three systems will be distributed millions of kilowatt-hours a year from the Saluda River plant, with the Broad River Co. entitled to first call on the supply.

In this great territory already scores of flourishing cities and towns are served, with literally hundreds of plants turning out many varieties of products, and to these will be added scores of other towns and cities to which industrial enterprises will be attracted by abundance of cheap power, abundance of contented and efficient labor, raw materials of many kinds, and ample transportation facilities.

Further than this, it is expected by the promoters of the project that Lake Murray, as the great lake will be known, in time will be bordered with summer resorts and homes, golf courses, and clubhouses. Already reports on investigations by Federal and State health authorities describe the area as extremely healthful, free from fevers, and from disease-breeding mosquitoes. Also, a town is arising near the site and engaging homes for officials of the company already form an attractive nucleus, and, incidentally, it may be said that a church was one of the first structures erected.

In general charge of this great work are the W. S. Barstow Management Association, New York, and Murray & Flood, with A. S. Crane, of the J. G. White Management Corporation, New York, as consulting engineer. Reeves Bros., of Birmingham, Ala., are building the four great pipe lines which first will divert the river from its present course while the dam is constructed and later will connect with the generators, and G. H. Newton, vice president of the concern, has been in personal charge. The contract for excavating for the pipes and incasing them in concrete and for the construction of the dam was awarded to the Arundel Corporation, Baltimore, and the steam shovels and similar machinery are provided by the Anderson Construction Co., Asheville, N. C. Arthur R. Wellwood, of New York, represents Murray & Flood, although W. S. Murray and Henry Flood, jr., of that firm, are constantly on the spot, and Theodore C. Hamby, of Columbia, is chief assistant to Mr. Wellwood. And of real interest and significance is the fact that in the small regiment composing the engineering force a majority are graduates of southern schools and colleges, such as the University of South Carolina, Clemson University, and the Citadel, Mr. Wellwood having endeavored to utilize South Carolina's young talent wherever possible.

For the construction of this great project it was found necessary first to divert the course of the Saluda River, so that the dam might be thrown up and a core trench be excavated in bedrock for its entire length. Lines were laid for four monster steel pipe lines, each 986 feet long, 16 feet in diameter, and on this part of the work the contractors are busy as this article is written. The soundness of the entire work is well illustrated in this particular feature. In excavations blasted well into bedrock cradles are laid, and on these are placed the lower half circumference of the pipes in 8-foot section lengths. The upper halves then are set and the two are riveted together, with strips riveted to cover the longitudinal seams. Two hundred and twenty-four thousand rivets are needed in this work. On completion the pipe lines, which will be used as penstocks upon completion of the project, will be entirely incased in concrete. At the same time a concrete arch is being constructed parallel with the pipes, 47 feet 7 inches wide and 22 feet 4½ inches high, to supply the two generators which in time will supplement the original four which the pipes will feed. The Arundel Corporation early in February had approximately 500 men on its share of the work, in addition to 2,000 other workers.

At present the work is largely confined to the laying of the pipes and construction of the concrete arch and clearing the lands for construction of the great dam. In obtaining an adequate area for the project, Mr. Williams, for the constructors, was obliged to purchase 122 square miles, including over 600 farms and millions of feet of timber, yet in not one transaction were condemnation proceedings required, "and the sellers still are our friends," said Mr. Williams.

On completion of the pipes and the concrete arch and the diversion of the river's course work will be started on the dam, for which surveys already have been made. For the full length of the dam a trench will be excavated in bedrock and will be filled with fine earth as a base core to prevent seepage. Huge piles of earth then will be thrown up for the dam, and these will be washed down and the fine earth will build up as a core, through which the water will not be able to percolate. The maximum width of the dam at the base will be about a quarter of a mile, and the crown will carry a concrete road over 30 feet wide. The dam will contribute $7,000,000 to the total cost of $20,000,000 for the project.

The spillway will be of the gravity section type, with three gates, each 50 by 25 feet, and the head on the crest will be 25 feet.

"This is not a selfish proposition," said Mr. Williams, "for the benefit only of the companies now interested, but is designed, through interconnections, to be of help to others if an emergency should arise."

As an instance of the unexpected mishaps which may occur at any moment, Mr. Williams cited a case in which a heron, flying low, had touched a set of wires with one wing and another set with the tip of the other wing, thus causing a short circuit and cutting light and power from a large industrial community many miles from the power house.

"And so, in event of trouble from low water power or shortage of coal or other plant trouble for any company, the hook-ups can be opened and service be maintained by other systems," Mr. Williams added.

Fully as interesting as observations of the work at present is the background of the project, in which one sees a practical "dreamer" looking forward through the years for conditions to develop which would justify the construction of such a plant. First struck by the possibilities in 1903, Mr. Guignard kept acquiring property at the site till his holdings ran to high figures, and this land he carried for 23 years, with its burden of taxes and loss of interest. So in 1926 he approached Mr. Williams and said he would like to sell the land, and Mr. Williams at once started surveys himself and made borings and soundings and river-flow calculations. Convinced of the value of the proposed project, Mr. Williams laid it before Mr. Murray, whose engineers, after thorough examination of Mr. Williams's figures, reported them accurate and sound, and this report was verified by Mr. Williams himself after long and careful investigation.

Meanwhile, about 1910, Mr. Barstow's interests had acquired a water-power site near at hand, though with much lower head than that acquired from Guignard by Mr. Williams and Mr. Murray. So in this knowledge Mr. Williams and Mr. Murray went to Mr. Barstow to talk business.

"You have one site and we another," said his visitors, in effect; "now, either we will sell ours to you or we will buy yours or we will join forces with you in establishing a great plant."

Mr. Barstow was interested, and after investigation elected to join with Mr. Williams and Mr. Murray in one great enterprise. Great banking concerns, asked to finance the project, sent an expert to look over the ground and on his report undertook the task.

Thus the great enterprise rests on three foundation stones: The vision of Mr. Guignard, the engineering knowledge and business acumen of Mr. Williams, and the faith and enterprise of Mr. Murray and Mr. Barstow.

And even before this project is completed, in 1930, it is expected that an even greater project of the same kind will be well under way in South Carolina, thus further raising the State in horsepower standing among the States of the Union. According to the Federal Water Power Commission, California led all the States in water-power development on January 1, 1927, with New York second, Alabama third, Washington fourth, South Carolina fifth, and North Carolina sixth. South Carolina advanced to its present place from eighth in 1910, and now is said to be supplying about 5 per cent of the total water power of the United States.

THE DALLINGER AMENDMENT TO THE NAVAL CONSTRUCTION BILL

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Dallinger amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the Dallinger amendment to the naval construction bill I tried several times to obtain the floor to indicate why I regarded the enactment of the amendment of my distinguished colleague and esteemed friend, who represents a district adjacent to mine, a most desirable thing, and worthy of the support of every Member of the House, regardless of whether they are in agreement or not with the major feature of the bill itself.

I regard it of supreme importance that we provide for the maintenance and upkeep of our Naval Establishment by keeping as nearly as practicable a completely organized, experienced, and specialized force of tradesmen at the various navy yards at all times. The Government can not expect to obtain the best obtainable staffs of ship fitters, boilermakers, machinists, electricians, coppersmiths, molders, pipe fitters, welders, plumbers, and other mechanical service help in its hour of need at a moment's notice. It requires considerable time, and it is imperative that when a capable and efficient staff of naval vessel workmen are assembled that that organization be kept intact. At present the Navy Department finds it necessary to discharge a large group of navy-yard employees at the completion of every substantial piece of building or repair work, with the result very detrimental to the morale and efficiency of the thousands of tradesmen upon whom the Navy depends to do its ship construction and repairing.

For many years our Naval Establishment did practically all of their own building and overhaul work, but of recent years but little of the actual ship constructing is being done at other than private yards. It has been stated that this change is in the interest of economy. I challenge the soundness of this contention. To the contrary, I find that the change largely has been in the interest of private shipbuilding corporations.

Navy yards, while allowed to bid on ship-construction jobs, are not permitted to submit bids at the actual minimum dollar estimated to do the work, but rather are required to add to their estimates a certain percentage for overhead and depreciation of the yard, dock, and other facilities used in the work.

There is no good reason for the addition of this latter, since the Government is forced to stand the cost of replacement made necessary by deterioration whether the yard facilities and docks are used or not.

It is woeful waste rather than economy to continue the policy of handing out handsome naval-construction plums to private interests when expert, highly specialized staffs of workmen, plus the facilities to do the work, are available at navy yards. I am not an advocate of putting the Government in business as a general scheme, but I do feel that millions of the people's money, necessarily tied up in navy yards, could be saved by putting these facilities to fullest use, rather than allow their deterioration and depreciation while idle.

The Boston Navy Yard, located in my district, was established at a first cost of $35,600,000, and to realize that only about 25 per cent of this huge investment is being capitalized at the present time is something that should cause everyone with the best interests of the country at heart to think, and to devise means of curtailing this tremendous wasteful expenditure of the public funds. I utterly fail to perceive how anyone can rationally argue that there is economy in turning over to private concerns work that can be done as satisfactorily at our navy yards.

The constructive economical remedy is the providing for, as the Dallinger amendment does, that Congress insist on a fair share of our naval-construction work being allotted to the navy yards. This does not eliminate competitive bidding, which is essential to the proper and legalized awarding of contracts, since all of the navy yards are required to bid against each other for each job. The standard of workmanship, detail, economy in production, and time required for the proper completion of work at the various yards is kept strictly checked by the Navy Department, and in the assignment of jobs the more efficient yards, as they should, are awarded the bigger proportion of the proposed outlay of work.

I am for, and believe every logical, thinking, peace-loving, true American wants, a first-class Army and a first-class Navy, knowing that our continued happiness and security depend on the psychological effect upon the nations of the world of our having an adequate national defense. The Dallinger amendment not alone is helpful in assuring that the Government will have available at all times the most efficient ship-construction personnel, and thus assure our ships being built as skillfully as any that may be built anywhere, but it at the same time is a piece of constructive economy for Uncle Sam.

Incidentally navy-yard employees who have given the best years and efforts of their lives in the Government service should not be subjected to temporary lay offs and oftentimes outright discharges because of the irregularity in assigning work to the navy yards. If all possible work germane to the maintenance and replacement of our Naval Establishment was being done at navy yards, the present serious unemployment situation among the navy-yard workers would not be manifest. We owe it to those faithful and efficient employees who serve in the country's time of need to provide them with stable employment and not merely at intervals when the private shipyards are not able to handle certain of the Government's naval construction work.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. RATHBONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the agricultural situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RATHBONE. Mr. Speaker, we have reached a crisis for American agriculture. That means a crisis in the life of the Nation, for the prosperity of the American people must ultimately in large measure rest on the prosperity of the American farmers.

It will not do to blind ourselves to the truth. Never for many years past has there been such deep-seated unrest as exists at the present time. The distress of the farmers of our State and Nation is real, widespread, and far-reaching in its consequences. Already the depression of agriculture has seriously affected the prosperity of the city and of the entire country. President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, estimated the other day that 5,000,000 men were unemployed. The complaints of business men are heard on all hands.

This is an inevitable outcome of the bad conditions continuing for a period of years among the farmers, who constitute approximately one-third of the population of our country.

The purchasing power of those who till the soil has been so greatly reduced that the market for the products of American industry has been disastrously crippled and curtailed.

Moreover, the influx of population from the country to the city has been steadily going on. This means increased competition among those seeking employment in the cities, resulting in large unemployment. If these conditions are permitted to continue, they can not help but affect most seriously the progress and prosperity of our entire people.

Those who live in the cities, as well as those who dwell on the farm, should realize the great truth that the American eagle can only soar on two wings—industry and agriculture. If our noble national bird is wounded or crippled in one of those wings, it must go fluttering helplessly to the ground. The prosperity of industry and the prosperity of agriculture are one and inseparable.

The Middle West, that great interior section of our country stretching from the Allegheny-Appalachian Mountains on the east to the Rocky Mountains on the west, and from the Gulf of Mexico on the south to our northern boundary, is the center of our agricultural interests and the bread basket of the Nation. In it are produced from 60 to 90 per cent of most of the basic products required for the sustenance of our own people and many millions across the seas. This section, so dependent upon the welfare of agriculture for its development and prosperity, has been an especial sufferer through the distress of agriculture. In population and wealth, outside of a few great cities, this section of our country, in its natural resources the richest of all parts of the United States, has not been keeping pace with the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

A reapportionment of Congress is certainly not far distant. When this comes it will inevitably result in a relative loss in representation, and therefore in political influence, in Congress and elsewhere of the Middle West.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that some constructive and adequate measure be passed at once and before it is too late the purpose and effect of which will be to place the American farmer on a plane of equal opportunity and prosperity with other classes of our people.

I urge my colleagues to give the utmost consideration to the problem of agriculture, which I believe to be the most momentous that confronts our country to-day. I call upon Congress to rise to meet the situation and to do its utmost to restore the American farmers to the position which they have heretofore so honorably filled in the life and prosperity of this Nation.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the pending bill and to incorporate also a short letter published in the Washington Post on the Bacon antipilotage bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks on this bill for the reason that I will not be able to vote upon it to-morrow—Saturday—as a matter of great importance will call me away from Washington. The engagement was made several days ago, and it is utterly impossible for me to break it at this time. Of course, nine out of ten Members of the House believed that we would pass this bill as amended before we adjourned this—Friday—evening.

I am glad to say that I voted for the Dallinger amendment, which is a part of the bill, and can not be eliminated therefrom, as on the separate vote taken in the House before adjournment that amendment was adhered to by the majority of the House.

I have always believed in our country having an adequate Army and an adequate Navy. To be without either from a standpoint of national defense is about as foolish as it would be for a great city like New York to be without a police department or a fire establishment. Elaboration in this case would only be the work of superrogation. I feel though that proper naval survey should be made of the whole naval situation and a thoroughly scientific system, both with respect to the character of the naval equipment we should have and the location of the shore stations, so that they might be able to render the greatest possible service when on some tremendous day the country will have to call all of them into action. The country is at a loss right now, or rather in a mental fog, as to whether it is advisable to continue building battleships, cruisers, and destroyers or to give thought and effort and action to the building of submarines and airplanes. Most men who have given the matter any thought whatsoever believe that the navy yards and arsenals and other shore establishments are not so geographically situated so as to make for a real service in case of a naval engagement with any trans-Atlantic power. As a matter of fact, the logic of the statement made by Mr. MADDEN, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the statement made by Mr. BUTLER, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, with respect to the Dallinger amendment lead unerringly to the conclusion that the navy yards in Boston, Brooklyn, and Philadelphia, which are the major ones, ought to be abandoned.

Both these gentlemen substantially stated that it would cost, if the Dallinger amendment were adopted, a million dollars each more per vessel than if they were built in private shipyards. If the building of ships is more costly in the navy yards than in private yards, then the repair of ships is more costly in navy yards than in private yards. That conclusion follows as the night does the day. But with all due deference to these two well-informed gentlemen who are the chairmen of two of the most important and powerful committees of the House, I feel that they are probably mistaken as to the facts upon which they have founded such a judgment.

I believe in a first-class navy, and feel that the American people want one. What is a first-class navy should not be so hard to determine. I am reminded in this connection of an expression used by a well-known Member of the House some years ago who stated that a second-class navy was like a second-class poker hand. They both would lead to the destruction of their possessor. This statement I need not elaborate either as the truth of it is obvious.

Inasmuch as ocean and river pilotage are absolutely essential to the safety to naval and commercial vessels, I feel that, as a matter of information, it is my duty to incorporate and make a part of these remarks a letter which appeared in the Washington Post under date of March 14, 1928. The judgment of the writer of that letter is so fundamentally sound and his views so clearly and convincingly expressed that I feel I can without hesitation commend them to the thoughtful consideration of those who will do me the honor to read these remarks:

[From the Washington Post, March 14, 1928]

THE BACON ANTIPILOTAGE BILL

To the EDITOR OF THE POST:

SIR: With reference to the above subject, permit me to suggest that this is a matter which should be considered thoroughly from more angles than one.

Owners of vessels and cargoes can be compensated for their loss in dollars and cents by the insurance companies who carry their risks, but human life can not be restored nor justly compensated for through lack of a pilot who is a specialist in preventing disasters to shipping, and to cargoes and passengers who happen to be on board the vessel.

Maryland has on its statute books a law exempting American vessels from the services of a pilot, but it is as dead as old King Tut, and why? Because the first and only vessel that took advantage of this law was lost with its entire cargo in Chesapeake Bay. The facts are, the bark Pettingill was towed from Baltimore, Md., without employing a pilot and was anchored by the tugboat on the north side of the Horse Shoe to await favorable conditions for proceeding to sea. A terrific northeast storm arose and swept the Pettingill onto the Horse Shoe, and in going across this shoal the heavily laden vessel foundered and became a total wreck—not a trace ever being found of her crew of 14 men, who were, of course, drowned like rats.

If the Pettingill had been under the skillful guidance of a pilot, she would have been anchored on the south side of the Horse Shoe, where the bottom is better holding ground, and she would have undoubtedly ridden safely through the gale, but the lives of these 14 seamen were ruthlessly sacrificed to ignorance and greed.

If the Bacon bill is passed, it will most certainly invite retaliation by the countries among the "favored nations," and American shipowners laboring under handicaps and discrimination at foreign ports may naturally expect to encounter still more.

Pilotage is a part of the police powers of the State and has frequently been dealt with by many high judicial bodies both in this and foreign countries, Judge Curtis having said:

"It is local and not national, and it is likely to be best provided for not by one system or plan of regulation but by as many as the legislative discretion of the several States deem applicable to the local peculiarities of the ports within their limits."

It is therefore plainly a matter for State and not National legislation, and I may add that it is looking for a little too much of the American master when we expect him to have an intimate knowledge of the dangerous currents and shoals of every port he has to enter.

I therefore trust that Congress will consider human life of more moment than the dollar and leave the regulation of pilots to the State, where it rightfully belongs.

ALBERT S. J. JAKEMAN.

RICHMOND, VA., March 10.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, March 17, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We are deeply grateful, our Father of mercies, for the witnesses and leaders of Thy holy truth, who have recovered the broken purposes of men and their faltering faith and led them forth into the promised land of a blessed assurance. They have lighted the higher ideals on the altars of their souls. They flung aside as unworthy of reckoning the trials of earth and brought release, convoy, and guidance homeward. We praise Thee for the chivalry of soul and boundless faith of Ireland's patron saint. His mission and message, his character and life have become the inspiration of countless numbers who are now walking in the pathway of the Master. Inspire our humble lives with the same immovable conviction, fortitude, and sacrifice, that we, too, may hold aloft the threefold torchlight of faith, hope, and love. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a resolution to present from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, in order that the order of business of the day may be known as early as possible, I now renew my request of yesterday, that upon the completion of the bill from the Committee on Ways and Means, which is privileged, and after the consideration of a little resolution from the Committee on Rules, the House as in Committee of the Whole may proceed to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar that are unobjected to, beginning at the star.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that when the special order has been completed and bills considered from the Committee on Ways and Means, and a resolution from the Committee on Rules, it shall be in order to take up bills on the Private Calendar that are unobjected to. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Up to what time?

Mr. TILSON. We can determine that at the time. We shall not work too late.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think he ought to give us a little time at the end of the week to catch up with our mail and our office business after we have done so much work as we have done this week?

Mr. TILSON. I should have been willing to adjourn over to-day if we had finished the Navy bill yesterday. However, there has been a great deal of pressure for the Private Calendar to be considered. Members who have bills on that calendar are anxious that the calendar be taken up.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We could have finished the naval construction bill last evening if the gentleman from Texas had not demanded the reading of the engrossed copy.

Mr. BLANTON. I demanded the reading of the engrossed copy so as to prevent the bill from passing last night, and thus give the administration a chance to move to reconsider the Dallinger amendment, which will cost us $10,000,000 or more.

Mr. TILSON. The floor leader voted against the amendment, and so might not be permitted to make that motion.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman should find some Republican loyal enough to his administration who will move to reconsider.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that there is no quorum present, and I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and sixty Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 50]

Cramton	Hull, Tenn.	Michaelson	Wood

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-seven Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

The bill (H. R. 11526) was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUTLER, Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 287, noes 58.

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. BLANTON demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-four Members have risen, not a sufficient number.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a special order for to-day, and I now ask unanimous consent that immediately following the special order the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut that following the special order the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to couple with that a request for about four minutes to talk on the S–4, which sank just three months ago to-day, and to read a short poem.

Mr. TILSON. I shall not object, but I ask that my request be put to the House.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know on what subject the gentleman from Idaho intends to address the House?

Mr. TILSON. As I understand, it is in regard to the naval bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Idaho is always instructive and knows his subject.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have coupled with that request that I be allowed five minutes after the gentleman from Idaho concludes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I am making my request and I ask that it be submitted. Other gentlemen may make their requests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that following the address of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG], under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION OF THE MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, memorializing the Congress of the United States to investigate the Department of Agriculture, and to prevent the Department of Agriculture from making unwarranted statements that will affect the price of cotton. This resolution was passed by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a resolution of the Senate of the State of Mississippi with reference to the agricultural situation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, memorializing the Congress of the United States to investigate the Department of Agriculture:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, memorializing the Congress of the United States to investigate the Department of Agriculture and to prevent Department of Agriculture from making unwarranted statements that will affect the price of cotton

Whereas the Department of Agriculture of our Federal Government had gained the confidence of the farmers and the business men of the South; and

Whereas that confidence was justified so long as that department of the Federal Government restricted its activities to its duties delegated to it by Congress; and

Whereas during the fall of 1927 the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States exceeded his authority by predicting the trend of low prices in the near future for cotton and cotton products and by issuing a statement which appears to have been erroneous concerning cotton consumption that was ill advised and apparently from private or interested sources, all of which were nothing more than guesses; and

Whereas as a result of said statements or guesses of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the trend of prices and consumption of cotton the farmers throughout the South lost millions of dollars; and

Whereas the making of such statements or guesses is improper and is a vital question to the entire South: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Mississippi (the House of Representatives concurring herein), That it is the sense and the opinion of the Legislature of Mississippi, as the representatives of the people of this State, that the entire people of the State of Mississippi disapprove of said unwarranted activities of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture in making statements or guesses as aforesaid, and that we respectfully memorialize Congress to condemn such activities and to make an investigation of said department or to take such steps as may appear necessary to prevent a recurrence of such activities on the part of the Department of Agriculture of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent immediately to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of Agriculture and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing resolution is a true and correct copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, passed by the senate on the 23d day of February, 1928, and by the house of representatives on the 9th day of March, 1928.

H. E. KING,
Secretary of the Senate.

THE PRESENCE OF SECRETARY WILBUR ON FLOOR OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in order that no issue may be raised with my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] I beg to say that I never made any statement to the Associated Press concerning Secretary Wilbur's appearance on the floor. What I did do was this: I went to the Secretary of the Navy and told him personally that while I was against his bill, and I had spoken against his bill, I had no objection to his coming here to the House to hear what I had to say or anybody else had to say. I made no statement to the Associated Press for the purpose of raising any issue with my colleague.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. I made the statement to the Members of the House of Representatives that I was glad to see any Cabinet member come to the House, but I did not think he was using good judgment to come here for the purpose of helping to enact legislation. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma differ with me in that statement?

Mr. McKEOWN. I think this about it: I think if the Secretary comes here for the purpose of trying to force legislation through, it would be highly improper, but if he comes here for the purpose of getting information it would be all right. That is my proposition exactly. [Applause.]

STABILIZATION OF THE PURCHASING POWER OF MONEY THROUGH THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] for 20 minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and at the close thereof to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the Federation of British Industries with regard to the ability of the Federal Reserve Board to regulate the value of gold; and a statement by Prof. Bertil Ohlin, published in June, 1927, in regard to the control and development of the world price level by the Federal Reserve Board; and a statement by Professor Kemmerer, of Princeton University, who, with the approval of the Department of State and the Federal Reserve Board, has been assisting several foreign nations to establish a gold exchange standard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to print therewith the three documents he has specifically mentioned. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the gentleman discusses in his speech these different articles?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I mention them in my address and I want to have them printed at length, so the Members of the House may have the opportunity of reading the entire text of the articles from which I will quote. They are not very long.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, if the gentleman says it is necessary, for a proper understanding of what he has to say, they ought to go in, and I shall not object.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. That is the purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, my purpose in addressing you at this time is to call to the attention of the Members of Congress and the country the importance of enacting legislation having for its purpose the stabilization of the purchasing power of our dollar, which I believe to be the most important legislation with which I have become associated during the nine years of my service in Congress as a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee. Unless the purchasing power of the dollar is stabilized no investment is safe; the borrower and the lender, the employer and the employee, the business man, the professional man, the farmer, and the laboring man must all run the risk of the loss and ruin that come from the use of a circulating medium of fluctuating value.

Prior to the adoption of the Constitution we had as a medium of exchange. money or credit, authorized by the various States which brought such chaos that when the Constitution was written it directed Congress "to coin money and regulate the value thereof."

Congress only in part has carried out this mandate. It directed the coinage of money and has provided that the unit of value shall be the dollar composed of 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, but it has taken no steps to regulate the value of gold, so we have been left in the same position in regard to a regulation of the value of money as we would be with reference to regulating the length of a yard if, when declaring that 36 inches shall constitute a yard in measure, we had failed to define the length of an inch.

The value of our dollar as now based on 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, must be determined by its purchasing power; that is, by the amount it will purchase of those commodities that people generally must exchange for it.

Until the establishment of the Federal reserve system we had no means of stabilizing or regulating the purchasing power of our money or of gold upon which our money is based, but with the establishment of that system we made possible the regulation or stabilization of such purchasing power.

We gave to the Federal reserve system the right through what is called its "open market operations" to buy and sell Government securities. If they buy Government securities they add to the member bank reserves that much money, upon which the banks may increase the circulating medium ten times as much, and if they sell the same they decrease the circulating medium by ten times the reduced reserves of member banks.

They have the power to regulate the "rate of discount" that shall be charged by the Federal reserve banks to the member banks for money so advanced or loaned, which regulates largely the cost of money. They have the greater power through the influence exerted upon the policies and affairs of the member banks and of their customers by means of direct representations, publicity or otherwise, to control to a great extent the expansion or contraction of credits.

Thus, they have the power to regulate the volume of money in circulation, the cost of money, and the contraction and expansion of credits. I maintain that no greater powers were ever given by any government, save perhaps the power of life and death and of personal liberty. These great powers were in the original act given without direction as to the purpose for which they should be used except that it was provided that rates of discount "shall be fixed with a view to accommodating business and commerce," which if interpreted literally might mean that as long as eligible paper should be offered for rediscount, that unlimited funds might be advanced thereon, which would mean continued inflation and finally deflation and chaos. I believe that such great powers should be used for the stabilization of the purchasing power of our money.

These great powers have not always in the past been so used. In 1919, after the war, when we should have endeavored to establish stability, such course was not followed. Through expanding the volume of money, lowering rediscount rates, and permitting the extension of credits, the purchasing power of the dollar was allowed to decline, because the prices of what the dollar would purchase rose to the highest level in our history. Then an attempt was made to increase the purchasing power of the dollar by deflating the prices of the commodities it would buy and a deflation followed that caused a greater loss to the people of this country than the entire cost of the war. Dr. Wilford King, economist of the National Bureau of Economic Research, the recognized authority on the wealth of the Nation and national income, has said that this change in the purchasing power of the dollar, bringing inflation and deflation, amounted to a loss to the Nation of not less than $40,000,000,000. We all know that thousands of bankers and business houses failed, labor was without employment, and a million farmers lost their farms.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, some of the Members are talking, and I ask for better order. The gentleman from Kansas is making a very fine speech upon one of the most important subjects that will come before this Congress; it goes into the very fundamentals of economics and is of great importance to all the people of this country, and I wish to hear what he has to say.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not charge that the great powers given the Federal reserve system were used intentionally to inflate or deflate the purchasing power of money or, what is the same thing, the prices of commodities in general that the dollar would buy. I believe that those in control of the system did not at that time realize to what extent the great powers that had been placed in their hands could be used toward stabilization, but they have rapidly acquired such knowledge.

On January 18, 1926, I introduced H. R. 7895, directing that—all the powers of the Federal reserve system shall be used for promoting stability in the price level—

meaning the price level of the average prices of commodities in general that the dollar would buy, and on February 20, 1926, I addressed the House, explaining the purposes of the bill, accompanied by a chart showing the depreciation of the purchasing power of the dollar through the rise in prices which began in 1915 at a point set at 100, rose to the time of the armistice in November, 1918, to 208, then went on up until May, 1920, when it reached the peak of 251; then followed an increased purchasing power of the dollar, through a falling level of prices, to January, 1922, when it reached a low level of 141, then rose to 164 in March, 1923, fell to 147 in June, 1924, and then rose to 166 in March, 1925. I advised the House of the hearings that were soon to be held by the Committee on Banking and Currency on the measure and expressed the hope that the members of the House would not hesitate to present any objections to such legislation, as I had been for seven years a member of the Banking and Currency Committee trying to build up and strengthen our financial system, had faith in the Federal reserve system and would not want to do anything to weaken or impair it. At the hearings which began on March 24, 1926, I explained to the committee that the purpose of the bill was an effort to carry out the direction of the Constitution, wherein Congress was directed "to coin money and regulate the value thereof," meaning its purchasing power as determined by the amount it would purchase of those commodities that people generally must exchange for it. I expressly stated that I anticipated that an attempt would be made to prejudice the country to believe that the purpose of the bill was to fix prices, but that nothing of the kind was contemplated, and stated that I expected as a result of the hearings it would be desirable to change the phraseology of the bill to better carry out the purpose intended. The hearings continued through March, April, May, and until Congress adjourned in June, 1926, were reopened in February, 1927, and at their close I presented various revisions of the bill that had been suggested as a result of the hearings and the response to form letters that I had sent out to large groups of economists, financiers, bankers, and the members of the Federal reserve system, stating that it was my intention during the vacation of Congress to make a further study of the suggestions received and of the hearings and at the Seventieth Congress to introduce a completed bill; and to such purpose I asked the suggestions and cooperation of all those who should also study the legislation proposed.

In spite of this repeatedly expressed purpose of the bill and the intention to perfect it, its purpose has been variedly misrepresented by those who did not study its purpose or did not wish to do so, but the best financiers and economists of the Nation, within and without the Federal reserve system, were before the committee, with the result that the hearings, now bound in two volumes, are said to be the best textbook on the Federal reserve system yet published, and have been translated in three foreign languages.

Since the last session of Congress the cooperation I requested of those interested in and who have made a deep study of our financial system has met with a generous response, and I wish I was at liberty to give credit to those students of finance and economics who have given me so generously of the results of their years of study. I wish, however, particularly to make acknowledgment to the services that have been rendered to me by Dr. J. R. Commons, professor of economics in the University of Wisconsin, who has employed his six months' leave of absence to come to Washington and assist me in the study and preparation of the bill I introduced on the 6th of this month, being H. R. 11806, and to which I most earnestly invite the serious consideration of my colleagues in Congress and the great people whose interests they serve.

To those who may still continue to doubt that the powers of the Federal reserve system can be used to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar, to the end that inflation and deflation may be minimized, I first call attention to the fact that for the last three or four years the powers of the Federal reserve system have been used with fair success toward stabilization as set forth in the hearings referred to.

I also direct their attention and that of the Members of Congress and the country to a statement prepared and published by the Federation of British Industries in July, 1924, in which they maintained that at that time the purchasing power of the pound must be either increased 10 per cent in order that the British price level might be forced down to the American price level or that the value of the purchasing power of the American dollar must be decreased by 10 per cent in order that the American price level should be raised to equal that of the British price level. They discussed the serious damage to the business of that country resulting from deflation, and pointed out that by whatever means the gold standard was to be regained, the stability of this standard must be in constant jeopardy unless some agreement was reached with the Federal Reserve Board for regulating the value of gold until such time as it again came into international use, and in conclusion, emphasized that the most pressing need of industry was for stability, which could not in their opinion be achieved by any one country acting alone, but only by a general return of the principal trading nations of the world to a common monetary standard.

To the fact that the Federal reserve system has not only been successful in stabilizing the purchasing power of our dollar at home, but has met the suggestion of Europe that it had the power to regulate the value of gold and is using its powers to bring stability to other nations, I refer to the address of the Right Hon. R. McKenna, formerly Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain and now chairman of the board of directors of the Midland Bank (Ltd.), of London, the largest privately owned bank in the world, made before the general meeting of the stockholders of that bank on January 24 last, and which with the consent of the House I caused to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 24, 1928, beginning on page 3565, in which he took the position that through the powers given the Federal reserve system America is able to control the price level and stabilize the purchasing power of her dollar, I quote:

The American price level is not affected by gold movements, but is controlled by the policy of the reserve banks in expanding or contracting credit. It follows, therefore, that it is not the value of gold in America which determines the value of the dollar, but the value of the dollar which determines the value of gold. The conclusion therefore is forced upon us that in a very real sense the world is on a dollar standard.

Let me also quote from Prof. Bertil Ohlin, one of the great economists of Europe, in an article on "The future of the world price level," copied from a Swedish journal and printed in the Index, of London, in June, 1927, in which he said:

The influx and efflux of gold in the United States has thus lost all influence upon the monetary purchasing power and the price level of that country. The question of granting credit is instead determined by what the Federal Reserve Board considers suitable from an economic point of view. This implies nothing less than a revolution in the monetary system not only of the United States, but of all countries with a gold standard. The control and the development of the world price level has passed entirely into the hands of the Federal Reserve Board and governors.

In the bill I have now introduced and upon which hearings will start before the Banking and Currency Committee on Monday next, I have sought to impose no direction to do the impossible or that will mislead anyone as to the extent of their powers. I have simply laid down the direction that—the Federal reserve system shall use all the powers and authority now or hereafter possessed by it to maintain a stable gold standard, to promote the stability of commerce, industry, agriculture, and employment, and a more stable purchasing power of the dollar, so far as such purposes may be accomplished by monetary and credit policies.

It is then added—relations and transactions with foreign banks shall not be inconsistent with the purposes expressed in this amendment.

I have no objection to the Federal reserve system making possible our increased trade relations with other countries by assisting them to return to the gold standard, but there are many kinds of gold standards, and I am asking for a stable gold standard, which is important to our proper trade relations and to the fact that we have become the creditor nation of the world. But I insist on the policy of "America first," to the end that the powers we have conferred upon the Federal reserve system shall be used toward the purpose of stabilizing our own dollar. This policy will turn out to the advantage of foreign countries as fast as they are able to return to the gold standard.

It is next provided in the bill that—whenever any decision as to policies is made or whenever any action is taken by the Federal reserve system tending to affect the purposes of stabilization that such decision or action and the reason therefor shall thereafter be published by the governor of the Federal Reserve Board at such time and place and in such detail as may be deemed by him to be most effective in furthering such purposes and at least once each year in the annual report of the Federal Reserve Board to Congress.

This question of publicity has had much study by those in and out of the Federal reserve system who have cooperated with me in the preparation of the bill. Some want no publicity, while others want immediate and unrestricted publicity of every act of the Federal Reserve Board. Personally, I believe that those who are performing a public service for the people will be met with the best cooperation and secure the best results through publicity of the use of the powers given them by the people, but information as to the details concerning decisions and steps taken in the carrying on of a great monetary system might often be untimely and bring disastrous results. So, after a close study and comparison of the arguments presented by those taking different views of this question, I have decided that until we have proceeded further in working out and establishing settled problems and policies of the use of the great powers of the Federal reserve system, that the publication of decisions, acts, and reasons of changes in policies by the Federal reserve system shall be made by the governor of the Federal Reserve Board at such time, place, and in such detail as he may decide.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. As I understand it, the general purpose of the gentleman is that of stabilizing the buying power of money?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Absolutely, as far as that can be done by monetary and credit means.

Mr. BURTNESS. And to maintain stable price levels?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; as far as possible.

Mr. BURTNESS. And, if I understand the purpose of the gentleman correctly, he is approaching that question in so far as the actions of the Federal Reserve Board may affect the problem and trying to direct the Federal Reserve Board toward the obligation of keeping in mind the importance of maintaining a stable price level.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman's proposal now, however, does not intend to cover the entire field, but only in so far as it is affected by the activities of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. That is all I hope to accomplish at this time.

Mr. BURTNESS. And I take it the gentleman is also interested in maintaining a stable price level by other means; for instance, the one proposed by the bill which I am sponsoring as well as the one proposed by the bill sponsored by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] and others?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; I am interested, but neither proposition is a part of my proposed bill.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. There was some confusion and I do not know whether I correctly understood the gentleman. Did I understand the gentleman in response to the question of the gentleman from North Dakota to say that his bill embodied a provision to have a fluctuating quantity of gold in our gold dollar or this "monkey on a grapevine dollar"?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I hope you certainly did not. The gentleman from North Dakota was calling attention to the fact that these various bills sought to reach the purpose that I am seeking in bringing stability to the purchasing power of money. However, they are certainly seeking to procure that result by a different plan.

Mr. WINGO. With respect to the publicity proposition, does the gentleman's bill propose that the Federal Reserve Board or each Federal reserve bank shall call in the newspaper reporters each morning and tell them how they are running the business of the member banks?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No; the bill expressly provides that the governor of the Federal reserve system shall publish what they do and the reason for doing it at such time and place as he may think best.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is going to leave it to the governor or to the board?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Of course, I leave it to the governor, but he will naturally do as he does with respect to everything else, first consult with the board.

Mr. WINGO. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true and if it has not come within his observation that we have had three different theories in the board as to what they were doing at one time. Has not this happened within the last three years?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Well, I do not want to pretend to say what the board has said or published.

Mr. WINGO. Was it not disclosed in the hearings upon the gentleman's bill in the last Congress that we had three different members of the board that thought they had done three different things and the board could not agree on what they had done or the reasons for it?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will say in answer to my friend that I do not think the Federal Reserve Board in the past has always agreed as to what powers they had or the end to which those powers could be used. I think this has very often been true, but I am hoping and believing, as they proceed to study the great powers that have been given them by Congress, they will finally reach a time when they can agree on what ought to be done and how the stability of the purchasing power of our money can be accomplished by these great powers.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is a lawyer, is he not?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; and I claim to have made a living practicing law.

Mr. WINGO. I want to ask the gentleman this question: The presumption is, when you come to interpret your act or any other act, that Congress intended to do something, that it intended to make some change in existing law. Is not that the presumption?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. In some cases.

Mr. WINGO. Now, there is a further presumption, whenever you authorize a board or an administration official to accomplish certain purposes, that that carries with it the implied power to do everything that is necessary or incidental to bringing about the accomplishment of that purpose; is not that true?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes. I think that is correct.

Mr. WINGO. If you authorize in the broad language of your bill the Federal Reserve Board to do what you seek to have done, do you not repeal many restrictions of existing law and say to the Federal Reserve Board, "We will make you the dictators of credit in this country; you may do anything under the sun you want to do, just so you think it is necessary to stabilize the price level." Is not that what you do?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No; I do not. I do not give them, and do not seek to give them, a particle of power in addition to what they have. I only want them to use the great powers we have given them to the purpose of stabilizing the purchasing power of the dollar, as far as the same may be accomplished by monetary and credit policies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I have lost so much time in answering questions I ask the House for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. There is the very point involved here. The gentleman says he does not give them any additional power, but tells them to use the power they already have to bring about a certain result. Now, I appeal to the gentleman's legal knowledge and his information as to the rule of interpretation of courts, if you do not change that power, but yet direct them to use that power to bring about certain results, then you do give them implied authority to use all the power they have now to bring about that result, regardless of present limitations.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I want them to use all the powers they now have to continue to do one of the things that I think the Federal reserve system was created for—to bring about stability in business, stability in industry, labor, agriculture, and all things affected by changes in the purchasing power of money.

Mr. WINGO. If it becomes necessary in order to carry out this direction, if it becomes necessary to violate the present restrictions, would your bill give them that power?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. No, sir.

Mr. WINGO. What becomes of the rule of interpretation that where you direct an administrative officer to do a certain thing it carries with it the power to do it?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It only directs them to use the powers they now have to promote the stability of the purchasing power of our money, as far as such purposes may be accomplished by monetary and credit policy.

Mr. WINGO. If they have the power and you do not remove the restrictions, what more do you do than to centralize the power in the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do not increase or take away from them their powers. I simply direct that they shall use the powers they now have toward a policy of stabilization of the purchasing power of our money.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. As I understand, you state that we have not fixed the value of the 25.8 grains of gold in the dollar. Is it not a fact that the intrinsic value of the 25.8 grains of gold is determined by the average cost of production?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes; but its real value as money is its purchasing power.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is a question of the value of credit and not the definition of credit that you want to deal with?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I want to stabilize the purchasing power of money, of which credit is a part, and I have cited to you the great economists who say that we have that power. [Applause.]

It is further provided in the bill I have introduced that in order that the utmost development of the use of the powers of the Federal reserve system toward stabilization of the purchasing power of our dollar may be maintained, and that every caution and safeguard may continue to protect our monetary policies as now controlled by the Federal reserve system, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks are authorized and directed to make and to continue investigations and study for the guidance of the system's policies and to report to Congress from time to time, and at least annually, the methods pursued and the conclusions reached resulting from such investigations, with any legislation which will in their judgment best promote the purposes of the act. There are set up in detail various propositions toward which their investigations and study are to be directed. One of these propositions is the means of measurement of the purchasing power of the dollar. Various price indexes have been worked out as a means to this end, each of which have its adherents. Personally, I favor a wholesale commodity price level, and I believe the index number of prices prepared and published by the Department of Labor would best serve in the measurement of the purchasing power of our dollar. But because of the difference in opinion among eminent economists and financiers, both within and without the Federal reserve system, I thought best to name no price index in the proposed legislation that should be used as a measurement or standard of value of the purchasing power of the dollar, but have left that question as one to be studied and investigated as provided in the bill, as well as various other questions affecting the purchasing power of money and the ability of the Federal reserve system to control the same, including the influence exerted by changes in the supply and demand for gold, either actual or prospective, the existing and proposed means, both national and international, having for their aim the stabilization of agriculture, commerce, industry, employment, and the purchasing power of money.

In fact, while laying down as a basic policy that the great powers of the Federal reserve system shall be directed toward stabilization of the purchasing power of the dollar, the bill directs that study and investigation which will the greater develop the extent to which such powers can be used, keeping in mind always the policy that the interests of our own Nation shall be first in point of consideration, and it directs that the result of such investigation shall be reported to Congress, that the people may be advised of the degree of compliance with the purposes of the bill, to the end that the instability of the purchasing power of that which they exchange in daily intercourse with each other for those things which sustain life and give comfort and enjoyment shall not bring disaster through inflation or deflation. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks I submit the following statement by the Federation of British Industries, made in July, 1924, with regard to the ability of the Federal Reserve Board to regulate the value of gold; the statement of Prof. Bertil Ohlin, published in June, 1927, in regard to the control of the development of the world-price level by the Federal Reserve Board and governors; the statement of Professor Kemmerer, of Princeton University, who, with the approval of the Department of State and the Federal Reserve Board, has been assisting several foreign nations to establish a gold exchange standard:

FEDERATION OF BRITISH INDUSTRIES,
July, 1924.

STATEMENT

The Federation of British Industries understand that the discount rate of the Bank of England is normally varied for reasons connected purely with the ordinary functions of the bank as the central banking institution of this country, and the federation would regard any attempt to question the full discretion of the governors and court of the bank in the exercise of these functions as highly improper and undesirable.

It has, however, recently been proposed in prominent financial quarters that the bank should employ the bank rate, not to exercise a normal and legitimate control over the flow of money, but for the purpose of an arbitrary restriction of credit, in the hope that this action might lead to the rapid restoration of the pound sterling to parity with the American dollar.

The federation believe that proposals for such an extranormal employment of the bank rate are a reasonable subject for comment by the representatives of those whose interests may be seriously affected.

As the principal organization of British manufacturers, it has been their custom to lay the view of industry before His Majesty's ministers when action affecting industry is under contemplation, and His Majesty's successive governments have invariably been ready to receive their views.

In a similar manner, the federation feel bound when proposals gravely affecting the welfare of industry may possibly be under the consideration of the governor and court of the Bank of England to lay the views of manufacturers before them in order that they may be given due weight in conjunction with those of other interests.

They, therefore, have the honor to submit the following brief statement of views on the present position:

In the first place, the Federation of British Industries desire to state clearly that in their opinion, since Great Britain is the principal international clearing house both for money and goods, a general return to the gold standard by the principal industrial countries would be greatly to our benefit. It would not only insure stability to the more important exchanges but would go a long way toward restoring the pre-war mobility of international trade and a reasonable elasticity to the internal currency system of this country. In the present condition of the world, however, it does not appear likely that a general return to a gold standard and a free gold market can be anticipated in the immediate future. The question, therefore, must be approached on the assumption that this country will be the first to return to a gold standard and to abolish restrictions on the movement of gold. In this case a return of the pound sterling to parity with the dollar would be involved as a preliminary step.

Since the position of the exchange between two countries ultimately depends on the relative level of prices in the two countries, and since British prices are at the present moment about 10 per cent above American prices, a return to parity with the dollar would seem to imply either—

(1) That the British price level must be forced down to the American; i. e., that this country must increase the value of the pound by 10 per cent; or

(2) That the American price level must rise to the British; i. e., that the value of the dollar must be decreased by 10 per cent.

(1) THE RESULT OF AN ATTEMPT TO INCREASE ARBITRARILY THE VALUE OF THE POUND STERLING

It appears to the federation that any attempt to raise the real value of the pound sterling by 10 per cent by a process of arbitrary credit restriction would, in the present state of credit and in view of the present trend of trade and prices in this country, involve the most serious consequence to industry.

The immediate consequences of an increase in the value of a monetary unit, produced not by an increase in the efficiency of production but by a manipulation of credit, are well known and generally admitted. They include, among others—

1. Serious temporary dislocation of trade and an increase in unemployment due to the effect upon producers, traders, and buyers of the certainty that the general level of prices will fall.

2. Severe industrial friction and dislocation, brought about by the fact that in order that goods may be produced at the new lower level all the items entering into the cost of production, including wages and salaries, must be adjusted to this level.

3. Severe loss to all holders of existing stocks of commodities and to all who trade on borrowed money; i. e., virtually the whole trading and manufacturing community.

4. The strong probability of a severe check to export trade, since the improvement in the exchange value of sterling would be likely to precede and to move faster than the adjustment of internal prices.

(2) POSSIBILITY OF A RISE IN AMERICAN PRICES

Although, as in all matters dependent on conscious human action, it is impossible to make any certain prediction that America will be unable to prevent a rise in her general price level, it appears to the federation improbable that she will be able to do so indefinitely when account is taken of the extremely strong influence which her recent accumulations of gold must be exerting. The Federal Reserve Board has already admitted in a recent report that special steps had to be taken last year to prevent this happening, and as these measures involved, amongst others, the selling of the great bulk of the open-market securities of the Federal reserve banks and the substitution of a substantial amount of gold certificates for ordinary bank notes, they can hardly be repeated on a large scale.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

There appear, therefore, to be two alternative methods whereby a return to the gold standard by this country might be secured. One to take immediate steps to force up the value of the pound sterling, the other to wait in the hope that forces already known to exist will bring down the value of the dollar. The first, since it would necessitate a degree of interference with the normal operations of trade and finance that would admittedly throw a serious strain upon industry, at least for a time, does not readily commend itself to manufacturers, whereas the second, which would involve no interference with monetary conditions beyond that to which industry has been accustomed in the past, has a much greater attraction.

The federation realize that while a waiting policy is to the more immediate interest of those engaged in industry, it may be urged that other needs make it inexpedient that we should wait indefinitely for an upward movement in the American price level. They would point out, however, that by whatever means a gold standard is regained the stability of this standard must be in constant jeopardy unless some agreement has been reached with the Federal Reserve Board for regulating the value of gold until such time as it again comes into general international use. In the interests of trade stability it is preferable that such an agreement should precede rather than follow any return to a gold standard by this country.

In conclusion, the federation desire to emphasize that the most pressing need of industry is for stability, and that this can not, in their opinion, be achieved either by an expansion or by a contraction of credit by any one country acting alone, but only by a general return of the principal trading countries of the world to a common monetary standard.

[Extract from "The future of the world price level," printed in Index, English ed., June, 1927, pp. 7–9]

By Prof. Bertil Ohlin

Of far greater importance to the monetary system than the change that may already have taken place in this respect is, however, the redistribution of the world's gold stocks. The United States have become the possessors of a quantity of gold—in fact, considerably more than half of the gold stocks in the world—by no means proportionate to what is required to cover their circulating medium. Simultaneously with this accumulation of gold a significant reform has taken place in America's monetary policy. In order to prevent this vast influx of gold from causing a corresponding expansion of credit, which would necessarily involve a violent inflation, the Federal Reserve Board has been compelled entirely to disregard the size of the gold reserves in determining the question of credit.

The influx and efflux of gold in the United States has thus lost all influence upon the monetary purchasing power and the price level in that country. The question of granting credit is instead determined by what the Federal Reserve Board considers suitable from an economic point of view.

This implies nothing less than a revolution in the monetary system not only of the United States but of all countries with a gold standard. The control of the development of the world price level has passed entirely into the hands of the Federal Reserve Board and governors.

Should that board deem it advisable to pursue a liberal credit policy, resulting in the raising of the American price level, the consequence would be that a portion of the superfluous gold would flow to other countries. There it would cause an expansion of credit and gradually a raising of the price level all along the line.

If, on the other hand, it is considered in the United States that a reduction in prices would be advisable, then other countries are compelled to follow suit. Otherwise their price level would eventually be too high, their balance of payment would become "adverse," and their gold would begin flowing into the vaults of the Federal reserve banks. This the European central banks can not, in view of their note cover, permit, but are forced to carry out a restrictive credit policy that rapidly reduces the price level in Europe as well.

Other countries are thus compelled to let their price level vary on about the same lines as the American. If the Federal Reserve Board resolves upon raising the value of gold, i. e., upon deflation, then its reserves increase, while, vice versa, a lowering of the gold value in the United States can be forced upon the whole world in connection with a reduction in the excessive gold reserves of the Federal reserve system.

The Federal reserve system has effected a "valorization" of gold comparable to the Brazilian coffee valorization. By releasing a portion of the surplus reserves it causes a drop in the gold value throughout the world, i. e., a rise in the world price level. By increasing the reserves it brings about an increase in the scarcity of gold and a fall in the world price level.

It should, however, be observed that the primary change is always a variation in the American price level. The resultant increase or reduction in gold stocks is something secondary, something that is permitted to take place in order that the national monetary policy may not be disturbed by the movements of gold which under present circumstances are of no very great concern to the United States.

We find a recent example of this in the last two years' fall in prices, both in America and Europe. During this period the United States, after some exportation of gold in 1925, have been importing gold in quite considerable quantities. No greater mistake could be made than to regard this general deflation of prices as a result of a reawakened desire for gold on the part of America. What possible reason would the Federal Reserve Board have for increasing their already inconveniently large gold stocks? The real reason, on the contrary, is that the price level in the United States has been dropping—partly, no doubt owing to an insufficiently liberal credit policy, and partly owing to heavy crops and increased industrial productivity—and that other countries have reluctantly followed suit in this fall in prices, their central banks being forced by the threatening efflux of gold to adopt a restrictive credit policy.

The result of the present inquiry is, primarily, this: (1) The pre-war gold standard was in reality an example of "managed currency," in which the control acquired a semiautomatic character because the central banks were all actuated by practically similar traditional principles of credit policy, gold cover, etc., and because the public habits of payment underwent no violent changes; (2) the post-war gold standard is an entirely different kind of "managed currency" in which the control is exercised by the Federal Reserve Board and the boards of the leading Federal reserve banks on the basis of considerations which have nothing to do with either gold cover or gold movement, but are chiefly dictated by the possibilities of keeping production going at full pressure.

One can hardly avoid a third conclusion—that no inquiries into the probable extent of the gold production and demand are of much use for determining the course of prices during the next 10 years. Variations in these factors are not likely to induce the Federal Reserve Board to abandon its present policy, but will only lead to either an increase or a reduction in the quantity of gold stagnating in the vaults. As regards the course of prices later on, it is possible that the Federal reserve system's reserves will not prove sufficient to cope with the forces emanating from fluctuations in the gold production and demand. To estimate the strength of these forces after 10 years or so is, however, at present only possible with such wide margins of uncertainty that the conclusions can hardly as yet evoke much interest.

The development of the world price level during the next decade is a question of American monetary policy. The decision regarding its stabilization lies in the hands of the leaders of that policy. It is a tremendous responsibility. A real deflation would render Europe's economic recovery, if anything, still more difficult. It may well be asked whether the Federal Reserve Board is not partly responsible for the tardy improvement of the past few years. This question—to what extent the fall in prices during 1926 and 1927 can be regarded as a deflation likely to result in economic depression—must, however, be made the subject of a separate analysis.

STATEMENT OF PROFESSOR KEMMERER, OF PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

For present-day conditions, the gold standard is probably the best monetary standard that has yet been devised; and I believe strongly that countries that have not yet returned to the gold standard should do so at the earliest possible moment. The gold standard is a long step forward from any kind of fiduciary money standard with which the world up to the present time has had any experience; and yet the gold standard itself is far from perfect and the world sooner or later must either learn how to stabilize the gold standard or devise some other monetary standard to take its place.

There is probably no defect in the world's economic organization to-day more serious than the fact that we use as our unit of value, not a thing with a fixed value but a fixed weight of gold with a widely varying value. In a little less than a half century here in the United States we have seen our yardstick of value, namely, the gold dollar, exhibit the following gyrations: From 1877 to 1896 it rose 23 per cent; from 1896 to 1920 it fell 70 per cent; from 1920 to September, 1927, it rose 56 per cent. If, figuratively speaking, we say that the yardstick of value was 36 inches long in 1879, when the United States returned to the gold standard, then it was 45 inches long in 1896, 13½ inches long in 1920, and is 21 inches long to-day.

Under present-day conditions, currency instability is a gigantic engine of wealth redistribution, an engine that works night and day, and works blindly. It seizes wealth here and gives it out there. It takes property from one class, without any rhyme or reason, and gives it to another class; and then, in a short time, it takes it from the second class and gives it to a third. At one time, through inflation, it despoils the creditor, the laborer, the endowed educational and benevolent institution, the widow and the orphan, and enriches the debtor, the business man, and the speculator; at another time, through deflation, it enriches the creditor, the endowed institution, and the laborer, and robs the active business man and the debtor, including all of those who are trying to pay off mortgages on their homes and their farms. Whether inflating or deflating, this great engine of wealth redistribution is always pouring forth the poisonous gas of social and political discontent. Dr. Willford I. King recently estimated that in the United States alone, within a period of a few years, the unstable dollar thus blindly robbed some and enriched others to the amount of something like $40,000,000,000—certainly a conservative estimate when one considers the volume of credit operations now taking place in this country.

JAMES M. BECK

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I present a report from the Committee on Elections, No. 2, as to the right of JAMES M. BECK to a seat in this House. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] has minority views that he wishes to file on the bill. I think he is not on the floor at the present moment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I was unable to hear what the gentleman was saying. Does the gentleman say that the gentleman from Tennessee desires to file minority views?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And the gentleman from Michigan intends to give the minority an opportunity to file those views?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Yes. I understand he is ready to file them immediately.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And the gentleman from Michigan will consult the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Yes; I already have consulted him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is referred to the calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the afternoon the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] may have the right to file minority views.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Make it until 12 o'clock midnight.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. I will accept that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] may have until 12 o'clock midnight to file minority views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDING PARAGRAPH 34, RULE 11

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 107

Resolved, That paragraph 34 of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives be amended by inserting after the word "departments," in the second line, a comma and the words "independent establishments and special commissions."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this session in the revision of the rules the House made certain changes and set up certain committees and defined their rights and jurisdiction. We created the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which took the place of several committees that existed in the previous Congress. In defining the jurisdiction of this committee we used the language of the jurisdiction of the several committees in the previous Congress. Later the chairman of this committee, Mr. WILLIAMSON, of South Dakota, called attention to the fact that his committee did not have jurisdiction over expenditures of the independent offices and commissions. Of course, it was intended at the time the committee was set up that it would have that jurisdiction, and the Committee on Rules have unanimously voted out this resolution. It simply amends and gives to that committee this additional jurisdiction over independent offices and commissions.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. I notice that it says "jurisdiction of independent offices and special commissions."

Mr. SNELL. I am going to offer an amendment with reference to that. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "and" where it is used the second time, strike out the word "special," so that it will read "independent establishments and commissions."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SNELL: In line 4, after the word "and" where it appears the second time, strike out the word "special."

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman was of opinion, as we all were, that the language carried before was sufficient to give this jurisdiction at the time.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is true. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

REMISSION OF DUTIES ON CERTAIN CATTLE

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 217, providing for the remission of duties on certain cattle which have crossed the boundary line into foreign countries, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. I ask unanimous consent that we consider the joint resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution is on the Union Calendar, and the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 217

Resolved, etc., That, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the duties are hereby remitted on (1) cattle which strayed across the boundary line into any foreign country, or were driven across such boundary line for pasturage purposes only, and which were admitted to the United States under bond at any time between June 9, 1927, and the date of the enactment of this joint resolution, and (2) their offspring and increase so admitted during such period; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to cancel any such bond.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is of minor importance except to the owners of a certain number of cattle. The House is familiar with the law which authorizes cattle to be driven across the border into Mexico for the purpose of pasturage, to be returned in eight months. The disturbed conditions in Mexico, as reported by Secretary of the Treasury—and the Secretary approves this bill—prevented this regulation being strictly complied with. The cattle were admitted under bond. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends the adoption of the resolution, and as far as I know there is no objection to it. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Is the delegation from Texas agreed on this?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the Clerk will call the Private Calendar, beginning with the star number, No. 204.

ED. SNYDER, WILLIAM PADDOCK, ED. STRIKE, AND A. S. HEYDECK

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2137) for the relief of Ed. Snyder, William Paddock, Ed. Strike, and A. S. Heydeck.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, in order to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] what the circumstances were, so far as the gentleman knows, surrounding the death of McCarthy. Was he killed the same day the bond was given? What were the circumstances?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, on the day this McCarthy was to be delivered to the court he made threats that he never would be tried. He went off into the bush a mile or a mile and a half in the wastes of Alaska and put a bullet through his head. His corpse was not discovered until a year and a half afterwards.

Mr. HOOPER. And in the meantime the bond had been forfeited and the Government had taken the money?

Mr. UNDERHILL. In the meantime the money had been turned into the Treasury of the United States and it is only by special act that it can be recovered.

Mr. HOOPER. And, of course, the money was paid upon the theory that he was still living, because of his unexplained absence?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, what identity was there of the body?

Mr. UNDERHILL. They found certain portions of his clothing, which were identified, and his watch was identified, and also an automatic revolver which was known to belong to him.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And his bondsmen were private individuals?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, to Ed. Snyder, $300; to William Paddock, $400; to Ed. Strike $50; and to A. S. Heydeck, $50, in the remission of a bond which was forfeited by the failure of John McCarthy, of Tenakee, Alaska, to appear before the district court at Juneau, Alaska, on October 6, 1922, the said John McCarthy being deceased on the date he was cited to appear.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$300" and insert "$285.92"; line 7, strike out "$400" and insert "$381.23," and, in the same line, strike out "$50" and insert "$47.65"; and, in line 8, strike out "$50" and insert "$47.65."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MARY NEAF

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3194) for the relief of Mary Neaf.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to get some information and refresh my recollection. This Private Calendar is called up to-day rather unexpectedly. What effort was made to ascertain the identity of this Richard Neaf?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Every effort was made by the War Department. A statement was filed with the committee in the form of letters from the chiefs of police of various cities.

Mr. HOOPER. And the gentleman is satisfied that all due efforts were made?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes. He had run away from home without the consent of his parents, and he did not want them to know where he was.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mary Neaf, mother of Richard Neaf, who served under the name of John Ryan as a private in the One hundred and sixty-seventh Company, Coast Artillery Corps, shall be considered as the duly designated beneficiary of the late Richard Neaf, alias John Ryan, under the act approved May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1903.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On line 8, strike out the figures "1903" and insert "1909 (35 Stat. L. 108, 735)."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM THURMAN ENOCH

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4993) for the relief of William Thurman Enoch.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I do not intend to object—I want to refresh my recollection about the matter. Will the gentleman from Texas say that this was purely accidental, and that the injury to Enoch was incurred without any negligence or fault on his part?

Mr. HUDSPETH. He was not killed; he was wounded. He was a watchman or toll keeper at the bridge, and there was an immigration official in charge of a Mexican prisoner, so the record discloses, and it was about 6.45 o'clock in the evening, when the traffic was congested, so the record also discloses. The prisoner tried to escape and the immigration official fired at him and by accident shot the inspector. The report on this bill was prepared by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BECK], but the evidence shows that this man was wounded. The statement is here that shows clearly that he was wounded, due to no negligence on his part. He was there collecting the toll for the El Paso Electric Co. I know nothing of the facts personally. What information I have has been sent me, or from the department here.

Mr. HOOPER. Are not the damages here larger than are usually allowed except in cases of death?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not know. I have not been on the committee very long; but I believe the policy of the committee has been in the past to recommend $5,000 for death claims.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The amount of damages is largely based on the average compensation. The average compensation was allowed in this instance, and the maximum settlement would amount to $5,000, so the commission states.

Mr. HOOPER. The gentleman's committee has these claims under its jurisdiction, and the gentleman understands the subject very well. Does the gentleman not think that the amount ought to be reduced?

Mr. UNDERHILL. This is the report of the committee, and I could not divulge anything that occurred in the committee.

Mr. HOOPER. I do not want the gentleman to go into that.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He recovered sufficiently, so that he is still doing his regular work. But he had a permanent injury.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The report I have here as a part of the bill states his injury is 75 per cent.

Mr. HOOPER. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Thurman Enoch, of El Paso, Tex., the sum of $5,000, on account of permanent injury sustained by him through the negligence of Frederick W. Warner, an employee of the United States.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On line 5, after the word "appropriated," insert "and in full settlement against the Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman in charge of this bill here? I would like to ask him a question for information. I see in the notes that I have here it is stated that from the records of the Navy Department Mathews now is entitled to relief under the Veterans' Bureau, and the department is not in favor of the bill. I am not in favor of the bill, but in the absence of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the matter be passed over for the time being, until I can confer with the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will say that I do not intend to object to this bill, but I would like the gentleman from Minnesota to refresh our recollection about it and briefly state the reasons for this legislation.

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to validate the homestead entry of Clifford J. Turner. He was allowed to make an entry erroneously, according to the records of the land office, and upon the payment of the value of the timber on the land this bill will validate his entry. There is no objection by the Land Office.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied with the gentleman's explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entry, Crookston No. 018072, now Cass Lake No. 013632, made by Clifford J. Turner on August 31, 1923, for the south half of the northeast quarter, northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 32, township 144 north, range 37 west, fifth principal meridian, on which patent erroneously issued December 1, 1925, be, and the same is hereby, validated, upon payment by said entryman of the appraised price of the timber thereon as provided by the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill involves a rather disputed question, and as I do not see present the Delegate from Alaska, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over for the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

JOE D. DONISI

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 924) for the relief of Joe D. Donisi.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like in this instance to call upon the chairman of the Committee on Claims to explain briefly this proposed legislation. There are some questions about it which I might want to ask him as he makes his explanation.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, this matter is of such importance that the gentleman is justified in making inquiries in reference to the same. This is a radical and new departure from the policy of the committee and it is in direct conflict with the recommendations of the former Secretary of War. It is to pay a boy a certain sum for damages sustained by having his hand blown off by a dud which had been left on the grounds of the citizens' training camp in the State of Ohio.

We are beginning to have in the Committee on Claims a number of such cases. They do not all involve the explosion of a shell, but it may be the kick of a mule, being run over by a truck, or something of that sort.

The committee has taken this position, and I think it is a very sound and wise one: The Government invites the youth of the country to enter these citizens' training camps in order to fit them for future service in time of emergency, and the training they receive at these training camps undoubtedly makes them better citizens and they are better equipped for the battle of life.

In spite of all the safeguards with which the Government can surround them there are bound to be accidents in these large camps, with 2,000, 3,000, or 4,000 boys attending them, full of the hot blood of youth, skylarking in their leisure moments, and earnestly working in the working hours to perfect themselves along the line of military activities.

Now, if the Government invites these boys and the boys give up their vacations and play period, they are surely doing their share, and the Government ought to guarantee to the parents and to the boys that if by any accident whatever, whether it is the fault in part of the boy himself or whether it is the fault of some officer, or whether it is just simply an unavoidable accident, a boy is injured that he should not be compelled to go through life entirely handicapped, but that the Government should, so far as it is within its power, help him along by taking care of him as it would take care under similar circumstances of any employee of the Government. So the committee has come to the conclusion that it is only just, equitable, fair, and for the best interests of the country that we take this step in advance and establish this policy on the part of Congress until the Army is ready to write into the law the same provision which the Navy has written into the law placing their Naval Reserves under the provision of the Federal compensation act. We do not feel it is at all fair to discriminate between the two branches of service, and until the Army is ready to act and grant this equity the committee is going to stand back of its recommendations to Congress that they establish some medium of relief.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I did not catch any statement as to what is the basis of compensation.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The basis is the Federal Employees' Compensation Commission's table of rates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Joe D. Donisi, who sustained injuries while on duty at Camp Knox, Ky.

LIEUT. COL. WILLIAM J. SPERRY

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think the resolution ought to be amended by striking out the whereas? I have no objection to it otherwise.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no objection to that if it accomplishes the same purpose.

Mr. HUDSON. If the gentleman is willing that the whereas clause be stricken from the bill, I am willing to let the bill pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the widow of Lieut. Col. William J. Sperry lost her house and all personal belongings in the recent flood in Vermont: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a duplicate Congressional Medal of Honor to William J. Sperry, late lieutenant colonel, Sixth Vermont Infantry, Civil War, who was awarded a Congressional Medal of Honor for most distinguished gallantry at Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865; and that the duplicate medal be presented to the widow of the above-mentioned officer.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out the preamble.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSON: Strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FANNIE M. HOLLINGSWORTH

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1795) for the relief of Fannie M. Hollingsworth.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to grant permission to Fannie M. Hollingsworth to divert, through a 1-inch pipe, for use for domestic purposes and fire protection on the property hereinafter described, water from a spring in a westerly direction from the said property approximately 450 yards, the said spring being the only one within such distance of the house on the said property, which is described as follows: Lot 4 of section 15 in township 33 north of range 18 west of the Montana principal meridian, in Flathead County, State of Montana, containing approximately 11 acres, according to the Government survey thereof, subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and subject further to the right of said Secretary to terminate any permit granted hereunder when, in his judgment, the particular water shall be needed by the Government in the administration and protection of Glacier National Park.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDWARD GIBBS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2174) for the relief of Edward Gibbs.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say that this is one of a class of bills we are constantly getting, and, of course, getting from the Committee on Military Affairs, for the correction of the records of soldiers. It seems to have been the policy of the House of Representatives for some time past at least to permit this to be done in the case of Civil War veterans. While I do not intend to object to this bill, at the same time I think the House ought seriously to consider the policy of extending this sort of clemency to soldiers of a war so recent as this one. I have already had some occasion to speak about this matter in the House and probably will have to again, because these bills are constantly coming up on this calendar. I think, as far as possible, there should be protection thrown about bills of this kind. I do not know whether the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON] is present or not, but I am going to offer an amendment which I think will help to clarify the situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Edward Gibbs, late of Company F, One hundred and sixty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, serial No. 93993, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 21st day of August, 1918: Provided, That no pay, allowances, or benefits shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to apologize to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON]. I did not see the gentleman when I looked around. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOOPER: On page 1, in line 11, after the word "held," strike out the word "as" and insert "to have"; strike out the words "prior to" and insert "because of."

Mr. HOOPER. That will make the bill read:

Provided, That no pay, allowances, or benefits shall be held to have accrued because of the passage of this act.

Mr. THOMPSON. I object to the amendment.
Mr. HOOPER. Then I object to the bill.
Mr. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the gentleman from Ohio must have misunderstood the effect of the amendment. It only relates to back pension.
Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to that.
The amendment was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.
A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Grab, father of Alfred Newton Grab, deceased seaman, United States Navy, who was killed in line of duty on February 7, 1922, at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Alfred Newton Grab was receiving at the date of his death.

Gray, United States Navy, a lieutenant on the active list of the Navy to date from August 3, 1920, and to take rank next after Lieut. James Madison Ober, United States Navy: Provided, That he shall be considered as having been appointed in the grade of lieutenant in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920 (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 41, ch. 228, p. 835): Provided further, That the said Chief Machinist William C. Gray shall not be entitled to any increase in pay or emoluments prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2488) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. HUDSON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims a question. The report indicates that the right of the company to receive these certificates has not been established.
Mr. UNDERHILL. The Secretary of the Treasury acted on the amended bill. We have stricken out all on pages 1 and 2 and the Secretary's office has drawn the bill as amended on page 3. No evidence was presented to the committee that the company was not entitled to collect, and the bill is in the form of all bills of that kind.
Mr. HUDSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the report, that the right of the company to receive it was not established.
Mr. LAGUARDIA. It says more than that. It says that Congress can ascertain the fact, and if they are entitled to it the department will not object to the bill. The department puts the burden on Congress. In other words, the approval of the bill is conditioned on the committee or Congress satisfying itself that the company is entitled to the proceeds of the bonds. There is no proof of ownership, and the report of the department can not be construed as an approval of the bill.
Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?
There was no objection.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MOUNTAIN HOME, IDAHO

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. HOOPER. Reserving the right to object, do I understand that if relief is afforded the bank it will not give full relief to them?
Mr. SMITH. No; because the land can not be sold for enough to cover the loan.
Mr. HOOPER. I have no objection.
The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent under the homestead entry of Harold C. Cheline for the south half of the northwest quarter, the north half of the southwest quarter, the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 27, the southeast quarter, the east half of the southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, the south half of the northeast quarter of section 28; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 33, all in township 1, north of range 10 east, Boise meridian, Idaho, upon payment of the usual fees and commissions payable under existing laws.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order, under the order of business to-day, to return to bills on the calendar prior to No. 204, where the star is?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the unanimous consent was granted to start with the star number. The Chair would not consider such a request at this present time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DR. JOHN MACK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6367) authorizing the redemption by the United States Treasury of 20 war savings stamps (series 1918) now held by Dr. John Mack, of Omaha, Nebr.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SEARS] a question. The note from the Treasury Department furnished us states that the possession of the certificate was for collateral purposes only, and that there was no intention to transfer, had transfer been possible under the law. What does the gentleman know about that?

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, Doctor Mack is as reputable a dentist as we have in the city of Omaha. This man, Nick Boten, had $100 worth of stamps, which were registered, and he sold them for $100 worth of dental work. He then disappeared and he can not be found. Doctor Mack would very gladly put up a bond to secure the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOOPER. Personally, I am not going to object to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while this is a small matter before the House, the gentleman from Nebraska says that this man will put up a bond. The bill does not require a bond.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. I think it does. I know the one last year did.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it does not.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. We will be very glad to accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 3, after the word "value," insert the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall require of the claimant a good and sufficient bond to protect the Government from loss."

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman be willing to accept the usual phraseology to this effect?—

Provided further, That Doctor Mack shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in a penal sum double the amount of the principal.

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather leave this to the Secretary of the Treasury to require a good and sufficient bond.

Mr. UNDERHILL. This is the usual phraseology.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it is done invariably.

Mr. HUDSON. If there is a usual form of language, would it not be better to use that?

Mr. BLANTON. I have used one form which has been used many times.

Mr. HUDSON. Has it been done by the Treasury Department?

Mr. BLANTON. It has been used with respect to all of the departments. In other words, this leaves it to the Secretary to frame the bond.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to redeem 20 war-savings stamps (series of 1918), office No. 25100, registration No. 2584, originally issued to Nick Boten, 414 North Fourteenth Street, Omaha, Nebr., and now owned and in the possession of Dr. John Mack, of Omaha, Nebr.; that the Secretary of the United States Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of funds of the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an adequate sum for the redemption of said war-savings stamps at their legal value.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I now offer my amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question. This bill involves $34,934.90. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts believe that all the safeguards usually required with respect to the passage of bills of this kind appear in the record?

Mr. UNDERHILL. All the safeguards that could possibly surround the property of the Government were provided in this case.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not believe there could be any question of fraud?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object, but this is a rather large bill to come up at this time.

Mr. HOOPER. This amount is simply charged against him on the books of the department.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; it is charged against him on the books of the department, and if he lived as long as Methuselah it would never be before us. But it would still hang over him.

Mr. BLANTON. If he were not at fault—and no one is at fault, and the bond protects the Government—it ought to be charged off. But if some one under him is at fault and there is a bond, it should be charged to the bond. When you charge this $34,934.90 off the books it is that much loss to the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. HUDSON. The people of the United States need protection, and there must be care exercised in the post offices.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; there are losses everywhere from carelessness, and complaints come from all parts of the country on account of losses from carelessness, indifference, and in many cases from fraud.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If somebody came up to him in his office where his safe was and put a revolver of .45 caliber up against his kidneys, what was he to do?

Mr. BLANTON. Sometimes there is connivance in these cases, and if a man wants to keep money in his safe and there is no adequate way of protecting the Government, the Government ought to put somebody else there, and then he will not be guilty of negligence.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not wish to argue with the gentleman from Texas, but the employees of the Government are men who are really ordinarily certified by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know; but my friend from Massachusetts knows that there are entirely too many losses occurring in the post offices, and the postmasters ought to be given to understand that the Government expects them to be more careful of the people's funds.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman back me up and help me to secure legislation that will make it a capital crime?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. But you can not get such a law passed here.

Mr. HUDSON. May I ask has this bill been recommended by the Budget?

Mr. BLANTON. No; this is one that has not been.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of John L. Nightingale, postmaster at Fort Collins, Colo., in the sum of $34,934.90, the value of funds and stamps lost in the burglary of the post office at Fort Collins, Colo., July 24, 1927.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FRANK E. SHULTS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9380) for the relief of Frank E. Shults.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, this is another bill under which the taxpayers of the United States are going to have to pay $28,170.37 and mark it off its accounts as a loss to the Government.

Mr. SCHAFER. This is a very good bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and the post office is located in Wisconsin, and the gentleman, who is from Wisconsin, wants the taxpayers of the country to pay the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. This is not in my district, but it is a meritorious claim.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. It is from a very good, meritorious State, and the gentleman asks that this money be paid out of the people's funds. We should expect postmasters to watch out and give proper care to the Government funds in their custody.

Mr. SCHAFER. Do you think that a postmaster ought to sleep in the post office and guard the funds there with an armed guard?

Mr. BLANTON. No. Our Sergeant at Arms here, for instance, is not careless about the funds intrusted to him. It is because he surrounds himself with proper safeguards to protect the public funds.

Mr. SCHAFER. The report says this post office was surrounded with proper safeguards.

Mr. BLANTON. No. I am not impressed with all the testimony.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I wonder if the gentleman from Texas could help us out of this post-office problem in some practical way. These postmasters are placed under heavy bond, but they are not allowed to say a word about who they shall have under them.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. They ought to be placed under bond, and they ought to have some say as to whom they shall employ under them, and then if they get some unworthy clerk or employee they ought to be allowed to kick him out.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I know of a case of a robbery in a post office. The inspectors were not able to find out who did it, but the local police found out the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman is doing good work in his attempt to frame legislation to remedy the situation.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I think this House ought to understand that our postmasters are put under a great and oppressive bond, and they have nothing to say as to their subordinates, and then these losses occur. There should be somebody guarding the funds in the post offices all day and all night.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill under consideration——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Frank E. Shults, postmaster at Baraboo, Wis., in the sum of $28,170.37 due to the United States on account of loss sustained in the burglary of the post office at Baraboo, Wis., on June 30, 1926.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALFRED W. MATHEWS

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to H. R. 6440, a bill for the relief of Alfred W. Mathews, a former ensign, United States Naval Reserve Force, which was passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to return to H. R. 6440, No. 211 on the calendar, which was passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the calendar number?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and eleven.

Mr. SCHAFER. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Alfred W. Mathews, formerly an ensign in the United States Naval Reserve Force, an ensign in the Naval Reserve and place him upon the retired list of the Navy with the retired pay and allowances of that grade: Provided, That a duly constituted naval retiring board finds that the said Alfred W. Mathews incurred physical disability incident to the service in time of war: Provided further, That no back pay, allowances, or emoluments shall become due as a result of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A. F. GALLAGHER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10014) for the relief of A. F. Gallagher.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to A. F. Gallagher, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $190.40, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of stenographic services rendered in reporting certain hearings held in the Bureau of Internal Revenue on November 23, 1925, and January 15, 1926.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

KATE MATHEWS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3) for the relief of Kate Mathews.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there seems to be a good deal of mystery about this bill; that is, as to whether the lieutenant was really negligent or not.

Mr. UNDERHILL. There was no question on the part of the committee that the lieutenant was responsible for the accident which resulted in the injury of Miss Mathews.

Mr. HUDSON. This bill calls for a settlement of $5,000. For what? For permanent injuries?

Mr. UNDERHILL. For partial permanent disability, based upon the table of rates of the compensation board. Every report that is made by the Committee on Claims carrying any amount is first referred to the compensation board.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This claim was first for $10,000, but upon investigation it was reduced to $5,000.

Mr. HUDSON (interposing). On what table of rates was the first bill based?

Mr. UNDERHILL. None.

Mr. BLANTON. They understood they could not pass it by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] until they reduced the amount?

Mr. HUDSON. Was the amount reduced just as a matter of compromise?

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of getting it passed, because they understood our chairman would not let it go through that way.

Mr. UNDERHILL. As a matter of policy on the part of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of good judgment.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kate Mathews, of San Antonio, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 as compensation for injuries received and expenses incurred by reason of having been struck by a United States Army automobile in San Antonio, Tex., on the 30th day of September, 1920, the automobile being driven at the time she was struck by First Lieut. Roscoe S. O'Hara, Air Service, United States Army.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "and in full settlement against the Government."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Army," insert: "Provided, That the United States be subrogated to the amount hereby appropriated to any claim said Kate Mathews has against said Roscoe S. O'Hara as a result of a judgment she may have obtained against said Roscoe S. O'Hara in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN F. AND MARY L. WHITE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1133) for the relief of John F. White and Mary L. White.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, if this is going to set a precedent whereby any injury received in any of our national parks through the carelessness of the driver of an automobile shall become a charge against the Government.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not think this establishes a precedent. If any precedent has been established, it was established long ago. The public parks are open to the public, and the public is invited to come there; and if the employees fail to safeguard the lives and property of those who enter the parks, it seems to me the Federal Government must be held responsible for such injuries as occur.

In this case there was a washout; it had occurred some time previously, and the park authorities said that at one time or other they did put up a notice; they also said that somebody outside of the park engaged in oil operations stole, hypothecated, or whatever you want to call it, some of the timber which had been used to guard this road. They paid no attention to it, and this automobile came along at night, drove into this 8-foot washout, and these people were very badly injured.

No precedent will be established by this case, because we have had a score of others of like nature which the committee and the House in turn have approved.

Mr. HUDSON. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there must have been considerable investigation of this case, as I see the bill is very short, but the report contains 24 pages. So I take it the committee did very thoroughly investigate this case.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not only at this session but at two previous sessions.

Mr. HUDSON. I would like to ask just this further question: The chairman of the committee said the washout which was responsible for the accident had occurred several weeks preceding the accident.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I did not say for weeks, but for some time.

Mr. HUDSON. Were not the attendants in the park somewhat guilty of negligence in looking after these things?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, yes; otherwise we would not have found damages.

Mr. HUDSON. Has the Government any recourse on account of their laxity?

Mr. UNDERHILL. They can kick them out if they want to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. HUDSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of this requiring a 24-page report to justify a 10-line bill; our friend from Massachusetts was just squaring the matter with his conscience and he had to write a report of 24 pages on this 10-line bill to square it.

Mr. HUDSON. I think the conscience of the gentleman from Massachusetts is pretty healthy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and determine the claims of John F. White and Mary L. White, of Riverton, Wyo., for compensation for alleged damages and injuries to the property and persons of said claimants and their children sustained in an automobile accident on August 7, 1918, in the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indian Reservation, Wyo., and to certify to Congress the amounts so determined, if any, as just claims.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

G. W. ROGERS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2365) for the relief of G. W. Rogers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to put in the RECORD this statement. I find here a committee reporting out these claims because of carelessness or inefficiency of officers. The bills are being considered and passed, and yet another committee of this House refuses to report out bills when their failure to report them out works a great hardship upon such claimants who have claims because of inefficiency in other branches of the service. I can call to mind now one case where a young soldier had become distinguished in one branch of the service and at the close of the World War entered the Air Service. He was a distinguished flyer and was asked by the officers in charge to resign and enter a different part of the Air Service. During all these months of service there had been deducted from his pay the monthly deduction for his insurance. In resigning one day and starting his flying career under a new component of the service the next day, there was not any lapse of time nor his flying, and yet the flunky that registered his resignation and then entered his new enlistment forgot to transfer his war-risk insurance. In less than 30 days he fell and now lies buried—a life given for our Air Service—and yet his mother, aged and needy, to-day—at that time he had a mother and father named as beneficiaries—can not collect his war-risk insurance. I say there ought to be equity in the reports of the committees upon such claims.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, had such a case come before the Committee on Claims there is no doubt in my mind what the reaction and the report from the committee would have been. In every instance where an officer has been charged with a deficit in his accounts, when it has been shown that through lack of assistance, through the worry and the terrible effects of war, the man himself could not possibly have been other than honest, the Committee on Claims has invariably reported favorably in all such cases. The conditions then were not normal, they were abnormal to an extreme degree, and while I do not wish to appear as a critic, it does seem to me that some of the other officials of the Government could be a little more liberal in their interpretation of the law and not continually disallow these claims and oblige Congress to take its time in adjudicating them.

Mr. HUDSON. In other words, the gentleman from Massachusetts is in favor of justice even though it does cut some red tape?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am not only in favor of justice, I am in favor of equity, and that goes further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to G. W. Rogers, former captain, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $400, representing the amount of deductions, during the months of May, June, July, and August, 1919, from his pay as captain, Quartermaster Corps, toward the settlement of a shortage in his accounts as disbursing officer in France during the period from December 23, 1918, to April 26, 1919, such shortage having been subsequently credited in his accounts by certifiate of settlement No. M-19682-W.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HENRY A. BELLOWS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 55) for the relief of Henry A. Bellows.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I reserve it.

Mr. NEWTON. In this particular instance Colonel Bellows was appointed a member of the Radio Commission. He served faithfully and well for eight months. He was an expert. The radio bill passed February 23, a year ago, and on March 1, just about a week after the bill had become a law, the President submitted the names of the commission to the Senate. They did not confirm but one of the four members.

Mr. BLANTON. He is an Army man—Colonel Bellows?

Mr. NEWTON. No; he is a volunteer. That is a National Guard title, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. He is not a retired Army officer?

Mr. NEWTON. Oh, no; he was a National Guardsman.

Mr. BLANTON. What kept him from getting his salary by law?

Mr. NEWTON. I will say to the gentleman that section 1761 of the Revised Statutes provides that—no money shall be paid from the Treasury as salary to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate to fill a vacancy in any existing office if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate until such appointee has been confirmed.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Senate did not confirm him?

Mr. NEWTON. They did not take any action one way or the other.

Mr. BLANTON. The Senate did not confirm him?

Mr. NEWTON. I have tried to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I say, they did not confirm him.

Mr. NEWTON. No; they took no action.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the President appointed Admiral Bullard on the Radio Commission?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And it developed that he was drawing the salary of an admiral as retired pay and at the same time was on the pay roll of the Radio Corporation of America.

Mr. NEWTON. But unfortunately, my friend, Colonel Bellows, had no admiral's salary or any other kind of salary. He came down here to serve at the request of the President and served without pay.

Mr. BLANTON. General Harbord, who is drawing a general's salary for life as a retired officer, is also drawing $50,000 per year from the Radio Corporation of America. Surely the President can find some one else who is not drawing all of these salaries qualified to fill these positions.

Mr. NEWTON. This man was forced to resign his position in November. I know the gentleman from Texas wants to be fair.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did he not hold his position until the Senate acted?

Mr. NEWTON. He could not afford to.

Mr. BLANTON. He could have taken his chances and found out whether the Senate would back it up.

Mr. NEWTON. The Senate has passed this bill, so that apparently the Senate feels that he ought to have the pay.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I shall not stand in the way of his getting his pay.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes, Henry A. Bellows shall be paid compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum for the period during which he served as a member of the Federal Radio Commission.

SEC. 2. The moneys made available for the fiscal year 1927 by the act of February 23, 1927, and those appropriated for the Federal Radio Commission by the first deficiency act, fiscal year 1928, shall be available for the payment of such compensation.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH ROSEN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8957) to reimburse Joseph Rosen, formerly of the United States Navy, for losses sustained while carrying out his duties.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to Joseph Rosen, formerly fireman, third class, United States Navy, from the current appropriation "Pay of the Navy," the sum of $84.10, to reimburse him for the loss of his personal effects at Pelham Bay Park Training Station, New York, June 4, 1918, which loss occurred without fault or negligence on the part of said Rosen and while he was carrying out his duties under orders of his superior officers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RANDOLPH-MACON ACADEMY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4963) for the relief of Randolph-Macon Academy, Front Royal, Va.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDSON. Reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from Virginia object to an amendment in line 8 of the bill, striking out the word "authorized" and make it "requested," or something of that sort, rather than authorization? It seems to me it ought to be "directed."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think the word "directed" alone is sufficient.

Mr. HUDSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words "authorized and."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Randolph-Macon Academy, Front Royal, Va., be, and it is hereby, relieved from all responsibility and accountability for certain ordnance property, to the value of $5,605.30, the property of the War Department, which was destroyed by fire while in the possession of the academy for training purposes, and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to terminate all further accountability for said property.

Mr. HUDSON. In line 8, page 1, I move to strike out the words "authorized and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN HERVEY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7268) for the relief of John Hervey.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, John Hervey, late of Company A, Eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 23d day of May, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 5, strike out "Company A," and insert in lieu thereof "Company D."

Line 10, strike out the words "accrue by virtue of," and insert the words "be held to have accrued prior to."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES EBIN CAMPBELL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1023) to correct the military record of Charles Ebin Campbell, alias Ebin Campbell.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles Ebin Campbell, alias Ebin Campbell, who was a member of Company P, Seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and who was transferred while absent as a prisoner of war to Company D, Seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on August 24, 1864, the date on which said organization demobilized; that said Campbell, who later was a member of Company I, One hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on September 20, 1864; also that said Campbell, who still later was a member of Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, shall be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on June 27, 1865, the date on which said organization demobilized.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALONZO NORTHRUP

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2098) for the relief of Alonzo Northrup.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I call attention to the following in the report from the War Department:

Upon this presentation of the case the application for the desired relief was denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that the soldier did not complete his term of enlistment, and that it appears from his own statement that he was not prevented from completing it by reason of physical disability incurred in the line of duty, and because his case does not come within any of the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 869), which is the only law in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion and the issue of discharge certificates to soldiers charged with desertion during the period of the Civil War.

Respectfully submitted.

LUTZ WAHL,
Major General, The Adjutant General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
The Adjutant General's Office,
January 9, 1928.

I am not going to object to this bill. If the steering committee of the administration wants to let bills such as this go through, with adverse reports, then let them do it.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HOOPER. I think the gentleman and I are quite agreed upon the matter that all of these bills are to a certain degree objectionable, but this bill does not differ in policy from the other bills which it has been the custom of the House to let go through.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to let the country know what the administration is presenting here to-day.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is not this the fact? If these cases could be reached under the law as it stands they would not be brought here. These are cases where the law will not reach them and where mitigating circumstances are found by the committee. The committee believes that under all circumstances this soldier should be excused from the full penalty of the law.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is the reason why our annual appropriations are running up not to a billion or two billion dollars, but three or four billion dollars per annum.

Mr. TILSON. I understand that no relief is granted in matters of this kind unless the soldier has had honorable service, and I think that giving relief to a few of these old soldiers will not make a very heavy drain on the Treasury.

Mr. HUDSON. And there are extenuating circumstances attending each case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives, Alonzo Northrup, who served in Company K, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MICHAEL ILITZ

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6908) for the relief of Michael Ilitz.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Michael Ilitz, sergeant, first class, United States Army, retired, be, and he is hereby, placed in the first grade.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE M. BROWDER AND F. N. BROWDER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3372) for the relief of George M. Browder and F. N. Browder.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that this bill carries an appropriation of $7,500. Is there anyone here who can give me some information about the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who introduced the bill, is in a very important meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs in respect to Muscle Shoals and unable to be present in the Chamber. He said that if there was any objection to this on the part of anyone, he wanted the bill to be passed over without prejudice. I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bills are passed over without prejudice anyway.

JESSE LEE HOME

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YON] suggested an amendment which will provide a more speedy appraisal, and I propose to offer such an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to convey by patent to Alma Laird 127.11 acres, said land being part of lots Nos. 1, 2, and 3, section 32, west half northwest quarter, and lot No. 1, section 33, and lot No. 1 in section 31, all being in township 2 south, range 17 west of the Tallahassee meridian, according to Government survey of 1847, upon payment by said Alma Laird to the United States of the sum of $1.25.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "the sum of $1.25" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a reasonable appraised value within six months after said appraisal."

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YON] is familiar with the bill and can explain its provisions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment prepared by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOOPER: Line 3, after the words "said appraisal", insert the words "passage of this act."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YON] give us a brief explanation of why this bill should be passed?

Mr. YON. Mr. Speaker, the bill is a bill permitting the sale of lands in the State of Florida. In the year 1846 there were certain meandering lines where the coast line was supposed to be situated. The survey of 1924 showed that a different situation existed. This particular case is a case where one Alma Laird and others bought certain lands, and the lands were improved. A hotel was built upon the land. In the year 1924, in June, the meandering lines showed that the property which these people thought they owned was really in the hands of the Government; but, nevertheless, they improved it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman stand as to the inheritance tax?

Mr. YON. I am against the 80 per cent inheritance tax of 1926.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the record shows that this officer paid out without authority of law 17 different vouchers, aggregating this amount, $1,936. He ought to have known the law and he ought to have known that he did not have the authority. The Comptroller General holds that he ought to have known the law and should not have paid out this sum.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He was transferred two years prior to this time on Government work, and during his transfer these vouchers were presented.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts think it is good policy to hold these Federal officers to account when they violate the law?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman from Massachusetts believes in the observance of the law, but there are occasions when, unwittingly and unknowingly, with no harm whatever to the Government or any individual, the letter of the law is ignored and the seemingly proper thing is done. In this instance the Government receives full value for the various sums. There is no question as to the right amount or as to the work having been performed. It is simply a matter of bookkeeping and technicalities, which the gentleman from Massachusetts has criticized, either justly or unjustly, at various times heretofore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office of the Treasury Department is hereby authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of A. N. Ross, disbursing clerk of the Federal Trade Commission, located at Washington, D. C., the amount of $1,936, representing an amount paid by him and which was disallowed by the General Accounting Office as having been paid in contravention of the act of April 6, 1914 (38 Stat. 312, 318), or the rulings of the General Accounting Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims regarding this bill. It seems to carry large recompenses for hospital services. Is there anything which will grow out of this? Is there any claim for personal injury?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I know nothing about it, as it comes from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, I did not know the chairman had left the Chamber. He asked me to give a little attention to these bills, and I hope the gentleman from Michigan will permit the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. O'BRIEN] to make a statement with reference to the bill.

Mr. HUDSON. Can any claim be made under this legislation for either the partial or permanent injury of this claimant?

Mr. O'BRIEN. None whatever. This covers all the claims.

Mr. HUDSON. This covers nothing but hospital bills.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It goes a little further than hospital bills, as the gentleman will notice.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Michigan is perfectly right in raising the question, and I think there ought to be an amendment to the bill providing that this sum shall be accepted in full settlement of all claims against the Government.

Mr. HUDSON. I felt that way about it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am perfectly willing that such an amendment should be adopted.

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. PEAVEY. As chairman of the subcommittee, I rise for the purpose of answering the question asked by the gentleman from Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that the subcommittee considered this claim very carefully, and it was understood by our subcommittee that the claim, when allowed in this amount, should be considered paid in full.

Mr. BLANTON. That ought to be stated in the bill, because some other Congress, after we are dead, might allow something else.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is no question at all about that, and I am perfectly willing to accept such an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following parties the sums herein stated, which shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of said parties against the United States as a result of a personal injury received by Jennie Wyant on account of a rocket which was discharged by soldiers in the military service of the United States who were engaged in giving an exhibition at the Lewis County fair in Lewis County, State of West Virginia, September 29, 1920:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOOPER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HOOPER. The chairman of the Committee on War Claims [Mr. STRONG] asked me in his absence, when bills were objected to, to ask unanimous consent that they be passed over without prejudice, if possible.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves the sum of $255,231.86, and it is a bill that ought not to pass here under unanimous consent in half a minute, and I therefore object.

ARTHUR C. LUEDER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8499) for the relief of Arthur C. Lueder.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves a large sum of money and ought not to pass under such circumstances, and I object.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Will the gentleman reserve his objection? I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. If there was ever a bill that was just, it is this. The post office in Chicago took in $21,000 worth of war savings stamps that were forgeries. The Treasury of the United States took in $36,000 of the same forged stamps before they discovered that they were forgeries. This bill is absolutely fair and just.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no one in the House for whom I have a higher regard than the gentleman from Illinois. He is my close personal friend, but this office in Chicago ought to have been big enough to detect the forgery without paying out this large amount of money.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. Is the Chicago post office bigger than the Treasury of the United States, which is supposed to look after forgeries and counterfeits, and yet they paid out $36,000 before they discovered it was a forgery. It was only discovered that they were forgeries by experts. The gentleman would not hold the postmaster responsible for that.

Mr. BLANTON. It was not the postmaster; it was the subordinates that paid it out. He ought to have been more careful, and ought to have had men that were better skilled.

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. If he had had men that were skilled enough to discover that, they would not be serving as clerks in a post office.

Mr. BLANTON. We have bank clerks and cashiers drawing $200 a month who detect forgeries every day.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know the gentleman from Massachusetts is going to make it appear that it ought to be paid right off in cash.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think the gentleman from Texas wants to be fair; I think his enthusiasm for his work is well grounded, but I do not think he or any Member of the House has any moral right—he may have a legal right under the rules—to hold up a bill unless he knows positively or has some reason to suspect that there is fraud or collusion with reference to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no fraud or collusion here; it is simply carelessness of a servant.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The bill is perfectly sound. If the gentleman from Texas had examined this thoroughly he would be advocating the passage of it rather than objecting to it. Banks and post offices all over the country were fooled by this counterfeit issue.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if I am to be browbeat and intimidated in this way I am going to withdraw my objection. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of Arthur C. Lueder, postmaster at Chicago, Ill., in the sum of $20,474.92, and to certify such credit to the General Accounting Office, as follows: $19,468.50, being an amount charged in the postal account due to the cashing of war savings stamps in the year 1924 which were found by the Treasury Department to be counterfeit and charged back to the postmaster's account; $100, being an amount charged in the money-order account due to the cashing by the postmaster of money order in favor of J. H. Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, prior to 1917 the widow of any officer who died as the result of wounds or disease contracted in the service was entitled to six months' pay. The comptroller held, without anybody intending it, that the war risk insurance act nullified that provision of the law. Congress, however, reaffirmed it by passing an act in 1920. In between 1917 and 1920 this officer died at Rio de Janeiro. This is a bill to put the widow on the same status as every other widow has been up to the time of 1917 and since 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill embraces $15,293.90, and I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he thinks we ought to proceed here with bills of this importance with about 20 or 25 Members present to pass on them, passing one about every half minute? I think we ought to adjourn. I think we have done a good day's work and I think this is not the time and place, and it is not with the proper temper of the House, for these bills to be passed about one every half minute.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman from Texas has asked me a question in reference to this bill. This is necessary because the department has declared that it does not come under the provisions of the admiralty act. There was considerable damage done at this same time.

Mr. BLANTON. It ought to go to the Court of Claims or a court of admiralty and be passed upon.

Mr. UNDERHILL. All of these claims have been settled with the exception of this one.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to be settled by a tribunal that can consider the rules of evidence and see that proper probative effect is given to the evidence.

Mr. UNDERHILL. This is an agreement on the part of two parties and saves all of that court's time and expense.

Mr. BLANTON. And probably is costing the taxpayers $15,000 when they might not be due 1 cent.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think if the claim had gone to the Court of Claims they would have gotten a larger sum than this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object, but such bills ought not to be passed here this afternoon with no consideration whatever, and with but a very few Members on the floor.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Higgins Lumber Co. LANDON RANDOLPH MASON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4605) authorizing the President to issue an appropriate commission and honorable discharge to Landon Randolph Mason.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill that provides relief for one service man, whereas there is a large number in the United States on exactly the same plane. There is a joint resolution pending before the Military Affairs Committee which would authorize the Secretary of War to do this for all persons similarly situated. It seems to me that if Congress is to adopt this as a policy we ought to do it for everyone instead of picking out some one man. Therefore I object.

WILLIAM PORTER

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I hate to call attention to this, because this is a bill of our new chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. HAWLEY], but this is what the War Department says about it:

While it is shown that after his desertion from Company D, Twelfth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, this soldier reenlisted in the Navy within four months, it must be presumed from the showing of the records that he enlisted in the Navy for the purpose of obtaining bounty which he would not have received had he remained under his original enlistment, and upon this presentation of the case application for removal of the charge of desertion has heretofore been denied and must still stand denied.

LUTZ WAHL,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will notice on page 3 that the man himself states——

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about what your Adjutant General of the United States Army says.

Mr. HAWLEY. He states it is presumed he did this.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to object to the gentleman's bill, but we are passing a lot of bad bills here this afternoon.

Mr. HAWLEY. The soldier himself says in answer to the supposition of The Adjutant General that he did not receive bounty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Rezin Franklin Neves, who was a member of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 11th day of November, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Zingarell and wife for the taking by the United States, in September, 1917, of three certain lots, namely, lots 9, 10, 11, in block 502-B on Furnace Hill, Sheffield, Ala., and the loss sustained thereby, said lots being included in the site required in the building of an experimental nitrate plant, and which said three lots were taken without adequate reimbursement to the owners thereof, said M. The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4265) for the relief of certain officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a 15-page bill seeking to pay money or allow credits to quite a number of officers of the Army ranging in amount to each from $10,000 down. Every one of them is a case that the Comptroller General, under the law, has turned down, and has held they were not entitled to such payments and credits under the law. This bill ought not to pass here this afternoon, and I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a similar one to the bill just reported, and under the same circumstances I object. And, Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Connecticut has promised us that if we worked this late he would move to adjourn. For the purpose of getting a new shift, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas withhold that just a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. No; because the gentleman from Texas is going to be compelled to work until 12 o'clock to-night to get his mail signed.

Mr. LOWREY. We lack just one bill of finishing the bills from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my point of order.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I should not yield because the gentleman demands a quorum, but would move a call of the House. I think, however, that we have done fairly well to-day. We have passed more than four pages of bills this afternoon. Under all the circumstances, it being Saturday afternoon and St. Patrick's Day, I think that we can well afford to stop. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 19, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, March 19, 1928

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who hast made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the whole earth and didst send Thy blessed Son to preach peace to them that are far off and to them that are nigh, grant that all men everywhere may seek after Thee and find Thee and bring the nations into Thy fold. Give us thankful hearts, that we may bless Thee for the beauty and bounty of the world; for day and night, summer and winter, seed time and harvest, and for the varied gifts of loveliness which every season brings; for the comforts and gladness of life and for the love, sympathy, and good will of men. Increase in us the desire and power to help others and enable us to embrace every opportunity of serving our generation according to Thy will. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—LOS ANGELES EXPRESS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.
Mr. NORRIS. Last Friday, in the course of some remarks I made, I read portions of a letter written by Mr. Spaulding, superintendent of the municipal water plant at Springfield, Ill., in which reference was made to several things, and, among others, to negotiations which Mr. Spaulding said he understood had taken place on behalf of Mr. Copley for the purchase of the Los Angeles Express. I have received a telegram from the owners of that paper taking me severely to task for reading that extract, and I want now to read the telegram, first in order to give it the same publicity as was given to the extract from the letter, and also to make some comments upon the telegram.
This telegram is directed to me and is dated Los Angeles, Calif., 12.17 p. m. March 17, 1928, and reads as follows:

Recently you were shocked when you were publicly charged as having received money from Mexican sources for alleged pro-Mexican activities in connection with your official duties as United States Senator. You complained bitterly because no effort had been made to check up as to the truth of the charge and pleaded that a great wrong had been done you. Yesterday you read in the United States Senate a letter in which reference is made to the purchase by Col. Ira C. Copley of certain newspapers in Illinois and California, in which you endeavor to show that an attempt is being made to control public sentiment by the purchase of newspapers because of Colonel Copley's former connection with the public utility corporation. After telling of Copley's purchase of the Springfield (Ill.) Journal, of the San Diego Union and Tribune, and of the Kellogg papers in Los Angeles County, you are quoted as having read into the official RECORD the following statement:

"Negotiations are under way for the purchase of the Los Angeles Express." In your reckless quest for publicity you have involved the good name of the Express in a story that, regardless of its merits, you at least are attempting to place the construction of a power-controlled press, and without checking at all as to the truth of your statement you involve our paper in your charge. The facts are that these last year Colonel Copley negotiated for the purchase of stock in the Los Angeles Evening Express. Nothing developed from the negotiations, and his effort to buy stock in the Evening Express was never consummated. Subsequently, he turned his attention to the San Diego Union and Tribune, which papers he did purchase. He likewise purchased the Kellogg papers in Los Angeles County. The statement that negotiations are now under way to purchase the Express is absolutely false, and you could have ascertained this fact by a simple wire to us. We demand an immediate public retraction from you, and await your reply.

EDWARD A. DICKSON and GUY C. EARL, Jr.,
Owners and Publishers.

Mr. President, the only reference made by me, or in the letter from which I quoted, to the Los Angeles Express is contained on page 4875 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 16, and I shall quote therefrom. I ought to say that this was read from a letter written by Mr. Spaulding, not to me but to a friend of his, and that he had inclosed a copy of that letter in his letter to me. Here is the only reference, either directly or indirectly, to the Los Angeles Express:

I am informed negotiations were under way for the purchase of the Express, one of the large papers of Los Angeles.

That, Mr. President, is the only reference to that paper, either directly or indirectly, contained in the letter from which I quoted, and is the only reference made by me to that paper in the course of my remarks. I call attention to the fact that the charge, if they want to call it a charge, is specifically admitted by their own telegram, so that what was stated there, according to their own telegram signed by them, is literally and absolutely true. Their telegram states:

The facts are that these last year—

I suppose the word "these" is a misprint in the telegram, but I am reading it just as I got it; it probably means "this last year"; but I read it exactly as I got it:

that these last year Colonel Copley negotiated for the purchase of stock in the Los Angeles Evening Express. Nothing developed from the negotiations, and his effort to buy stock in the Evening Express was never consummated.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that in the telegram in which they are demanding a retraction from me they specifically admit that what I read is absolutely true. Their intention in the telegram to try to show that it was an aspersion, that it was a slander, or that it was a misstatement as to their paper, it seems to me, is absolutely groundless and without any effect. There was no attempt made and there was no thought on my part, and I presume none on the part of Mr. Spaulding when he wrote the letter, of any intention to cast any reflection on the Los Angeles Express. Indeed, Mr. President, it would be a sorry condition if it would be disgraceful to have somebody approach one to buy his paper, if he owned one, or to buy his horse or to buy his farm. This attempt made by the owners and publishers of this paper to try to put me into disrepute, it seems to me, is an illustration of trying to make something out of nothing.
I desire to have printed in the RECORD in parallel columns the charge that they claim I made in the words in which I made it, and in the adjoining column their answer in which they admit the absolute truth of everything that was said.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. NORRIS. The charge and the answer are as follows:

THE CHARGE—AS READ FROM THE LETTER OF MR. W. J. SPAULDING	THE ANSWER—FROM A TELEGRAM SIGNED BY THE OWNERS AND PUBLISHERS OF THE LOS ANGELES EXPRESS
I am informed negotiations were under way for the purchase of the Express, one of the large papers of Los Angeles.	The facts are that last year Colonel Copley negotiated for the purchase of stock in the Los Angeles Evening Express. Nothing developed from the negotiations, and his effort to buy stock in the Evening Express was never consummated.

Mr. President, it is not my intention, and never has been, and as long as I serve here never will be, to make it a practice to answer the misleading and sometimes slanderous statements which are made sometimes by newspapers and sometimes by individuals. I realize that I can not follow them through. I would not take the time of the Senate this morning if it were not for the fact that in this telegram they are demanding from me a retraction. I wonder if these men really are as sensitive as the telegram would indicate? If so, they are the most sensitive newspaper men I have ever come in contact with. They ought to be engaged in superintending a Sunday school instead of running a newspaper, it seems to me.

Mr. President, why am I singled out in what I believe to be this baseless attempt to hold me up before the country as one who has intentionally misrepresented the truth, and in this demand on me that a retraction should be made on the floor of the Senate? It is only an illustration of the attacks that may be made on anyone, however weak may be his voice when it is raised in behalf of what he believes to be justice to the people of our country; of how readily those who represent monopoly, who are moved, perhaps honestly moved, by the theory that big business, big corporations and monopolies, and combinations ought to control the country, try to suppress the voice of every man who speaks on the other side of the question.

I have also a telegram from Mr. O'Laughlin, vice president of the Copley Press. I will read it, because I think it is due to Mr. O'Laughlin and Mr. Copley that, in fairness, it should be read. I am not complaining about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from Nebraska a question, Is the Mr. Copley referred to one of those benevolent gentlemen who attempted to buy a seat for Mr. Frank L. Smith in the Senate?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I merely wished to identify him.

Mr. NORRIS. This telegram is very fair, is couched in courteous and respectful language, and is entitled to proper consideration, as are also both Mr. Copley and Mr. O'Laughlin. This telegram is sent from Joliet, Ill., and is directed to me:

The Associated Press announces that you have asked the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the recent purchase of newspapers in Illinois and California by Mr. Ira C. Copley, suggesting a connection between such purchases and the financing of public utility power corporations. Mr. Copley is in Europe, but I know if he were in the United States he would demand that the investigation be pushed to the fullest extent, and would insist that you present all the evidence or information in your possession which might directly or indirectly relate to such alleged connection. As the vice president of the Copley Press (Inc.), I am in charge in Mr. Copley's absence; and I wish to say there is not and never has been any connection, direct or indirect, between Mr. Copley's acquisition of newspapers and the public-utilities industry.

I shall be in Washington on Monday and will be glad to testify before the Federal Trade Commission or a committee of the Senate as to the absolute independence of all of the Copley newspapers of any interest of any kind whatsoever.

JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN,
Vice President Copley Press (Inc.).

Mr. President, in the letter of Mr. Spaulding, from which I read extracts, there were quite a number of allusions to the purchasing of newspapers by Mr. Copley, and I believe there were statements on the part of Mr. Spaulding, the writer of the letter, that it was the intention of Mr. Copley and his organization, perhaps, to secure as many newspapers, particularly on the Pacific coast, to carry on the fight that he made and that I think is now being waged on behalf of what is known for the want of a better name as the Water Power Trust. I did ask that the matter be investigated by the Federal Trade Commission, on which commission has been imposed by resolution of the Senate the duty of making an investigation on that subject, but, since Mr. O'Laughlin has called my attention to it, I think I ought to put into the RECORD some additional evidence of my own that was not contained in the charges in the letter of Mr. Spaulding.

I hold in my hand, Mr. President, an advertisement which appeared in the Illinois State Journal, which I understand is published in Springfield, Ill., on March 7, 1928. It is headed—

The Copley Press (Inc.) 5½ per cent serial collateral gold bonds.
Dated February 1, 1928, series A. Due serially 1930 to 1943.
Payment of principal and interest unconditionally guaranteed by Ira C. Copley.

Then follows in the advertisement a description of the amounts and the dates when the various bonds will become due, and then comes this:

First Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago, Ill., trustee.

We summarize as follows from information furnished by Ira C. Copley, president of the company—

And this is the information that Mr. Copley has furnished them:

SECURITY

These bonds are the direct obligation of the Copley Press (Inc.), which owns and operates, through wholly owned subsidiaries, five daily newspapers: Aurora (Ill.) Beacon-News, Joliet (Ill.) Herald-News, Elgin (Ill.) Courier-News, San Diego (Calif.) Union, and the San Diego Tribune. All of the stock of these properties is deposited with the trustee as security for these bonds.

This issue of $3,200,000 constitutes the sole funded indebtedness of the company and its subsidiaries, and the company covenants—

And so forth.

GUARANTY

The payment of principal and interest is unconditionally guaranteed by Ira C. Copley. The guaranty agreement includes a provision that the will of the guarantor shall provide for the deposit with the trustee of marketable securities equal in value to the then outstanding bonds, which deposit shall be applied, as the securities mature or are sold, to the redemption of bonds of this issue.

Then follows a statement of the earnings of the property that is mortgaged to secure these bonds, and a very good showing is made for 1925, 1926, and 1927.

The average of the above three years' earnings is $722,220 or more than 4.10 times the greatest annual interest charge of this issue. The two San Diego papers have been recently acquired, and under the management of the Copley Press are expected to show increased earnings.

PURPOSE OF ISSUE

The major part—

I wish the Senate would note this because I may refer to it later—

The major part of the proceeds of this issue—

That is the issue of $3,200,000—

The major part of the proceeds of this issue is being applied in connection with the acquisition of the two San Diego papers, and the balance for other corporate purpose.

ADDITIONAL BONDS

Additional bonds in the amount of $4,300,000 may be issued for the acquisition of additional newspaper properties, based on 60 per cent of the cost or appraised value of such properties, whichever is lower.

Then follows the maturity dates of these bonds and a statement of the attorneys as to their legality.

The advertisement winds up with this statement:

We recommend these bonds for investment.
Lawrence Stern & Co., W. W. Armstrong Co., Matheny, Dixon & Co.

So far as I have read it is an advertisement recommending the purchase of these bonds, but, as a matter of fact, they did not have a bond to sell; the bonds had all been sold, as shown by the advertisement itself. In fine print appears this language:

Subscriptions from banks and investment dealers have been received in excess of the amount of this issue.

I wish to digress, Mr. President, to ask the Federal Trade Commission, which has charge of the investigation of this subject, carefully to find out who the banks and the investment dealers are. It strikes me there is at least prima facie evidence to show that an attempt is being made—and has been partially consummated—by Mr. Copley to control the press of a large portion of the country. I think it also likewise follows that the activity of these newspapers along some of the lines to which I am going to call attention goes a long way, at least, to bear out the statement of Mr. Spaulding that the object of securing the control of these newspapers, particularly on the Pacific coast, is to control and educate public opinion against public ownership and the public handling of the water power and electric light situation on the Pacific coast. That may not be true; but it seems to me the evidence points very strongly that way; at least it is worthy of investigation, and I should welcome the appearance of Mr. Copley before the Federal Trade Commission, as the telegram says he will appear, to make plain and clear that there is nothing of that kind in it.

I have also before me, Mr. President, a copy of a newspaper published in Los Angeles in which the writer goes more fully into the subject to which Mr. Spaulding referred regarding Mr. Copley's activities. It will be remembered that the letter I read called attention to the fact that Mr. Copley appeared before the Reed investigating committee and admitted there that he had contributed $25,000 to the campaign fund of Mr. Frank L. Smith, who was knocking at the door of the Senate with the Insull money in his pocket, anxious to have a seat in this body. After referring to several other purchases, this writer says:

This man Copley then purchased the Springfield (Ill.) State Journal. * * * Copley is reported to have been a contributor, along with Insull, to the gigantic Smith campaign corruption fund. Since his purchase of the Illinois State Journal that paper has painted Smith as pure as a lily and is actually supporting him for reelection to the Senate. * * *

The next step by Copley was to purchase the San Diego papers—the Tribune, the Union, and Independent. He is said to have paid $3,000,000 for the first two—

It will be remembered, Mr. President, from the advertisement which I read that the agents of Mr. Copley say the information which was the basis of the advertisement had been received from Mr. Copley himself and it was stated in that advertisement that the proceeds of the bond issue of $3,200,000 were in major part used for the purchase of two of these newspapers—

He is said to have paid $3,000,000 for the first two and $35,000 for the Independent, which later he junked.

It seems to me that it is proper to consider that the one paper there that was taking the opposite side of this question was purchased by Mr. Copley and was junked—dismantled and publication ceased. In other words, the one newspaper in San Diego that was standing for public ownership of electric and water-power utilities on the Pacific coast was purchased by him and junked and its publication ended.

It's a long jump—

Says this writer—

from Illinois to California. Copley's appearance in this section that will be vitally affected by the passage of the Swing-Johnson bill for the development of the Colorado River is also a significant bit of evidence. The fact that he scrapped the Independent, the only morning competitor in San Diego that stood in any way for the principle of public ownership, is more interesting. Copley, upon taking over the San Diego papers, again promised to "take a live interest" in San Diego's affairs. He probably will.

I ought to say here that this article goes into the Evening Express matter much more fully than Mr. Spaulding went.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Los Angeles Express?

Mr. NORRIS. The Los Angeles Express. The writer gives, in some detail here, those negotiations that Mr. Spaulding said he understood had been in progress; but since I did not quote this in regard to the Express I am not going to read it now.

After going into that the writer says:

But what of it all? Why is Copley invading "public ownership" territory in California? Who is this man anyway?

And he says, further down:

I can provide you only with the motives that have been attributed to Copley by men of keen intelligence and close contact with newspaper investments in San Diego, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.

First. That Copley's hope in acquiring a chain of Pacific coast papers is to help halt the encroachment of the public-ownership idea, where it has achieved its greatest success, along the Pacific coast;

Second. To aid any political campaign for the Senatorship this year that will defeat HIRAM W. JOHNSON, cosponsor, with Congressman PHIL D. SWING, San Diego, of the Swing-Johnson bill, soon to come before the Congress;

Third. To assist in the development of sentiment on the Pacific coast that will be adverse to the construction of a Government-owned power plant at the Colorado River; and Fourth. To use every possible influence to get possession of the great water-power resources of California, Oregon, and Washington for the Hydroelectric Superpower Trust.

The writer makes another statement that I do not read, because it contains rather a serious charge, and I do not care to make it myself. He winds up by saying:

Use your own judgment as to whether you wish to take any part in aiding this sort of a man to pile up more millions for Sam Insull on the Pacific coast by acquiring our California newspapers.

You will remember that on Friday, from Mr. Spaulding's letter, it appeared that Mr. Copley had not only contributed $25,000 to the campaign expenses of Mr. Smith but that he had himself at a prior date been the owner of large public-utility properties over which Mr. Smith, as chairman of the Public Service Commission of Illinois, had general control, and that when he had sold those properties, so Mr. Spaulding said, he took securities from the Insull properties.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it was only fair that a conclusion should be drawn such as Mr. Spaulding has drawn; and from that advertisement that I read it appeared that $4,200,000 more of bonds are to be issued by the Copley Press for the purpose of buying more newspapers. When we take into consideration the fact that in Springfield, where he recently purchased one of the leading newspapers, it immediately became a sponsor for Smith, painting him, as this article says, as pure as an angel, and when we consider also that he suppressed the progressive paper that he bought in San Diego, and that these other papers are favoring the things that the Water Power Trust and the hydroelectric monopoly want, it is quite clear that it would be fair at least for the Federal Trade Commission to find out who furnished the money, who are the investors, who are the bankers who put up the money to float these bond issues on the part of Mr. Copley.

It is not conclusive, I admit. It never has been offered as conclusive; and the fact that Mr. Copley's agent, the vice president of the company, says he stands ready to go on the witness stand and testify and have it investigated fully is commendable, and I welcome him before the Federal Trade Commission. I hope the Federal Trade Commission, without fear and without favor, will make a fair and an honest but a complete investigation of the whole matter.

Mr. NORRIS subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day I made some remarks and read into the RECORD a telegram from Mr. O'Laughlin, vice president of the Copley Press (Inc.), and made some remarks in regard to the matter. Mr. O'Laughlin was in the gallery, I understand, and heard the remarks I made, and he has written me a letter and delivered it to me. I ask unanimous consent to include it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as part of my remarks, and have it appear in the proper place in the RECORD at the close of the remarks I made earlier in the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

COPLEY PRESS (INC.),
Washington, March 19, 1928.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On behalf of Copley Press (Inc.) I wish to state emphatically that there is no connection of any kind whatsoever between the acquisition of newspapers by Mr. Ira C. Copley and any industry or interest, save that of the public.

The statement you made in the Senate to-day is compounded of an unfounded letter and a rival newspaper attack. You further read extracts from the advertisement published throughout the country offering for sale the bonds of the Copley Press (Inc.) in the sum of $3,200,000.

So far as the letter is concerned, it was written by a man whose hatred of the Illinois State Journal dates back to its opposition to his election to a municipal office in Springfield. This opposition was manifested prior to Mr. Copley's purchase of the paper. The letter makes false and libelous statements throughout, as the slightest investigation would have established. With regard to the San Diego papers acquired by Mr. Copley, their purchase by him divorced them from the interest which also owned public utilities in that part of the country. The Independent, which he also acquired and suppressed, was purchased by him upon the solicitation of its owners, because they felt that with Mr. Copley in southern California the public interests would be fully and amply safeguarded. With regard to the bond issue, Mr. Copley observed the policy which other newspaper proprietors have pursued in connection with newspaper purchases. The bonds were sold in the usual manner, through bankers and investment houses, to investors, and in addition to the large assets and profits of the properties themselves Mr. Copley placed behind them his own name and his own credit. No one else had anything whatsoever else to do with this financing. An inquiry at the First National Bank of Chicago would quickly and easily have verified this fact.

I may add that Mr. Copley has no connection of any kind with the management, direction, or control of any interest or industry save that of his newspapers.

The newspapers comprising Copley Press are inspired by but one policy, the public interest, and one purpose, the promotion of the public interest. As Mr. Copley has stated, neither he nor they have any axes to grind.

It is, therefore, of serious moment, that loose and false statements, inspired by selfish motive contained in the Spaulding letter and the newspaper to which you referred, should serve as the basis for an insinuation which even a cursory investigation would have shown to be utterly without foundation. With the facts before you, I believe you will make the reparation to which we are entitled.

Very truly yours,

JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN,
Vice President Copley Press (Inc.).

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. HARRISON presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, memorializing the Congress of the United States to investigate the Department of Agriculture and to prevent the Department of Agriculture from making unwarranted statements that will affect the price of cotton

Whereas the Department of Agriculture of our Federal Government had gained the confidence of the farmers and the business men of the South; and

Whereas that confidence was justified so long as that department of the Federal Government restricted its activities to its duties delegated to it by Congress; and

Whereas during the fall of 1927 the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States exceeded his authority by predicting the trend of low prices in the near future for cotton and cotton products, and by issuing a statement which appears to have been erroneous concerning cotton consumption that was ill-advised and apparently from private or interested sources, all of which were nothing more than guesses; and

Whereas as a result of said statements or guesses of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the trend of prices and consumption of cotton, the farmers throughout the South lost millions of dollars; and

Whereas the making of such statements or guesses is improper, and is a vital question to the entire South: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Mississippi (the House of Representatives concurring herein), That it is the sense and the opinion of the Legislature of Mississippi, as the representatives of the people of this State, that the entire people of the State of Mississippi disapprove of said unwarranted activities of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture in making statements or guesses as aforesaid, and that we respectfully memorialize Congress to condemn such activities and to make an investigation of said department or to take such steps as may appear necessary to prevent a recurrence of such activities on the part of the Department of Agriculture of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent immediately to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of Agriculture and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing resolution is a true and correct copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution 13, passed by the senate on the 23d day of February, 1928, and by the house of representatives on the 9th day of March, 1928.

H. E. KING,
Secretary of the Senate.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL CRUISERS

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk two telegrams and a letter protesting against the so-called Dallinger amendment to the naval construction bill, which provides, as I recollect, that eight of the contemplated new cruisers shall be built in Government yards. I ask to have the clerk read the first telegram only, and ask unanimous consent that the others be inserted in the RECORD, and that all of them be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CAMDEN, N. J., March 17, 1928.

WALTER E. EDGE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of 5,000 skilled shipbuilders, residents and voters of New Jersey, 3,500 of whom have been out of work since last October, and whose families are in need of help, we ask the exercise of your high office in defeating an amendment to the House naval bill requiring one-half of the ships authorized therein to be built in navy yards. The New York Shipbuilding Co., of Camden, N. J., has the largest private shipbuilding yard in America, if not in the world. We have built a substantial part of the existing Navy fleet and many vessels for the merchant marine. We have just completed the airplane carrier Saratoga, one of the finest and fastest vessels in the American fleet. Records of the hearings Magruder's testimony before the House committee shows that it costs less to build capital ships in private yards than in navy yards. Hundreds of our men have devoted their entire lifetime in becoming skilled in the art of building ships. Many of them are now working only half time. Unless we can be reasonably assured as to the future permanency of our work it will be necessary to seek employment elsewhere, the effect of which will be to seriously embarrass an essential national industry in the time of need.

DAVID WILLIAMS,
Chairman Shop Committee, New York Shipbuilding Co.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the other telegram and letter will be printed in the RECORD, and all of the communications will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The telegram and letter are as follows:

CAMDEN, N. J., March 17, 1928.

Hon. WALTER E. EDGE,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of 5,000 experienced ship workers and citizens of New Jersey and on behalf of the merchants of Camden and neighboring towns, whose business is seriously hurt of 3,500 of these ship workers being at present unemployed, this organization strongly urges you to defeat an amendment to the House naval bill requiring one-half of the ships authorized therein to be built in navy yards. Camden is the home of the New York Shipbuilding Co., operating the largest private shipbuilding yard in the world and builder of many vessels now the pride of the American Navy and merchant marine, including the Saratoga. This yard furnished the nuclei for many emergency shipbuilding organizations during World War. It builds more economically than Government yards. Defeat of this amendment will give work to thousands now in distress, and will encourage one of Nation's vital industries.

FRAIS B. WALLEN,
President Camden Chamber of Commerce, Camden, N. J.

COURIER AND POST,
Camden, N. J., March 17, 1928.

Hon. WALTER E. EDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I was surprised and chagrined this morning to learn that the House accepted, by a vote of 115 to 102, an amendment to the warship construction bill, introduced by Congressman DALLINGER, of Massachusetts, providing that 8 of the 16 proposed cruisers should be constructed in Government navy yards.

Naturally, Mr. DALLINGER wants to divert as much Government work as possible to his community. But I understood that the navy yards were taken care of by a provision covering repairs and alterations on existing ships, which would insure a continuance of present pay rolls.

No measure of preparedness is more important than maintaining our present private shipbuilding plants. The whole interest of the Nation is gravely concerned. If the Government does not support these private yards with a reasonable amount of naval construction work they will surely disintegrate.

Take the local situation. The New York ship yard (American Brown-Boveri Co.) is at present employing only 1,600 shipyard workers against a normal minimum of 5,000. There are 3,400 experienced men out of work, and if they can not be put to work very soon, they will drift away into other sections of the country, and other means of livelihood.

Close down the New York shipyard completely, and it would only take a few weeks to have its machinery oiled up and in running order, but it would take a few years to gather together 5,000 experienced hands, and in an emergency these few years might decide the fate of this Nation.

I am bringing this matter to your attention because as the newspaperman closest to it, it is my duty so to do, just as I believe it is your duty to bring it to the attention of the Senate.

Of course, it will be argued that we of Camden have a selfish interest in desiring more work for our shipbuilding plant. But, according to this theory, we would have to discard all warning from local sources regarding any local condition. We would have to discard the warnings of flood-district Senators as to conditions in their States. Thank goodness, Camden has such varied industries that it is not dependent on any one, and shipbuilding represents only a very small part of the industrial strength of this community.

Knowing shipbuilding conditions as I do, I can appreciate the importance of keeping experienced ship workers in this community. I know there are families where two and three generations have been engaged in this line of work. I know that Representative DALLINGER'S thoughtless amendment will destroy shipbuilding in this community and will probably have the same effect on the two or three other private yards that are capable of turning out warships in an emergency.

An editorial along the lines of this letter will appear in the Courier of Monday, March 19, and I will send you a copy of it.

I do hope that you will consider that this matter deserves your urgent attention.

Yours sincerely,

J. DAVID STERN.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with an amendment, House bill 11140, to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Kings Mountain, S. C., and I submit a report (No. 555) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to this bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BLEASE. It is a unanimous report; yes. The bill simply provides an additional committee of three men to assist the Secretary of War in making the inspections.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has also passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. BLEASE. The amendment was suggested by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to insert a comma and the words "to assist in the studies and investigations of battle fields in the United States for commemorative purposes authorized by an act approved June 11, 1926 (Public No. 372, 69th Cong.)," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, to assist in the studies and investigations of battle fields in the United States for commemorative purposes, authorized by an act approved June 11, 1926 (Public No. 372, 69th Cong.), a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the following members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of War: (1) A commissioned officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army; (2) a citizen and resident of York County, State of South Carolina; (3) a citizen and resident of Cleveland County, State of North Carolina; (4) and a citizen of Cherokee County, S. OTTO KAHN ON FLORIDA

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that many people throughout the country are interested in the subject, and many inquiries have been made in regard to it, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a short statement from a disinterested responsible source entitled "Otto Kahn on Florida."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

OTTO KAHN ON FLORIDA—POSITION AND POTENTIALITIES OF STATE INDICATE ITS PROSPERITY CERTAIN, BANKER DECLARES

(Special to the Wall Street Journal)

MIAMI.—Otto Kahn, the New York banker, sums up his opinion of Florida as follows:

"I am not a prophet, but Florida will more than come back into its rightful prosperity. When you consider the geographical location of Florida in relation to the vast population of the United States; when you consider the color of this country, its climate, the things you can do down here six months in the year without the frozen conditions of the North, the agricultural potentialities of the back country, the strategic relation to the great wealth of South America, you can see that Florida must progress.

"If the people will have patience, will work hard, and above all, will not lose their self-confidence, Florida is bound to take its unique place on the economic map of America. I do not say when that will be—maybe 1 year, maybe 5 or 10—but it will surely come about."

NATIONAL ORIGINS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am compelled to ask, because of the nearness of the date, unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 113, to amend subdivisions (b) and (e) of section 11 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, which on Friday last was reported from the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it was my intention to ask unanimous consent, when the routine morning business had been concluded, that we take up the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills, commencing where we left off at the last call of the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON. If there is objection to my request, I shall pass it over immediately.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It appears that the purpose of the joint resolution is to postpone for another year the taking effect of the so-called national-origins clause or provision with respect to immigration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What are the reasons for the postponement?

Mr. JOHNSON. The reasons are that the computations which have been made are indefinite and uncertain, and that the very experts who made those computations desire further time. There is a sharp division of opinion in the Immigration Committee upon the general subject. There is no division of opinion in the committee upon the desirability of the postponement for one year, in order that the additional work may be done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report then is unanimous; it has the support of all members of the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Have the Secretaries been able to arrive at any accurate, reliable method of figuring out the national origins?

Mr. JOHNSON. In my opinion, no; in the opinion of some others, yes.

Mr. DILL. Why should we not repeal the national-origins clause, and not be bothered every year by a postponement?

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator may be entirely right in that conclusion. That is a conclusion which personally I have reached, but there is a sharp division in the Committee on Immigration upon the subject. Some desire to repeal, some desire to make it effective. All are agreed, however, that the situation is such that it ought not to be put in effect immediately; and in order that time may be given to make these computations, which it is hoped may be accurate in the future, the postponement for one year is desired.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator that I am in sympathy with his proposal, but I would like to see the proposal made to repeal the national-origins clause of the immigration act. I can not bring myself to think that we ought to cut down the immigration of northern Europeans for others not so desirable.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I would rather that the joint resolution should go over for the day. I would like to look into the measure. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

FORT DONELSON NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 5500) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Fort Donelson, Tenn., and I submit a report (No. 563) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I am introducing, by sending to the desk, a bill authorizing the construction of a free bridge across the Missouri River connecting Omaha with Council Bluffs, Iowa, and am moved to do so by the following considerations:

The prosperity of distribution centers, such as Omaha, my home city, is largely dependent upon the prosperity of their wholesale and jobbing establishments.

In recent years these lines of business, outside of the great primary markets, have suffered: First, through the development of chain stores; second, through the use of motor vehicles for country delivery.

Chain-store organizations tend to remove their distribution facilities to primary markets, like Chicago and St. Louis, while quantities of goods that formerly came to Omaha, for instance, are now forwarded in carload lots direct to minor jobbing houses developed in smaller cities, and from there are distributed to the doors of retailers within a radius of 50 miles or more by motor trucks.

EVOLUTIONARY CHANGES

These changes in business methods are being keenly felt in our large secondary markets. They are evolutionary in character, and hence probably permanent.

But while the motor car tends to decentralize distribution, it has tremendous possibilities for the centralization of retail trade. Under favorable circumstances, buyers can patronize retail centers 100 or even 150 miles away.

Thus, though hurting the wholesaler, the automotive vehicle can compensate a city for that loss by increasing its retail trade, if aided by up-to-date facilities for travel and accommodation.

Recognizing this fact, many cities have turned such losses into good fortune.

They have encouraged good roads, radiating in every direction, to make the visit of the motorist easy and pleasant. This has increased their retail business more than enough to offset the loss of wholesale trade.

Lincoln, the capital of our State, is an example of these enterprising cities, and, as a result, has a greater retail trade in proportion to population than almost any other city of its size in the country. Omaha has not been so successful. There are excellent roads north, west, and south of the city, though in this latter direction Lincoln, 60 miles away, largely cuts off long-distance trade.

OMAHA'S HANDICAP

But Omaha's most serious handicap is the fact that it is separated from the eastern half of its local territory, one of the richest farming regions in the world, by the Missouri River.

The toll bridge over that river ranks as a trade barrier rather than an asset. The tolls are so high that it costs a farmer 40 or 50 cents to enter and leave the city from that direction with his family, and the annoyance and feeling of injustice are almost as serious as the actual cost.

The company which controls the bridge gets back its total capital cost about every two years.

The remedy for this situation is clearly evident, namely, a free bridge. This can be secured either by constructing a new bridge, for instance, at the foot of Farnum Street, or by acquiring the present toll bridge, located one block north at the foot of Douglas Street.

Minneapolis and St. Paul are connected, not by one but by several free bridges. The same is true of Kansas City, Mo., and its neighbors, North Kansas City and Kansas City, Kans.

A bridge spanning the Missouri River is not so expensive a matter as is generally imagined.

WHAT BRIDGES COST

The State of South Dakota has constructed five very substantial and durable bridges across the Missouri. The one at Pierre, the capital, including approaches, cost $435,000; at Mobridge, $328,000; at Chamberlain, $377,000; at Forest City, $329,000; and at Wheeler, $385,000.

Farther down the river, in the State of Missouri, the bridge at Waverly cost $538,000; at Booneville, $525,000; and at Glasgow, $606,000.

The toll bridge at the foot of Douglas Street in Omaha was constructed in 1888 at a cost of $400,000. In 1923 and 1924 it was widened and improved at a cost of something less than $625,000, making the total cost of this structure, chargeable to capital, about $1,025,000.

The bridge commission of Iowa reported to the governor of that State in 1926 that a bridge wide enough to accommodate four lines of traffic, complete with approaches, connecting Omaha and Council Bluffs at the foot of Farnum Street, could be constructed for $1,500,000.

Thus it is evident that this problem of a free bridge between Omaha and the eastern half of its local territory can be settled once and for all by the expenditure of $1,500,000, which is less than one-third of the saving in water rates that the people of Omaha have enjoyed since the water plant became publicly owned.

Water-bill savings now total something more than $5,000,000. Moreover, Omaha under its charter now has authority to build such a bridge.

THE BEST METHOD

The second way to get a free bridge at Omaha is to buy or lease the present toll bridge at the foot of Douglas Street. For several reasons, which I will give later, this appears to be best for both the street-railway company, which controls the toll bridge, and the people of Omaha.

If Omaha constructs a free bridge at the foot of Farnum Street, of course the street-railway company will lose the tolls it now receives from automobiles and trucks. These will probably approximate $600,000 for the year 1928. However, the company will still be obliged to pay taxes upon its bridge and maintain this bridge at its own expense. Moreover, the people of Omaha will have to assume taxes necessary to maintain their free bridge and amortize its cost.

But suppose the city, in lieu of building a free bridge, should buy the present toll bridge for $1,500,000, or about half a million more than its value based on cost, with an agreement that the company could use the bridge for its cars and passengers without charge, except, say, one-third of the cost of maintaining the structure, or about $20,000 a year. In such case the toll bridge of the street-railway company would not be practically confiscated, as the city would pay a handsome price therefor and the company would have the use of the bridge free of taxes.

FREE BRIDGE

Having thus acquired the bridge, the city could operate it as a toll bridge for not to exceed four years and pay the entire cost, including all interest accruing during the payment period.

Clearly, this latter plan is best for the street-railway company and best for the city. The street-railway company will receive pay for its bridge and will be relieved of all taxes thereon and two-thirds of the cost of maintenance; and, on the other hand, the people of Omaha will acquire a free bridge to Council Bluffs and the eastern half of the city's local territory without cost.

It must be evident, however, that the street railway company will never willingly agree to such a plan. It will hold on to its bridge, this barrier to added prosperity that should be Omaha's, and garner the tremendous profits therefrom just as long as the people of Omaha will allow it to do so.

When the company realizes that the people will no longer tolerate this condition and these excessive tolls, and that a free bridge is inevitable, it will cooperate and accept this solution of the free bridge problem, and not until then.

The city of Omaha can bring pressure upon the street railway company in two effective ways. The company's franchise is about to expire and sooner or later it will again ask for another franchise. The city can answer, "We want the privilege of buying the bridge. If you refuse to sell, do not ask for favors. No bridge, no franchise."

It has been urged that the street railway company does not own, but merely leases the Douglas Street Bridge, and, hence, if the people refuse a franchise because of inability to sell, the company might go into the hands of a receiver. However, this is merely a pretext, because if it were true that the company could not arrange a sale of the bridge, yet, it must be evident, that it might readily transfer the bridge to the city by a sublease.

RECEIVERSHIP EASILY AVOIDABLE

At an election held early in 1926 the people of Omaha emphatically refused a franchise to the street railway company. However, it is probable that a franchise would be granted if the company offered either to sell or sublease its bridge. Therefore, if a receivership results, it will be the company's fault. In short, it will prefer a receivership to parting with its highly profitable toll bridge.

The second method of pressure would be to amend the city charter, notwithstanding the city now has authority to build a free bridge, in such a manner that the city can vote $1,500,000 for the construction of a new bridge, with a provision to the effect that the fund can be utilized to purchase a bridge in lieu of installing a new structure.

Once the bonds are voted under a charter amendment, with specific instructions to build a bridge if the privilege of purchase is denied, the street railway company will sell.

MISSOURI'S WAY

There is nothing new about this plan. For instance, in St. Charles, Mo., and in that vicinity, public sentiment developed for a free bridge across the Missouri River at that point. Of course, the bridge company did not want to sell their profitable structure.

However, confronted with an overwhelming public sentiment that might at any time translate itself into action for a new bridge, the bridge company agreed to sell and to take their pay out of the earnings of the bridge.

A letter from Mr. Sam Hodgson, chairman St. Charles free bridge committee, under date of August 9 last, says in part:

> The contract (for the sale of the bridge) provides for the payment out of tolls: First, operating expenses; second, 4½ per cent interest on deferred payments; third, balance applied on liquidation of stocks.
> The first 11 months' operation under this contract shows a payment of operating expenses, payment of interest, and $200,000 paid on liquidation of stock.
> With the decrease of interest at the end of each six months and the increase of traffic due to the completion of concrete highway across the State of Missouri from St. Louis to Kansas City, the bridge will be free within four years.

The free-bridge question is wholly within the hands of the people of Omaha. They can have one whenever they are determined to get it, the cost entirely paid out of tolls, and the bridge not only free but clear of debt within four years.

There is nothing magical about this proposition. It is merely due to the inherent possibilities of public enterprise, as illustrated in connection with Omaha's ice plants, which, although the charges for ice are the lowest enjoyed anywhere in the country, paid their entire cost of $700,000 within seven years. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 3693) authorizing the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and the city of Omaha, Nebr., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Missouri River between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO TAX REDUCTION BILL

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 1, the tax reduction bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

SOIL SURVEY OF BILOXI AREA, MISSISSIPPI

Mr. HARRISON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 171), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

> Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies of the soil survey of the Biloxi area, Mississippi, for the use of the Document Room of the United States Senate, after such revision as may be deemed necessary by the Bureau of Soils of the Department of Agriculture.

KATE MATHEWS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3) for the relief of Kate Mathews, which were, on page 1, line 6, after the word "appropriated," to insert "and in full settlement against the Government"; and on page 1, line 12, after the word "Army," to insert ": Provided, That the United States be subrogated to the amount hereby appropriated to any claim said Kate Mathews has against said Roscoe S. O'Hara as a result of a judgment she may have obtained against said Roscoe S. O'Hara in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Hess, one of his secretaries, announced that on March 15, 1928, the President approved and signed the act (S. 2342) providing for a per capita payment of $25 to each enrolled member of the Chippewa Tribe of Minnesota from the funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States.

GREETINGS OF THE SENATE OF HUNGARY—STATUE OF LOUIS KOSSUTH

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that there is in the Vice President's hands a letter from the Hungarian Senate and that the Hungarian minister is here with a delegation. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Vice President will read the letter to the Senate and it will lie on the table. The letter is as follows:

[A Fehöhaz Elnöke]

BUDAPEST, March 3, 1928.

The Hon. CHARLES G. DAWES,
Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, Washington.

Mr. PRESIDENT: At the unveiling in New York on March 15 of the statue of Louis Kossuth, the great Hungarian patriot and noble representative of the rights of human liberty, the Senate of the Hungarian Parliament is going to be represented by a special delegation. Much to my sorrow, I was prevented by other serious engagements from leading the senate delegation in person.

According to plans, the delegation will also visit Washington. This circumstance is giving me the opportunity of sending the friendliest greetings of the Hungarian Senate to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate of the United States. I have asked Mr. Nicholas Jozan, Unitarian Episcopal vicar and member of the delegation, to present my letter.

The long and historic friendship of the classically free and happy American people was always highly treasured by the Hungarians. Hundreds of thousands of emigrating compatriots of ours found during the decades preceding the World War their living and a second home among your hospitable people. As soon as the storm of blood and passions was over, it was the American people whose noble beneficence wiped many a tear and hastened to succor our mutilated country lying prostrate under the blows of an unjust peace treaty.

The present ceremony of unveiling is a further proof of this highly esteemed friendship, and I am happy to seize the opportunity of expressing our heartfelt gratitude and most sincere sympathy.

I have the honor to be

Respectfully yours,

Baron JULIUS WLASSICS,
President of the Senate of Hungary.

NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith for the consideration of the Congress copy of resolutions adopted by the National Forest Reservation Commission at its meeting held on February 18, 1928, together with a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture relating to the proposed addition of certain public lands to the Gunnison National Forest, in the State of Colorado, which have been submitted by the President of the National Forest Reservation Commission.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

The WHITE HOUSE, March 19, 1928.

[NOTE.—Resolutions accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

THE CALENDAR

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the routine morning business the calendar be taken up for the consideration of unobjected bills, commencing where we left off at the last call of the calendar, with Calendar No. 355.

Mr. BRUCE. I object. When we consider the calendar under the regular order, there is an opportunity to make a motion for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the request.

SALES OF FOREIGN MANUFACTURED LEATHER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the preceding day, Senate Resolution 169, offered by Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, which the clerk will read:

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 169) submitted by Mr. REED of Pennsylvania on the 15th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby requested to investigate and report to the Senate the extent of sales of foreign manufactured leather from goat skins and kid skins in the United States since January 1, 1925, and the rates of wages paid workers in the tanning of black and colored kid in the United States and competing countries.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think there should be an explanation of the purpose of instructing the Tariff Commission to make an investigation of this subject matter.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed a similar resolution for the investigation of the amount of imports and the wage costs here and abroad in the production of leather made from calfskins. That was under a resolution presented by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

It seems to be a most appropriate time, if the commission is going to investigate that subject, to investigate also the conditions in the kid-leather tanneries, and that has been urged by a large number of people in that industry. An investigation of the two subjects can be made most economically at the same time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the resolution look to a reduction in rates or to an increase in rates?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It faces both ways, because, as a matter of fact, at the present time 99 per cent of the goatskins that we use in making kid in the United States come from foreign countries, and they come duty free. There is, I understand, some duty on the skins manufactured abroad. The whole problem of tariff on these skins would be raised by the information that was brought in. Partly it would affect the free list, partly it would affect the protected list. I myself do not know in which direction the information would point.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it expected that the imports now on the free list shall be placed on the dutiable list?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I should hope not, because there is no American industry to support nor any likelihood of our being able to build up one. These goatskins come from all over the world, and putting a tariff on those skins would simply raise the price of shoes to Americans without any compensating advantage to any local industry.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no application made under the provisions of the tariff act of 1922, known as the flexible tariff act, for an investigation of the subject?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not hear all that was said, and I would like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania just exactly what he seeks. If he desires to have an investigation made respecting goatskins, 99 per cent of which are imported, I can see no advantage, unless the Senator hopes to have the tariff increased under the flexible tariff provisions of the act.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, that is not the situation. We have a considerable industry in America in the tanning of goatskins which come in from abroad. We do not raise our own goatskins. We have to get our raw materials from abroad. But our American tanneries are in direct competition with the tanneries in other lands.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I understand that the flexible provision of the law would not permit placing on the dutiable list a product now on the free list.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Absolutely; I am not talking about that.

Mr. FESS. That was the import of the questions which have been asked.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Two things are involved, the importation of the raw skins and the importation of the tanned or manufactured skins. The inquiry as to wages relates only to the tanning of them, and I have introduced this resolution now because, at the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], a similar resolution was passed, and a similar investigation ordered on the wage costs in the tanning of calfskins here and abroad. The two investigations could be made at the same time at considerably less expense than if they were undertaken separately. That is the whole reason for my introducing the resolution at this time, to get it to the Tariff Commission so as to have the two things handled at the same time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania is a very reasonable one. The other day the Senate passed my resolution proposing the same thing in reference to calfskins, and I hope this resolution will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The bill (S. 1182) to provide for the naming of certain highways through State and Federal cooperation, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1285) to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, a similar bill has been passed by the House and is now before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and it would be well to have the two considered at the same time. Therefore I ask that this bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2277) relating to giving false information regarding the commission of crime in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2447) for the relief of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1476) for the relief of Porter Bros. & Biffle and certain other citizens was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2524) for the relief of Josephine Doxey was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE IN FEDERAL COURTS

The bill (S. 1094) to amend the practice and procedure in Federal courts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DENEEN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CARAWAY. If there is to be objection to the bill, I want to move that it be taken up.

Mr. DENEEN. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 2, line 4, to strike out the words "on either side."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. One page 2, line 10, at the end of section 2, insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, The instructions may be repeated or amplified by the trial judge at any time before verdict, when he feels the ends of justice will be served thereby.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, there seems to be no interest taken in the bill by many of the Members of the Senate, but those of us who are lawyers ought to realize what it does to the established practice in the Federal courts, particularly in the States which follow the old English practice in the trial of cases.

As I understand the bill, it will compel the judge to submit a charge in writing at the conclusion of the trial, and in that charge he is not free to express any opinion formed as to the credibility of witnesses or the weight of the testimony, no matter how slight may be the testimony on one side or the other. He must submit a written charge shorn of any such expressions of guiding opinion for the assistance of the jury, and having submitted such charge he turns the trial of the case over to the opposing counsel to have the last word. It relegates the judge, in my opinion, to a position subordinate to that of counsel. It takes away from him a large part of that wholesome authority he has over the conduct of the trial. It deprives our courts of the same restraining influence that is used so tellingly in the English courts, and to the end of justice in most cases, I believe.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the effect of the bill, so far as instructions are concerned, it is to accomplish two things—first, to prevent the judge from passing upon the force and effect of the testimony and, second, to require him to instruct the jury before, and not after, the argument.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct. When the bill was under discussion before, I made the statement that it was opposed by the American Bar Association and that statement was challenged by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]. I have a letter from Mr. Strickland, who states:

I notice from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, page 3422, that you successfully objected to S. 1094, known as the Caraway bill, to amend the practice and procedure in Federal courts, and again I write to thank you for your interest in the matter. Senator CARAWAY stated to you that "the executive committee objected to it, but the bar association never had a vote on it. They tried to get one and could not do it." Senator CARAWAY is mistaken. President Strawn, of the American Bar Association, is against the bill and the American Bar Association appointed the committee on jurisprudence and law reform to act for it in such matters as the Caraway bill, and by virtue of the action of that committee the American Bar Association is against the bill and individually about 17 members of the committee on jurisprudence and law reform——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator has seen fit to read that letter. I say the bar association did not act on the matter. Here is what happened, and the gentleman who wrote the letter—the Senator did not give his name—if he is familiar with the facts, is consciously distorting the facts.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did give the name. His name is Mr. Reeves T. Strickland and his office is 420 Woodward Building in this city.

Mr. CARAWAY. He is either consciously not telling the truth or he does not know. I do not care which end of the statement he sees fit to accept. Here is what happened. The executive committee was divided on the question and the majority opposed it. That was some years ago. It went to the bar association in its general meeting. There was a demand for a vote on it. There was a viva voce vote and the Chair said he was undecided. They tried then to get a yea-and-nay vote, a record vote, but never got it. Therefore anyone who says the association is against it either does not know what he is talking about or is willfully misrepresenting what the facts are. That is the history of the thing.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have no knowledge, but Mr. Strickland tells me that he is a member of this committee, or at least is familiar with their action.

Mr. CARAWAY. He was not even a member of the committee when the matter came up. Mr. Strickland is like many other folks who are entirely willing to testify without knowing anything about what the facts are.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then we are thrown back on our own judgment of the bill, since there must be some doubt as to what the American Bar Association thinks about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I say, there is no question about it. I know what the facts are.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am a little embarrassed about that. Of course, if the Senator states that of his own knowledge——

Mr. CARAWAY. I state it from absolutely knowing what the facts are and the briefs in the case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the Senator must be correct and Mr. Strickland must be wrong, but he seems to think he was as sure of himself as is now the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, the Senator knows Mr. Strickland is right about it, and so we will let it go.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know anything particularly about it and I do not particularly care, because my own opinion of it is very clear that the bill will seriously impair a most wholesome authority now exercised by the trial judge in jury cases in the Federal courts.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. CARAWAY. In 1924 when the bill was before the Senate the Senator from Pennsylvania offered certain amendments to it, and it was passed with his approval. I call his attention to the RECORD of March 28, 1924.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I shall be glad to look that up. My recollection is that no one else seemed to find the slightest interest in the bill, no one else shared my views about it, and that I tried to make the best of a bad bargain by softening its provisions where I could.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am particularly interested in the assertion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the present practice generally prevailing in district courts of the United States, under which the judge discusses the credibility of witnesses and sometimes expresses an opinion as to conclusions of facts, is far superior, in so far as the ends of justice are concerned, to that which makes the jury the exclusive judges of the facts.

Mr. President, there is a very vital and important question involved in the bill. It is a real issue. It can not be determined by merely saying that this lawyer favors it and that lawyer opposes it, or this organization of lawyers supports it and that organization of lawyers opposes it. The bill goes to the question of the right of jury trial uninterfered with, as to questions of fact, by the presiding judge.

I believe that the change proposed by the bill of the junior Senator from Arkansas is wholesome. The provision or one similar is in effect in many of the States. It governs the procedure of the trial court. There the juries are the sole judges of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses. No judge, however great his bias or however powerful his prejudice, under the practice in some of the State courts to which I am now referring, is authorized to interfere with the free and untrammeled decision of jurors under the evidence as to all questions of fact submitted to them by the court.

We all know that the judge is very influential in a trial. If he exercises the privilege of expressing his opinion as to whether a witness has sworn truthfully or untruthfully, or if he exercises the right now granted to him to arrive at conclusions of fact from the testimony, unless there is an antagonism provoked in some way between the judge and the jury the jury is strongly disposed to come to the conclusion expressed by the judge. If judges were perfect, if they could not be subjected to bias or prejudice, the system would work always to promote the ends of justice. But that is not the case. Judges, like other men, are subject to influences respecting their conclusions of fact as are others. The bill is designed to take away from district judges in the trial of cases the right to argue a case before the jury.

Repeatedly in the trial of cases have I heard a district judge take issue with the position that I have taken, and argue the matter before the jury usually more effectively than I could argue it. It can not be said that under a system of that sort the jury are the sole judges of the facts. If we believe in the jury system of trial, if we stand upon the right of trial by jury, that means that we are willing to have a given number of men, qualified under the law within the jurisdiction where the trial occurs, pass upon the questions of fact at issue. It implies that the judge who presides over the trial shall not employ the functions of his great office to influence or control decisions of jurors with respect to the facts. Lawyers who represent corporations usually prefer the present practice, and lawyers who represent other interests usually prefer the change suggested by the bill. The practical effect of it will be to leave all the issues of fact involved in the case for decision by the jury, uninfluenced by the opinion of the court as to either the credibility of the witnesses or the force which should be ascribed to the evidence. That is the simple issue in the case.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know how I obtained the floor. I think I took it away from the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I apologize to him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator got the floor and exhausted my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I realize there was no motion made, but I think I should not claim more time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, when I practiced law in the State courts in Virginia a judge could not give any instruction to the jury except as to the law; all questions of fact and as to the weight of the testimony were left to the jury, and a fair and honest jury trial was had. The Federal judges, on the other hand, arrogated to themselves the right to instruct the jury as to the facts.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, no, Mr. President; it is reversible error to do that.

Mr. SWANSON. They do not instruct the jury as to the facts, but pass their opinion on the facts. If, under our State practice in Virginia, a jury rendered a verdict which was contrary to the law and to the evidence the verdict could be set aside, but the judge had no right to instruct the jury as to the weight of the evidence or to pass on the credibility of witnesses until the question came up as to whether the verdict should be set aside as being contrary to the law or the evidence.

The Federal courts at that time would really talk to the jury as to the weight of the evidence, and, as a matter of fact, it amounted practically to instruction to find a verdict so and so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me an interruption there?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The best arguments in a case very frequently were made by the judge who presided at the trial.

Mr. SWANSON. It was an outrage and amounted to practically destruction of the right of trial by jury. If a man in Virginia wanted to prevent a case being determined by a jury—which was always his right under Anglo-Saxon law and under the Constitution of the United States—he would resort to every possible scheme to take the case from the State court to the Federal court.

I know when I practiced law and had cases pending in the Federal court, suits for damages and other cases, all kinds of schemes were resorted to to have the cases removed from the State court to the Federal court, hoping practically to prevent a jury trial in the case. That is what it amounted to. I do not think such a practice is right. The people of America were guaranteed under the bill of rights trial by jury. It ought to be an honest trial, uninterfered with by the judge passing upon the credibility of witnesses and making suggestions to the jury as to the witnesses and the testimony.

If this bill prevents such action, it seems to me it is merely carrying into effect the provisions of the Constitution by affording the people an honest trial by jury and allowing the jury to pass upon the facts in the case. It seems to me that this bill ought to conform the practice in the Federal court to the practice in the State courts of Virginia and of the other States. A man ought not to be permitted to remove a cause from a State court to a Federal court in order to get an advantage by having the judge comment upon the testimony and upon the credibility of witnesses.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, when this bill was called I interposed an objection to it. I interposed the objection merely because I mistook the identity of the bill. I supposed it was a bill to confer on the Supreme Court power to adopt rules in relation to common-law actions analogous to those which have been prescribed in relation to equity proceeding. I simply wish to say, speaking from quite an extended experience as a general practitioner, that in all respects I approve of the features of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). The question is, Shall the bill be reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments be concurred in?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it has been more than 20 years since I practiced law. When I did practice law, in both Federal and State courts, I found reason to complain of the attitude of certain of the Federal judges in the trial of causes; and I felt that the practical effect of their interference was to give one party the benefit of a trial by the judge instead of a trial by the jury. At that time, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has stated, there was a great disposition on the part of certain litigants to remove their causes to the Federal courts. Wherever there was the slightest pretense of Federal jurisdiction, the action was brought in the Federal court; wherever the defendants in an action could find the slightest pretext for removing it to the Federal court, that recourse was had, largely for the purpose of securing the benefit of a trial substantially by a judge instead of a trial by jury, as provided in the State courts.

However, in recent years, I have been advised by members of the bar of my State that our Federal judges in North Carolina have, as a rule, been conforming to the State practice in this respect, and have not been undertaking, directly or indirectly, to express an opinion with reference to facts or the weight of testimony; and that because of this circumstance, there has been a change in the disposition of litigants of a certain kind who formerly sought the Federal instead of the State court.

I am heartily in favor of this bill, because I think in this country the old system that has obtained in the States from the very beginning, of permitting the judge to determine the law and to give it to the jury, and clothing the jury with the sole and exclusive power of determining the weight of testimony and deciding the case according to the testimony, is a very good rule, a very salutary practice. It is one that protects the rights of the humblest as well as of the most powerful litigants. I, therefore, hope that the bill may be passed and this evil, which has been tolerated for so long a time in many jurisdictions, may be abolished. I am happy to say the evil does not prevail in all jurisdictions even now, for, as I have stated, I am advised that in certain jurisdictions Federal judges have ceased to exercise this prerogative which existing law confers and are of their own motion conforming themselves to the better practice obtaining in the State courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Are we proceeding under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is proceeding under Rule VIII. A Senator may speak but once and for five minutes only.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call attention to the fact that this measure is being discussed despite objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the objection was withdrawn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was not aware of that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I favored the pending bill in the committee, I should like to say a word as to the reason for my support of it. The purpose of the bill is, in the first instance, to prevent Federal judges from passing upon the evidence and the effect of testimony, the credibility, as it were, of witnesses; and, in the second place, to require a judge to instruct the jury prior to the argument upon the part of counsel.

The second purpose of the bill—that is, requiring the judge to instruct the jury before the counsel make their argument—seems to me to be the orderly way to present a cause. If the attorneys are to argue the cause intelligently before the jury, they must know the law to which the facts are to be applied. I presume all attorneys have had the experience of arguing cases at length before a jury and ascertaining, upon hearing what the court's instructions were, that their theory of the law, and, therefore, its application to the facts, was wholly afield from what the court deemed it should be. One thing that this bill seeks to accomplish is to have the law laid down by the court to the jury before the argument of counsel shall take place.

The other proposition is that of requiring the judge not to express an opinion upon the facts. The bill provides:

> That hereafter in any cause pending in any United States court, triable by jury, in which the jury has been impaneled to try the issue of facts, it shall be reversible error for the judge presiding in said court to express his personal opinion as to the credibility of witnesses or the weight of testimony involved in said issue.

I have had the experience, and I doubt not all others who have tried cases in the Federal courts have had similar experience, of having the Federal judge express an opinion upon the credibility of a witness, as to his being unworthy of belief, and as to the effect of the testimony given by a certain line of witnesses, and then, after having expressed his opinion and advised the jury as to his view, in the closing sentence of his instruction, perhaps, say that, "While the judge has expressed the opinion upon this state of facts and upon this witness or that witness, the jury will understand that they are the sole judges of the credibility of witnesses and of the facts," which, of course, does not remedy at all the effect of the judge's previous statement. When a Federal judge presiding says to a jury, "This line of evidence proves so and so," or "fails to prove anything," or "this witness or these witnesses are not credible witnesses," it amounts to nothing in a practical way for him later to say to the jury that they are the judges of the credibility of the witnesses. The effect of the influence and the power of the judge has been exerted and the compliance with the spirit of the Constitution in afterwards instructing the jury that they are the judges of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses accomplishes very little.

I think, Mr. President, so long as we retain the jury system that the jury should be the sole judges of the facts and that when they come to judge the facts they should have the law from the court and nothing but the law, and that the instruction as to the law should be given in time to enable the counsel who represent clients to argue the facts in the light of the law which the court has announced. I support the bill, Mr. President, because I think it the more orderly way of presenting a cause intelligently to the jury.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to raise a point of order? The Senator has already spoken once upon the bill and, under Rule VIII, it is not in order for him to speak again.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the restrictions on debate under Rule VIII shall not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARAWAY. That would mean, Mr. President, that the Senator could take an hour. I am perfectly willing that he should have any reasonable time, and I shall make no objection to his having a reasonable time to discuss the measure, but I do not think the debate should be altogether unlimited.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am simply pressing my point in a pleasanter way. I also have the option of objecting to the bill and of forcing the Senator to move to take it up, and if he does that, then the restriction on debate will not apply.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall not object.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORBECK. Do I understand that the request that the restriction on debate be removed shall merely apply to the Senator from Pennsylvania? If so, I have no objection; but if it is to open the whole question to unlimited debate, I think I shall have to object.

Mr. BORAH. The granting of the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania will not interfere with the bill of which the Senator from North Dakota is in charge at 2 o'clock.

Mr. NORBECK. Very well; I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Pennsylvania is granted.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the restrictions on debate provided by Rule VIII shall not apply in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Did this bill come up by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill came up under unanimous consent. Objection has been made and withdrawn. Under Rule VIII debate is limited to five minutes, and each Senator can speak but once.

Mr. SWANSON. Under the rule, after it is once taken up by unanimous consent, can one objection make it go over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that objection may be made at any time.

Mr. SWANSON. Then the Senator has the power to put the bill over anyway.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly. I am simply trying to do it pleasantly, instead of being forced to object to the bill and having a motion made and coming to the same end in the long run.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to remember that this bill applies as well to criminal cases as it does to civil cases. If there is one thing about which every lawyer feels a consciousness of shame, it is the tardy administration of justice in criminal cases in the United States. When we contrast the trial of criminal cases here with those tried in England, when we see how much more rapidly they reach their judgments, when we realize that their decision is just there in quite as large a proportion of the cases as in this country, we are impressed with the necessity of doing all that we can to avoid technicalities and speed up the procedure in the administration of our criminal law.

Now, see the result if we pass this bill.

A defendant may be convicted of a crime on wholly discreditable evidence for the prosecution. Without being tied down as this bill will tie him, the judge may say to the jury in the original trial of the case that in his opinion the testimony of the prosecution does not carry much weight, and that he does not believe that it justifies a conviction. Nevertheless, this bill would force the judge to let the case go on to the jury without that helpful expression of opinion; the verdict would be one of guilty, and then the judge would have to set aside the verdict and let the case go back for a new trial and a repetition of the whole business, because in his opinion the verdict is against the weight of the evidence.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, has the Senator overlooked the proviso in line 8, reading:

> Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the court directing a verdict when the same may be required or permitted as a matter of law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; I have not forgotten that; but it often happens that the weight of the evidence is all in favor of one side, and yet there is some evidence that requires submission to a jury.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President, in all the practice in the States and in the United States courts, too, if in the opinion of the court the evidence does not warrant a verdict, the court has the right to instruct the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The phrase "does not warrant a verdict" is a little bit loose. If there is no evidence to sustain a verdict, the court has the right to direct a verdict. If there is some evidence, but if the weight of the evidence is against the verdict, the only thing the court can do is to let the case go to verdict and then order a new trial. I state that with some positiveness because I have had it used against me many times.

Mr. CURTIS. I state the matter with a good deal of confidence because I have tried a large number of cases in the State and the United States courts, and I know what the practice is in our part of the country, not only in the State courts but in the United States courts. I think this bill would be an immense improvement over the practice in the United States courts at this time, because a lawyer can hardly take up a case in some of the United States courts without finding the judge taking his side or the other side soon after the case is begun.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then perhaps the trouble is with the judges.

Mr. CURTIS. Perhaps.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Perhaps we are more fortunate with our judges in the East, because we do not seem to have that trouble; and this control over the jury by the expression of opinion is found to be most salutary.

For that reason, Mr. President, this seems to me to be a step backward. The tendency of it will be to bring down the standard of judicial practice in the United States.

I am not the sole arbiter of judicial procedure in the Senate. I hope that some of our colleagues who have had the advantage of service on the bench will give us their opinions of the merits of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is a matter of unanimous consent.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 61) granting an increase of pension to Louise A. Woed was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. NORBECK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1271, being Order of Business 106, the migratory bird bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to call for a quorum? There are a number of Senators who want to be here when that bill is taken up.

Mr. CURTIS. The motion would be pending if the Senator called for a quorum.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. Am I to understand that the Senator from Utah objects to taking up the bill?

Mr. KING. No; I say a number of Senators are absent, and I desired to call for a quorum if the Senator was moving to take up the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota has moved to take up the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has anyone asked for a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the request has not been made.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	La Follette	Sackett
Barkley	Edwards	McKellar	Schall
Bayard	Fess	McLean	Sheppard
Bingham	Fletcher	McMaster	Shipstead
Black	Frazier	McNary	Shortridge
Blaine	George	Mayfield	Simmons
Blease	Gerry	Metcalf	Smith
Borah	Glass	Moses	Smoot
Bratton	Gooding	Neely	Steck
Brookhart	Hale	Norbeck	Steiwer
Broussard	Harris	Norris	Stephens
Bruce	Harrison	Nye	Swanson
Capper	Hawes	Oddie	Tydings
Caraway	Hayden	Overman	Tyson
Copeland	Heflin	Phipps	Wagner
Couzens	Howell	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Johnson	Ransdell	Warren
Cutting	Jones	Reed, Mo.	Waterman
Dale	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Watson
Deneen	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Dill	King	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1271, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, are we still acting under the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is proper for the Senator from South Dakota to move at this time to take up the bill, notwithstanding the objection. Objection was made, and he has the right to move to take it up, and that motion is not debatable until 2 o'clock. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk read the title of the bill.

The bill was read by title, as follows:

A bill to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, this is a modified bill, somewhat similar to bills which have been pending in the Senate for several years covering this same subject. A number of years ago a similar bill passed the Senate but did not pass the House during that Congress. A similar bill passed the House during another Congress and was not taken up in the Senate.

Briefly, it is a migratory bird refuge bill. Some splendid work was done in connection with the treaty with Canada through the agency of Great Britain for the establishment of migratory-bird refuges and the protection of migratory birds both in Canada and in this country.

The Dominion of Canada has provided 40 inviolate bird refuges. The condition in Canada is not so congested as is the condition here in this country; the birds are less disturbed than they are here. The trouble has been due not only to the hunting but to the encroachment of industrial activities, the waste of oil upon our waters, and the drainage of the swamps, which conditions have driven the birds away because they have no place to nest.

I want to emphasize the fact that the main thing provided for in this bill is the acquiring of some refuges. The idea is to stop unnecessary drainage by buying the lands suitable for bird refuges and preserving it. Nothing would be bought except in cooperation with the States, and upon their approval.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator says the main purpose is to buy lands for refuges. So far as the people are concerned, would not the main effect of the bill be to compel everybody who wants to hunt anywhere in the United States to buy a Federal license?

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator will wait, I will get to that after a little. The money must be raised in some way, and it is a question as to which way the funds shall be raised; that is true.

I ask that at this point the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GERRY. May we not have the bill read?

Mr. NORBECK. If Senators desire, I shall be glad to change the request and ask that the clerk read the bill.

Mr. GERRY. I would like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUTTING in the chair). The clerk will read the bill.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of "migratory bird conservation act."

SEC. 2. That a commission to be known as the migratory bird conservation commission, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, as chairman; the Secretary of Commerce; the Postmaster General; and two Members of the Senate, to be selected by the President of the Senate; and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be selected by the Speaker, is hereby created and authorized to consider and pass upon any area of land, water, or land and water that may be recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for purchase or rental under this act, and to fix the price or prices at which such area may be purchased or rented; and no purchase or rental shall be made of any such area until it has been duly approved for purchase or rental by said commission. The members of the commission hereby created shall serve as such only during their incumbency in their respective official positions, and any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as for original appointment: Provided, That the ranking officer of the branch or department of a State to which is committed the administration of its game laws, or his authorized representative, and in a State having no such branch or department, the governor thereof, or his authorized representative, shall be a member ex officio of said commission for the purpose of considering and voting on all questions relating to the acquisition, under this act, of areas in his State.

SEC. 3. That the commission hereby created shall, through its chairman, annually report in detail to Congress, not later than the first Monday in December, the operations of the commission during the preceding fiscal year.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall recommend no area for purchase or rental under the terms of this act except such as he shall determine is necessary for the conservation of migratory game birds.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase or rent such areas as have been approved for purchase or rental by the commission, at the price or prices fixed by said commission, and to acquire by gift or device, for use as migratory-bird reservations, areas which he shall determine to be suitable for such purposes, and to pay the purchase or rental price and expenses incident to the location, examination, and survey of such areas and the acquisition of title thereto, including options when deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, from moneys to be appropriated by Congress from the migratory-bird conservation fund: Provided, That no lands acquired, held, or used by the United States for military purposes shall be subject to any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things and make all expenditures necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the areas which may be acquired under this act, but no payment shall be made for any such areas until the title thereto shall be satisfactory to the Attorney General, but the acquisition of such areas by the United States shall in no case be defeated because of rights of way, easements, and reservations which from their nature will in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture in no manner interfere with the use of the areas so encumbered for the purposes of this act; but such rights of way, easements, and reservations retained by the grantor or lessor, from whom the United States receives title, shall be subject to rules and regulations prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture for the occupation, use, operation, protection, and administration of such areas as migratory-bird reservations; and it shall be expressed in the deed or lease that the use, occupation, and operation of such rights of way, easements, and reservations shall be subordinate to and subject to such rules and regulations.

SEC. 7. That no deed or instrument of conveyance shall be accepted by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act unless the State in which the area lies shall have consented by law to the acquisition by the United States of lands in that State.

SEC. 8. That the jurisdiction of the State, both civil and criminal, over persons upon areas acquired under this act shall not be affected or changed by reason of their acquisition and administration by the United States as migratory-bird reservations, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States is concerned.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act is intended to interfere with the operation of the game laws of the several States applying to migratory game birds in so far as they do not permit what is forbidden by Federal laws and regulations.

SEC. 10. That no person shall take any bird, or nest, or egg thereof, or knowingly disturb, injure, or destroy any notice, signboard, fence, building, ditch, dam, dike, embankment, flume, spillway, or other improvement or property of the United States on any area acquired under this act, or cut, burn, or destroy any timber, grass, or other natural growth, on said area or on any area of the United States which heretofore has been or which hereafter may be set apart or reserved for the use of the Department of Agriculture as a game refuge or as a preserve or reservation and breeding ground for native birds, under any law, proclamation, or Executive order, or enter thereon for any purpose, except in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; but nothing in this act or in any regulation thereunder shall be construed to prevent a person from entering upon any area acquired under this act for the purpose of fishing in accordance with the law of the State in which such area is located: Provided, That such person complies with the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture covering such area.

SEC. 11. That the primary purpose of this act is to provide necessary areas for feeding and breeding places for migratory game birds in order that an adequate supply of said birds may be maintained, but when in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture a sufficient surplus of said birds exists, so that public hunting of migratory game birds on certain of said areas or parts thereof would not endanger the future supply of said birds, he may by public notice permit such public hunting, under such regulations as he may prescribe, free of charge, except for the regular migratory-bird hunting license provided for in this act and for licenses required under State laws. Whenever the surplus migratory game birds decrease so that further public hunting on any such area, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, might prove harmful to the future supply of said birds, he shall give public notice and close said area to hunting so long as said conditions prevail.

SEC. 12. That for the purposes of this act migratory game birds are those defined as such by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds, concluded August 16, 1916.

SEC. 13. That no person shall take any such migratory game bird or nest, or egg thereof, nor shall any person take for scientific or propagating purposes any migratory bird mentioned in said treaty, or nest, or egg thereof, unless and until he has a license pursuant to this act, and then he may take any such bird, or nest, or egg thereof, respectively, only in accordance with the Federal law and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture adopted and approved pursuant thereto; such license, however, shall not be required of any person or member of his immediate family resident with him to take in accordance with such law and regulations any such migratory game bird on any land owned or leased by such person and occupied by him as his permanent abode, nor shall such license be required of any employee of the Federal Government or of any State or of any other person authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to take in accordance with such regulations any migratory birds which have become seriously injurious to agricultural or other interests, nor of any employee of the Federal Government or of any State who is authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to collect migratory birds and their nests and eggs for official, scientific, or educational purposes, nor of any person to capture migratory birds for banding in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture under permit of the Secretary of Agriculture for this purpose, and nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any person from complying with the laws of the several States relating thereto.

SEC. 14. That each applicant for a license shall pay $1 therefor and shall sign his name in ink on the face thereof, and each license shall be dated the day of issuance and shall expire and be void after the 30th day of June next succeeding its issuance. Every licensee shall have his license on his person at the time of exercising the privileges thereunder and he shall exhibit it for inspection upon request of any person authorized by the laws of the United States or of any State to enforce the provisions of this act.

SEC. 15. That licenses required by this act shall be issued, and the fees therefor collected, by the Post Office Department under regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General, and such licenses shall be available at post offices throughout the United States. The provisions of the act of January 21, 1914 (38 Stat. L. 278), as amended by the act of July 2, 1918 (40 Stat. L. 754), shall apply to such licenses and funds received from sales thereof in possession of postmasters.

SEC. 16. L. 187), sections 241, 242, 243, and 244 of the Penal Code, for cooperation with local authorities in wild-life conservation, for investigations and publications relating to North American birds, for personal services, printing, engraving, and issuance of licenses, circulars, posters, and other necessary matter, and for the repayment of the $50,000 as provided for in this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General, respectively, are authorized and directed to make such expenditures and to employ such means, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing objects.

SEC. 20. That in order to pay initial expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, supplies, printing and distributing of licenses, circulars, posters, and other necessary matter, and all other expenses that may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, the sum of $50,000 is hereby authorized

All sums so received by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Any person brought before a United States commissioner of competent jurisdiction for a hearing on a complaint charging a violation of sections 10, 17, or 18 of this act, or any regulation made pursuant to section 10 hereof, or of the migratory bird treaty act, or any regulation made pursuant thereto, or of sections 241, 242, 243, or 244 of the Penal Code, or any amendment thereof, and who at such hearing admits the violation, may within such time as the commissioner may allow, not exceeding 10 days, pay to said commissioner, such sum not exceeding the maximum fines prescribed by said acts and sections, respectively, as may be fixed by said commissioner, and upon payment thereof and of the legal costs such person shall be relieved from prosecution for said violation. During the reading of the bill—

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator who wanted to have the bill read has not remained in the Chamber while the bill was being read, I suggest that it simply be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator made the request that the bill be read, and it should be read.

Mr. NORBECK. The request is now to dispense with the further reading of the bill, but if the Senator objects that will end it.

Mr. DILL. I object. The Senator asked that the bill be read.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator who asked for the reading of the bill is not in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, a motion is in order to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORBECK. Do I understand the Chair holds that it is necessary to make a motion at this time in order to proceed with the consideration of the bill? If so, I move that we proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding any objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if there is no unfinished business before the Senate, I do not see the necessity of moving to proceed to the consideration of a bill which is already under consideration. There is no unfinished business. It is an unusual situation in the Senate. Ordinarily at 2 o'clock the Chair would lay before the Senate the unfinished business, that hour now having arrived, but there being no unfinished business I doubt very much the procedure suggested.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the pending bill, being still before the Senate at 2 o'clock and there being no other unfinished business, becomes the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is proceeding under Rule VIII, which provides that—

> At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar of bills and resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

The motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill is in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Chair rule upon the point of order I raised? I made the point of order that the pending bill, having been before the Senate when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived and there being at that hour no other unfinished business, became the unfinished business.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand it has been so held on two or three different occasions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that is the correct solution.

Mr. CURTIS. If it is not, I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that he submit his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota has already made the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The motion is debatable and I wish to be heard on it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Chair rule upon my point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is pending before this body a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce commonly known as the flood control bill. There is great necessity for the early consideration of that measure because it is one of the big questions before the Congress of the United States. The Committee on Commerce has reported a bill, many of the features of which have challenged criticism and invited amendment.

It was expected when the Congress met that flood-control legislation would be given a priority over measures which were not of an emergency nature. There were difficulties in the problem which are not commonly understood. A long period has elapsed since the Congress met and no action has as yet been taken by either body. Many disputed features of the legislation remain unsettled. During the last few days there have been conferences designed to work out agreements which would facilitate the passage of flood-control legislation.

I want to commend the spirit which has been exemplified by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] in his control, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, of the measures submitted to the Senate respecting this subject. He has been ready at all times to deliberate upon the questions presented and he has been quick to yield his personal views in order to promote the end which so many Senators desire.

There exists in the two Houses of the Congress diverse viewpoints respecting the legislation. The session is already well advanced. It is entirely possible that such differences may manifest themselves in the progress of the debate respecting flood control, that the session may approach its end with nothing done. To my mind that would be a calamity for which the Members of Congress would not wish to be responsible. Even after the two Houses have passed a flood control bill there will be differences which will prove very difficult to harmonize and reconcile. I state this to show the necessity for early consideration and action concerning the subject of flood control.

Comparing the importance of flood control with the bill which is now brought forward, I think there can be little difference of opinion as to the conclusion that flood-control legislation is of far greater importance. Some time ago the majority steering committee placed on its calendar for consideration the bill which the Senator from North Dakota now moves to be considered.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. Perhaps it is expecting too much that my residence shall not be moved, but I do not want to be moved from State to State. However, that is not what I rose to refer to. I am not from North Dakota nor from North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I apologize to the Senator. By a mere inadvertence I said North Dakota when I should have said South Dakota. I apologize to the Senator from South Dakota and to the Senator from North Dakota, if any apology is required. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORBECK. It has been my pleasure to be a member of the so-called steering committee, or, rather, the committee on order of business. The first knowledge I had about the urgency of flood control as coming to that committee was at a meeting about 10 days ago when a joint request came from the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that it might be placed on the calendar immediately after the migratory bird bill. I helped to place it there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me, I was just about to proceed to make that statement.

I have said that, in my judgment, there is no comparison between the importance of the proposed legislation for flood control and the importance of the bill relating to migratory birds. With amendments which are in contemplation, I expect to support the latter bill. As the Senator from South Dakota knows, I have heretofore taken that attitude. But I realize that there is bitter opposition to the migratory bird bill. It has been brought forward in the Senate repeatedly and in different sessions of the Congress debated week after week. I have never contributed to any degree to that process. I recognize the fact that there are still Senators who are likely to make an effort to prolong debate on the migratory bird bill.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to make a brief statement in connection with that matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORBECK. A similar bill has once passed this body and at another session of Congress passed the other body. There was considerable opposition to the bill here in the last Congress when we had it up for consideration, especially by one Senator who opposed it very vigorously, and interposed a good many objections to it, with the result that the Senate spent about 13 or 14 hours in consideration of the bill, covering many days, because many other matters were taken up in the meantime. That Senator came to me two weeks ago, when the bill was reached, when there was no other matter of urgency pending, and when everybody was ready to take it up. He said if we would permit it to go back to the committee and have a further hearing there, he would not filibuster against it; but he was still opposed to it, and stated that he would make a speech against it and vote against it, but would not prolong the fight, and would give us a chance to get a vote on it. I wanted to make the matter entirely harmonious, and so I arranged to have the committee hold hearings on the bill. The Senator brought his witnesses here and they were heard, and the bill is reported now back to the Senate. I have done my part and I am ready for him to do his part with reference to the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, may I say a word?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I think the Senator from South Dakota probably refers to me, although I was not the only one, as I think there were two or three Senators involved. I had an understanding, as I thought, with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry last year that I would have an opportunity to present witnesses and be heard before the bill was reported out of committee. The chairman of that committee stated that he overlooked my request and did not realize that I had asked for such hearings. The bill was reported and was on the calender. When it was brought up in the Senate I objected to the bill being taken up at that time and asked that a hearing might be had before the committee.

I said I would not filibuster, but I do intend to discuss the bill at some length. I do that because I think it is the entering wedge for extending the bureaucratic system of the Department of Agriculture out into the country such as has never been done in the history of the country before. I intend to oppose the bill with all the vigor I possess, and I shall discuss it at some length.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, may I inquire if there is not a provision in the bill to bar the country boy with a single-barrel shotgun?

Mr. NORBECK. Not on his own ground.

Mr. DILL. Not on his own ground? If he is anywhere in the United States with a gun he can be charged with attempting to shoot migratory birds and brought into court.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am not now discussing the merits of the bill. I want to state some considerations which I think will prove of importance in the further deliberations of the Senate. It is perfectly apparent, even while I have been trying to go forward with my statement, that there is serious opposition to the bill; that the opposition is not confined to a single Senator; that it may be a long time before the bill shall be disposed of.

What I want to say now, and to make clear, is that while I shall cooperate with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] to bring the bill before the Senate, I do not commit myself to the policy or to the purpose of maintaining it here to the exclusion or the prevention of legislation of greater importance. I think the duty of the Senate is to deal with the big questions before it as promptly and as effectively as is possible, and I am not willing, once the migratory bird bill is before the Senate, to say that other more important measures shall not be brought forward, if conditions regarding debate may indicate—as I anticipate in all probability they will—that this measure of relative unimportance is obstructing legislation of greater importance.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I am asking the question for information, knowing the Senator's great interest in the subject to which he is referring. Are those who are either proponents or who have acquiesced in some form of flood-control legislation now prepared to open the discussion upon it? So far as I am concerned, if they are, I think the debate should go ahead right away.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I was just about to proceed with that phase of the subject. I do not understand that the proponents of flood-control legislation are entirely ready to take up the measure. I recognize the right—or the privilege, if Senators prefer that expression—of the chairman of the Commerce Committee to control, within reasonable limitations, the time when that measure shall be brought before the Senate. I understand that negotiations are still in progress among Members of the Senate with respect to proposed amendments to the flood control bill as it has been reported which may, and in all probability will, result in agreement that will facilitate the passage of the flood control bill.

For that reason I defer to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and I consent, in so far as I am capable of consenting or am authorized to consent to anything, that the arrangement which was made before the flood control bill was placed upon the calendar for consideration shall go forward.

I anticipate, however, that a condition may arise in the Senate when it will be necessary to take some action looking to bringing the flood control bill forward.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I think probably that I ought to say here that a meeting of the Commerce Committee has been called for to-morrow morning for the purpose of considering some of the amendments which have been proposed to the bill as reported to the Senate. Some of the amendments are quite strongly urged by members of the committee. After the committee meeting to-morrow morning I shall be ready, so far as I am individually concerned, to take up the bill at any time. I have been ready, so far as that is concerned, I might say, during the last week, but I rather believe that we shall make progress by proceeding in an orderly way. Before the flood control bill was reported the steering committee had recommended the migratory bird bill to come up in the order in which it is now coming up; so I felt that we would really expedite matters by following that course. As I have stated, a meeting of the Commerce Committee has been called for to-morrow morning, and it is hoped that we shall be able to reach an agreement upon some amendments which might otherwise cause considerable debate. I believe we shall be able to make time in the way we are proceeding. After the meeting of the committee to-morrow morning, I shall be ready, whether we reach a special agreement to-morrow morning on those amendments or not, to take up the flood control bill whenever it may be deemed proper to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am in entire accord with the Senator from Washington. I want again to commend the spirit of conciliation, and, I might say, of liberality, which he has displayed since the bill providing for flood control has been reported to the Senate. He is earnestly working, as are a large number of other Senators, to prepare legislation that will be effective in accomplishing the purpose of flood prevention or control within the Mississippi Valley. I wish to take this occasion publicly to acknowledge my recognition of the disposition that he has displayed; and I infer from his closing statement that he is in accord with me in the assertion that a bill which has been before the Senate so long as the migratory bird bill has been, and concerning which no final action has been taken save its passage once through the Senate, ought not to be permitted indefinitely to delay the measure advanced by the Senator from Washington, which is known as the flood control bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. I wish to say in that connection that the migratory bird bill which previously passed the Senate did not contain the objectionable provisions which this bill contains. The migratory bird bill that then passed did not propose to employ Federal game wardens and require Federal licenses, as this bill proposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that raises an element of controversy which may very properly be discussed when the bill shall be before the Senate, if it shall be brought before the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I again yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I wish to say that I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that it would be a calamity for this session of Congress to adjourn without the passage of flood-control legislation; I think it would be absolutely inexcusable, and, so far as I am concerned, this session of Congress is not going to adjourn until flood-control legislation is enacted if I can prevent it. I shall hasten action just as rapidly as I can in order to accomplish what I consider absolutely essential legislation at this session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Again, Mr. President, the Senator from Washington and I are in complete accord. No effort that I can make will be spared to secure the passage of a reasonable and adequate flood-control measure. I do not want that measure to interfere with the fair consideration of other measures, but if an effort should be made to adjourn this Congress—and Senators may think now that that is a far-fetched fear—if an effort should be made to adjourn this Congress before flood-control legislation has been finally passed there will arise a condition in the Congress of the United States, and particularly in the Senate, to which nothing that has ever happened before can be compared.

The biggest question before the Congress now is flood control. The entire Nation was awakened to its importance by the occurrence of a disaster which human language can not describe. I saw the muddy, murky currents of a thousand, aye ten thousand streams gather their mighty volumes and empty themselves into the Mississippi River. I saw fields desolated, homes destroyed, cities submerged. I saw men quit their homes and go out on the levees and work day and night in an effort to stem an irresistible tide. And I saw women gather themselves where the levees were threatened and give the best service that they could perform in an attempt to prevent the levees from breaking. Thousands were driven from their homes. Refugees gathered on narrow strips of land and saw the yellow waters rise until they were threatened with drowning. Hundreds of thousands saw the accumulations of a lifetime swept away and destroyed. The unconquerable spirit, the matchless energy, the determined purpose disclosed by many agencies is recorded in a chapter that thrills the heart.

While the great calamity which caused so much disaster, the loss of many lives, and the destruction of hundreds of millions of dollars of property was prominently in the minds of Members of Congress and of the public not vitally connected with the problem, there seemed no doubt legislation would be quickly brought forward and enacted to prevent the recurrence of such losses in the future. It is not known, but it is true, that there is real danger that effective legislation on the subject may not be passed at this session of Congress; and what I want to make plain, if I can, is that those who regard flood-control legislation as of paramount importance shall not commit themselves to the policy of postponing action until the passage of an adequate measure may become impracticable if not impossible. Giving to the subject the time to which it is entitled, recognizing for flood-control legislation the priority which its importance demands, we shall encounter grave difficulties before a satisfactory measure can be passed; and I want to say now to the Senator from South Dakota and to all other Senators that I think we should recognize the supreme importance of flood-control legislation. Having done that, I am willing and ready that measures of comparatively small importance may take the place which sound sense ascribes to them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think the Senate agrees with the Senator that flood control is of more importance than this bill; but the Senator should remember that when this program was arranged the flood control bill had not been reported, and the steering committee acted upon the measures that were presented to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I stated that.

Mr. CURTIS. I happened to be out of the Chamber when the Senator made that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, if the proposition were a new one and it were a choice between the migratory bird bill and the flood control bill, to be determined upon their relative importance, there could be no question as to what my attitude would be. I have said that, so far as I am able to consent to anything, I consent to the consideration of this bill; but I do not imply that it shall be kept before the Senate indefinitely.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to assure the Senator that, so far as this side is concerned, everything will be done that can be done to hasten action upon flood control and also upon the farm relief measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a press report concerning the resolution or decision of what is known as the Tri-State Committee with respect to the subject matter of flood control legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

VALLEY SUPPORTS JONES FLOOD BILL—TRI-STATE COMMITTEE URGES CONGRESS ADOPT IT BEFORE SESSION ENDS—ASKS FOUR AMENDMENTS—MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION NOT TO BE INTERFERED WITH IS STIPULATION SUGGESTED

MEMPHIS, March 15.—The Tri-State Flood Control Committee to-day unanimously indorsed the flood control bill of Senator JONES, of Washington, which the Senate Commerce Committee has reported favorably, and called upon Senators and Representatives from the Mississippi Valley to support it.

The committee, which represents Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, also urged friends of the valley throughout the country to use their influence to secure passage of the bill.

"While we still maintain that flood relief is a national obligation that should be discharged solely at Federal expense," said a statement issued by the committee after an all-day session, "we are prepared to accept the provisions of the Jones bill, notwithstanding its requirement for some local contribution, because of the urgency of our need and the necessity for the speedy passage of some remedial legislation."

FAILURE THREATENS DISASTER

Failure of such legislation, the statement continued, "is fraught with too much woe and disaster to our country for us not to make every reasonable concession to avoid such failure." The committee urged that the bill be amended substantially as follows:

That it be made clear that it does not curtail the present territorial jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission as to the Mississippi River and its tributaries. That it provide that water diverted through any spillway, flood way, or diversion channel constructed under the provisions of the act shall be regulated, confined, and controlled. That section 5 be clarified so as to show specifically that the Government shall make fair compensation for all property taken, damaged, or subjected to flowage rights in carrying out the provisions of the bill, and that the remedy provided can be invoked either by the Government or at the instance of any party aggrieved.

DELAYS BY CONGRESS NOTED

Pointing out that three and a half months have passed since Congress convened and that no flood-relief measure has been enacted, the committee declared it felt that "further delay seriously jeopardizes the passage of any such legislation at this session, and that it is imperative that the friends of the valley concentrate upon some bill which will afford an adequate measure of relief rather than risk the dire possibility of an adjournment of Congress without flood legislation."

MARTINEAU URGES UNITY

"It is now time," said Federal Judge John E. Martineau, of Arkansas, "to determine whether a modification of our wishes must be made in an effort to get what we can in the way of relief before this Congress adjourns.

"We must have unity of action. A delay might be fatal to the Mississippi Valley. The question of flood control has remained a question since the flood subsided. It is flood time again, and, though there is no immediate fear of another inundation, the country is even less prepared for high water than it was last year. In a few places, I understand, all the gaps have not yet been closed.

"We are at the mercy of nature. Not only that, but the fact that the present Congress is moving to a close without definite action thus far is another reason we must consider it as a crisis. Something must be done, and if the valley must compromise and share part of the burden, it must know what it can do, and act in unity. That is the reason for this conference to-day."

Attending the conference were Judge Martineau, who until yesterday was Governor of Arkansas; former Gov. John M. Parker, of Louisiana; James P. Butler, president of the Canal Bank of New Orleans; L. O. Crosby, of Picayune, Miss.; Oscar Johnson, of Memphis, who represents Mississippi as president of the Pinelands interests; Harvey C. Couch, Arkansas power and railroad magnate; Col. John Fordyce, of Hot Springs, Ark.; and R. R. Rice, Little Rock representative from Arkansas and executive secretary of the committee.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it is evident from the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas that he regards flood relief as of paramount moment; and I do not minimize its importance. However, we have pending a measure for the relief of agriculture. In my opinion, this bill should have priority so far as legislation now before the Senate is concerned.

COTTON PRICES

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me at this time to offer a resolution that is very necessary? If it calls for any discussion whatever I will not ask that it be pressed at this time, though it is every important. It simply asks for an additional appropriation to prosecute the investigation of the subcommittee of the Agricultural Committee. I ask the Senator to yield for a moment in order that I may ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well; I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, since this resolution asks for an additional appropriation, must it not go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. SMITH. I see that under the law any additional appropriation has to be acted upon by the Senate. If the Senator will turn to page 136 of the rules he will find that it has to be acted upon by the Senate. That is the reason why I am asking it. I think every member of the subcommittee and everyone who has kept up with the matter will recognize the absolute importance of prosecuting this inquiry.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution, because under the law we must have an authorization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 172) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate to be made under authority of Senate Resolution 142, agreed to February 13, 1928, hereby is increased from $5,000 to $30,000.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. NORBECK that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, in view of the situation and the expressions upon the floor of the Senate, I move as a substitute that the farm relief bill, known as Calendar No. 509, Senate bill 3555, be made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not in order.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There is a motion pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is. The pending motion is the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] to take up the migratory bird bill.

Mr. HOWELL. I move, as a substitute for that motion——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make the point of order that a substitute motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order.

Mr. HOWELL. Then I offer as an amendment to this motion that we take up as the next Order of Business, Calendar No. 509.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the question is, What are we going to do about farm relief in this session of Congress? We have waited weeks, we have waited months, and now it seems that there are other plans in view. The time to take up agricultural relief is now, and not to defer it and consider such a measure as proposed by the Senator from South Dakota. Neither should flood relief have precedence over farm relief. Therefore, I trust that the Senate will vote down the motion to consider the migratory bird bill at this time. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Barkley	Edge	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bayard	Edwards	La Follette	Sackett
Bingham	Fess	McKellar	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

CONTRIBUTIONS TO REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not discuss the pending motion. I take it that the motion will prevail, and I will content myself with the expression of the hope that no filibustering tactics will ensue to prevent the consideration of the bill for a reasonable time, and to take a vote on it. Then, that we take up the flood-control legislation; and following that, farm relief.

I rose to say a few words with reference to a statement published in the morning papers emanating from one of the Senators from North Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys [Mr. NYE]. Before getting to that, however, let me recall a little past history. In 1919 Chairman Will Hays, of the Republican national campaign committee, in speaking of the committee, employed this language:

I want to see the people get an interest in politics. I want to see them interested in politics as they were in buying Liberty bonds. I want to see them exert a spirit in behalf of their Government in peace time. I want to see more people in politics for what they can give and not for what they can get out of it.

Then on August 20, 1920, Mr. Hays in looking after raising funds to prosecute the campaign of that year, he had a conference with Mr. Penrose. At that time, speaking in Philadelphia, where money hung upon trees and Mr. Hays was ready with his basket to catch it as it dropped, he said:

The plan—

Mr. Hays had a new plan at that time—

The plan is an innovation. It has been established in all States and is moving successfully. Its advantages are obvious.

That was the plan of getting $1,000 contributions, and he gave out a statement saying that he would not accept more than $1,000 campaign contributions. He said he desired the party to be a party of the people. He wanted it to be run by the people. Evidently circumstances later caused him to change his mind and plan. While he was on that same trip, and following a conference with Mr. Penrose, I presume, Mr. Hays said, on September 11 of that year:

It is an innovation of merit recognized by all. Because it is the first effort, it may not succeed. However, we have been several months in a campaign of publicity and organization to develop the idea, and we have every reason to believe that it will succeed. It is the purpose to endeavor to develop in Pennsylvania, as in other States, the effort to popularize the giving of money for campaign purposes by getting small contributions from a great many men and women rather than large contributions from a small number, thus forever eliminating any possible opportunity for sinister influences in connection with money.

Those were the views expressed by the distinguished chairman of the Republican national campaign committee in 1920, and it will be recalled with what pressure they put the boys out to work in those days in order to raise the money. Senators will remember in some of those bulletins that were issued from the headquarters presided over by Mr. Hays at that time he called them the "money boys," and told them to "step on the gas" and "give her full speed." I have here some of the expressions used in those days, and, if I recall correctly, my friend the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] was the chairman of the House Republican campaign committee. Of course, I do not presume that these bulletins were issued with his collaboration or with his approval.

Mr. Hays said in this bulletin:

Boys, get the money. Harding and Coolidge have the confidence of the people. Buy, boys.

"Buy!" "Buy!"

Get the money. The weather is hot, the men are on vacation, meetings are hard to get; but, boys, get the money.

Here is another bulletin:

There are hills to climb, but if you want to make a hill at the same speed you have been running where the road is level you have got to give it more power. Give her the gas; step on it. Get the money.

Boys, please get the money.

Here is another bulletin:

Chicago's campaigns are to be conducted with four full-time divisions and five reserve divisions, which will swing into action the last three days on the public movement, functioning as a "mop-up" battalion.

At the bottom of these bulletins is this:

Our readers are requested not to make this publication public. It is confidential. It is exclusive. The names and the amounts subscribed by donors should not be made public.

Those are the bulletins issued under the direction of Chairman Hays back in 1920, and the idea became so prevalent that money was being corruptly and unjustly and profusely used at that time that the distinguished standard bearer of the Democratic Party charged the use of money in the amount of seven and a half million dollars. It was afterwards proven that the amount was far too small.

During that time Mr. Hays was calling for contributions limited in amount to a thousand dollars. Shortly afterwards they wanted to wipe out a deficit. The deficit was recognized to be something around a million and a half dollars. The Republicans had elected their President and had elected their Vice President, and the President then called a meeting, it will be remembered, of the big, fat fellows from over the country, who had more money than they knew what to do with. So the managers of the Government thought the time appropriate to part some of it from them. They followed the seductive way. They invited and dined them at the White House. The chairman of the Republican National Campaign Committee was present, and Wrigley and Patterson and the Cabinet members were present. Naturally they talked over party finances. That was the subject of conversation. The operation then followed. The Baltimore Sun, which is before me, in flaming headlines the next morning, said:

The lid is off. Now the contributions may come in to any amount.

Then over in Chicago two days afterwards Mr. Upham, who was then the treasurer of the Republican national campaign committee, had a big meeting. He called in more of the fellows. Some of them who had attended the White House dinner went out to attend Upham's dinner. Four members of the Cabinet went. The President, who was then only a Vice President, went out.

Mr. SWANSON. What was the debt?

Mr. HARRISON. It was given as a million and a half.

Mr. SWANSON. What were the names of the four Cabinet members?

Mr. HARRISON. The four Cabinet members who went at that time were Mr. Weeks, then Secretary of War; Mr. Hays, who was then Postmaster General; the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover; and either Daugherty or Fall, or both, were present. The papers of the next morning, in speaking of the speeches before this conference, said Vice President Coolidge made a "rip-snorting" speech. I do not know what kind of a speech a "rip-snorting" speech is. I have heard the President make all kinds of speeches, but I do not think I have heard him make a "rip-snorting" speech. The article said that the Secretary of Commerce made a "humdinger" of a speech. It may be that he will show us in his campaigns in Ohio and Indiana just what a "humdinger" speech is. They were all tied together in 1921 trying to raise money to pay off this big debt of the Republican Party. There was the President, Hoover, Fall, Denby, Daugherty, Weeks, Mellon, and Hays.

Shortly after that they did raise it, and how did they raise it? They did not raise it at that meeting, but they concocted a scheme a little later on which has come out from the investigation being carried on by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. To whom did they apply to raise the money? Who was the angel of the Republican Party who was to furnish the sinews of war to wipe out this debt contracted under the direction of Will Hays? This debt that was then and had for months been giving these leaders of the party concern?

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator say "war" or "oil"?

Mr. HARRISON. I said "war." It was Mr. Sinclair, who helped to organize the Continental Trading Co. and made money so rapidly that it piled up in its own reserve, and then they went out and bought the Liberty bonds. When Mr. Hays, then, in order to pay off this Republican debt, appealed to Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Sinclair said: "Yes, Bill; I will help to do it. Your crowd down there have been good to me. I am going to help you out in your troubles."

Upham, who was treasurer of the Republican Party, one month after the Teapot Dome lease was made wrote a letter to Republican leaders everywhere, and in that letter he said:

President Harding and his Cabinet have performed mighty satisfactorily.

Yes; they had performed satisfactorily. Thirty days before, as I said, they had leased Elk Hills and the Teapot Dome to Doheny and to Sinclair. So when Mr. Hays appealed to Mr. Sinclair the latter said, "Yes; here are the Government bonds. Take them. Here is $75,000 that I contribute."

Of course, Bill forgot about that $75,000 in bonds when he was testifying before the committee in 1924, I think it was. He said at that time that Mr. Sinclair gave him $75,000 in cash, but in his more recent testimony he said it was $75,000 in bonds that he had given to him. His memory had temporarily failed him. But Bill says now, "Sinclair, we want more than that. We want to pay off the debt. We have some creditors who are right on our heels." So Sinclair said, "Not only take this $75,000, but take $185,000 more."

That much has come out. The Lord knows how much more would come out if the truth were told as to what he had given to the Republican leaders in bonds to wipe out their debt. But he gave them the $185,000 in addition to the $75,000. He gave $50,000 of it, I believe, over to Pratt to pay off some debt, and it developed afterwards that Mr. Pratt returned those bonds to somebody. He sent Mr. Upham $60,000 of the bonds, and he gave to another member of President Harding's Cabinet, John Weeks, $25,000 more of those bonds.

We used to think that there were two Cabinet members of this administration who had been touched by the Teapot Dome scandal, but more recent events show that others were touched by it through these Liberty bonds. Weeks was one of the leaders of the Republican Party. He had been in charge of the western headquarters in 1920, and to him was given $25,000 of those bonds, through Hays, by Sinclair. Not only that. Mr.

Hays was then in the Cabinet. He had not resigned in 1922. Work, who is now the Secretary of the Interior, managing the campaign of Herbert Hoover, it is said, was then Assistant Postmaster General, under Will Hays, and his assistant on his executive committee in the management of the Republican campaign of 1920.

So every day it goes further on with more entanglements, more confusion, more scandal. Mr. Hays got the money. Then he came down to Andy, Handy Andy. He sent him a package of $50,000 in bonds.

"Handy" did not remember how long he kept those bonds, but he kept them a while. He did not return them by the next mail. He received those bonds at a time following the broadcasting everywhere, by the newspapers, of the testimony of Magee and other revelations which had come out before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. If Mr. Mellon did not know at that time that Sinclair was involved and that he was being charged everywhere with having corrupted Fall and everybody else that he could in connection with the oil reserves, he was the only man in the United States who was ignorant of it. They had sent for witnesses from New Mexico. Those witnesses came up and had all testified. All this was being published in the papers at the time that Sinclair handed to Hays the $260,000 of Liberty bonds, and while Hays was peddling them out to Republican leaders throughout the country in order to borrow money or to put them up as a pledge, so to speak. The country at the time was on fire over the scandal.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope the Senator will not forget to remark, however, that Mr. Mellon was very careful that those bonds should not corrupt other moneys. He took them home and put them under the mattress, I think, and did not mix them up with any other bonds.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. Handy, whom some of the papers have seen fit to congratulate because he turned back to Hays this filthy lucre, kept it for some time; I do not know how long, and he did not know, and Hays did not know. But he kept it and finally Hays came down to see him when he was getting the bonds back from Pratt. When he saw the exposé about to come and was enlarging at too rapid a gait and was liable to bring everybody and everything connected with the Republican organization into it, then it was that he came down to see Mr. Mellon.

He talked it over with him. Perhaps that took place in the Treasury offices, but I do not know. Why did not you, Mr. Mellon, give to him those Liberty bonds at that time? No; he said they were not convenient at that particular time. They were too good to put into the vaults of the Treasury of the United States. He was unwilling to risk hiding them in his executive offices. So he kept them, as the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] has said, in some place where no employee, no matter how confidential he might have been with Mellon, could see them or could touch them or could know anything about them. Several days afterwards he returned them to Mr. Hays, or to somebody.

But Mr. Mellon sent his check, and his check was dated, as I believe, December 6, 1923, for $50,000. He sent that check to Mr. Upham out in Chicago, who was the treasurer of the Republican Party. That is the connection of Mr. Mellon. Why has he kept all this secret? Why has he not given the clue to the committee? He knew there was something wrong or he would have taken them. Still he kept his peace. He revealed nothing.

Mr. President, it seems that Sinclair, by organizing the Continental Oil Co., had evolved a scheme that many believed was conceived and executed in order to finance the Republican Party and pay off its debt and keep it entrenched in power here. He was giving these bonds to the ex-chairman, Mr. Hays, to go out and peddle them so that influences might be at work in behalf of Sinclair. He did not stop anywhere. Doubtless in his dreams and in his mind he thought that even though the Teapot Dome lease may have been fraudulently and corruptly made and that the American people would rise up and demand its cancellation, yet having loaned Liberty bonds to the directing head of the Republican Party and permitted this directing head to loan those bonds and give those bonds out to men in high places in the Republican Party—aye, those directing and controlling its affairs—that they would fly to his defense and would permit no wrong or justice to be perpetrated upon him. He felt secure in his paid-for position. He was then a prominent member of the Gold Guard.

Day by day, with all these matters coming out in the papers, no Republican Senator and no Republican Member of the House rises in his place either to defend Will Hays or "Handy" Mellon or any other member of the Cabinet or any one in the service or control of the Republican Party at that time.

Not only did they do that, but they organized the Mammoth Oil Co., and put the fellows next to what was going to be done with the stock of that company. It was going sky-high. The fellows who were going to be on the inside could buy at a low figure, and in time it would go up and up, and they would reap their millions from Mr. Sinclair's speculations as well as his advice. My friends, there never has been written in all the history of our Government a blacker page and a more corrupt and scandalous attempt to debauch the Government, from the highest officers all the way down, than has been perpetrated in this instance. The Republican leadership fell for it. They have not had the courage to unloose themselves from it.

I congratulate the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for the advice he has given to his party and for endeavoring to raise contributions to return the $160,000. Of course, it could not make amends for what has been done, but it can in a small way show that there are some in the Republican Party who condemn the act and repudiate the methods of those who direct their party affairs. I know there are some who say the Senator from Idaho is just playing to the public. Some Senators in public addresses say it is a foolish idea on his part, but I suppose, even though he does not vote with the Republican Party all the time, that he has the interest of his party at heart and he knows that if the corrupting influence which has been at work in the Republican Party, not only through the Republican national organization but in Illinois and Pennsylvania and other places in the country, is permitted to continue, soon there will be nothing left but a mere shadow of the Republican Party.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. The question I am going to ask is not in criticism of anything the Senator has said with reference to the Republican Party or its action, and not in defense of it. But I wonder if anybody in the Democratic Party is going to organize to pay Doheny back his contribution to the Democratic campaign fund?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator may think that is powerfully funny, and he may excuse his good conscience from still trying to make the people in Iowa believe he is a Republican by making such a suggestion as that. If there were a way to point the finger of corruption at the Democratic Party during the eight years it controlled the Government, the Senator would have pointed that finger long ago. But it could not be done because there was nothing corrupt there to be pointed at, and yet the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who happens to be chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, on yesterday, speaking in Baltimore, away from Washington, is quoted as employing this language:

BORAH's oil gift return plan foolish—

NYE says—

Mr. BORAH wants to show that there is decency in the Republican Party—

Said Senator NYE—

His motives are the best, but he is unfair to the people. It is the poor devil who can not afford it who will put in his $1 and $5 and $10 contribution.

Mr. President, I agree with little the Republican Party stands for, but, poor as I am, I will join with my Democratic colleagues here and in the House and with my Democratic friends throughout the country in assisting to raise this money to remove this much of the stain from the escutcheon of the Republican Party.

Yes; the Senator from Idaho is performing a splendid service. While my friend the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] does not agree with it, I imagine his constituents in North Dakota applaud more the course of the Senator from Idaho than the speech made yesterday in Baltimore by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. But he did not stop there.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the theory upon which Mr. Sinclair is entitled to be reimbursed for this contribution? Upon what theory is it asserted as a great moral reform, after four years have passed, to pay back the $160,000 to Mr. Sinclair? How is it expected to reform the Republican Party, by having those who neither knew anything about the contribution nor approved it, stand the loss? Is it contended that there was a breach of contract and a failure of consideration and that Mr. Sinclair had expected the naval oil reserve oil transaction to be confirmed and he be given immunity for the transaction and that, failing in that, he should be reimbursed for his contribution? I myself can not see the very great reform in the movement of the Senator from Idaho taking money out of his pocket and asking men associated with him in politics to make a refund to Mr. Sinclair. I have not the slightest doubt that under the circumstances as they now exist Mr. Sinclair will be very glad to receive his money back, and I am morally sure that no wholesome good will result to the public by paying it back to him.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. It might be suggested that if Sinclair does not get his money back he will be unwilling to buy favors from the Republican Party in the future. One must get and maintain a market for his goods and wares. I can see no other purpose in it.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think there was any breach of promise to Sinclair upon the part of the Republican administration, nor was there any failure of consideration. I think it absolutely impossible to reform the Republican Party [laughter], but if the Senator from Idaho wants to do this thing I think it is commendable in him.

Mr. REED of Missouri rose.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Missouri want to ask me a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I was going ask the Senator if this is to be treated as a conscience fund? If so, it seems to me this is an irregular way to raise a conscience fund. Generally a conscience fund is supposed to be contributed to by the man whose conscience hurts him because he has taken somebody else's money and wants to restore it. In this case it is proposed to take other people's money and restore it to the rogue who improperly employed his money in the first instance.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from Idaho, it may be, has a statute in his State, as there are statutes in certain States, that he who receives stolen goods commits a crime and is subject to the same conviction and the same penalty as is imposed on him who stole the goods; and so he and his colleagues may not want to be found guilty of that particular crime.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, without desiring to cavil, the Senator from Idaho did not steal this money nor did he get it corruptly nor did he touch it. As near as I can make out, though, if this deal goes through, Sinclair will be $160,000 better off, and the money is going to be contributed by a lot of good men. If it was going to restore the status quo, I could see a reason for it; but to restore the status quo we would have to go back prior to the election and restore a condition that existed prior to the election. The use of this money enabled a lot of gentlemen or helped to enable a lot of gentlemen to get into office. The only way to restore the status quo would be for those gentlemen all to resign, have a new election, and have it on clean money; but they are not going to do that. Even Mellon is not going to resign, although he ought to be asked to resign.

I did not want to interrupt the Senator's trend of thought, but the curious thing to me about this whole business is why they put these bonds out in large sums in the hands of various prominent Republicans. If the deal was a clean one, if it was an honest one, if the bonds had been contributed by Mr. Sinclair in an honest way, all they had to do was to carry them to any bank and have them instantly cashed or have sold them on the open market. Why is it that they rolled them up in packages and secretly sent them out to gentlemen? When they came in that way and the Secretary of the Treasury received $50,000 worth of them—whether he kept them for one day or kept them for a month is immaterial—a time arrived when he concluded that it was not a straight transaction, and hence he would not have the bonds in his possession. Knowing that, why did not this Cabinet officer advise the committee that was trying to run down this iniquitous piece of business?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, neither Handy Andy nor former Senator Butler had any idea that it was a clean deal. Both of those gentlemen even returned the bonds, one a little later than the other did, but finally they both returned the bonds. And neither of them, even though on this floor and everywhere opportunity has been accorded them, have ever divulged this queer and suspicious act.

There is just one other suggestion that I wish to make, and then I shall take my seat. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] employed this language:

> Besides these objections, Senator NYE said a return of Sinclair's money might open the way for a movement to return every contribution over $25,000, and declared he could see little difference between the two major parties in the matter of campaign contributions.

I think it is unfair for the Senator from North Dakota to make any such statement as that. I think that it is unwarranted upon the part of the chairman of an investigating committee to give to the country any such statement as that. There is not a line of proof in the hearing to show that or to justify it. If the Senator from North Dakota believes, without proof, that the Democratic Party is just as corrupt as is the Republican Party in the matter of campaign contributions, with all this avalanche of evidence, then he has no discriminating mind at all.

He saw the statement of the treasurer of the Democratic Party; he saw before the committee and heard CORDELL HULL, the chairman of the Democratic committee. He knows there is no foundation for the statement; he knows by the facts that his statement last quoted is unwarranted and unfounded. It therefore does seem to me that we would get along better if we would expose the facts and lay no false blame upon some other party which is trying to rid the Government of these corrupt methods and give to the people the truth about this situation.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Mississippi where in the newspaper article from which he has just quoted he finds that I have in any way insinuated or charged that Democrats had received any of the Continental Trading Co. Liberty bonds?

Mr. HARRISON. I will read again what the Washington Post quotes the Senator as saying—and the same quotation was in the Baltimore newspapers:

> Besides these objections, Senator NYE said a return of Sinclair's money might open the way for a movement to return every contribution over $25,000, and declared he could see little difference between the two major parties in the matter of campaign contributions.

Mr. NYE. Just so; but I made no reference to the Continental Trading Co. bonds; and I wish to say, Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator was talking about the Continental Trading Co. bonds.

Mr. NYE. I wish to say, so long as the question has been raised, that it will be a most remarkable thing if when the present investigation shall be concluded it shall not be disclosed that the hand of the Democratic Party was dealt with quite freely as well as was the hand of the Republican Party through these oil funds.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. Just a moment, please. It would be strange, for the good and simple reason that men of the Sinclair type are not confining themselves by any manner of means to one party in this country, but under the order that prevails to-day they are playing both ends against the middle. One party fares about as well as the other one does. The party of the Senator from Mississippi has not fared so well during recent years, for the good and simple reason, perhaps, that no man spends as much money in keeping a spare tire in repair as in keeping in repair tires that are in constant use. I say that without casting any reflections upon the party of the Senator from Mississippi, but that is the case; and my conclusion is this——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is customary to put more wind in the spare tire when it gets flat, is it not?

Mr. NYE. The point may be well taken.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator does he now state from the facts before the committee that both major parties are equally to blame in the matter of campaign contributions?

Mr. NYE. No; I would not say that, Mr. President, but I do say that, in so far as those who were involved and who put up the money to influence the campaign and to buy the privileges and the favors which were accorded to the oil interests following the election of 1920 are concerned, they would in all probability have been just as successful had the Democratic Party won that election as they were with the Republican Party.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator makes that statement, but he has no facts to base it on, has he?

Mr. NYE. I have just this fact: That Mr. Doheny, a Democrat, was as liberal with his contributions to one party as he was with his contributions to the other, and Mr. Doheny's interest was the same as was Mr. Sinclair's interest.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. For eight years they tried to get these oil lands from the Wilson administration, but they were refused and kicked out of the Capitol. Yet, with that knowledge, the Senator makes that charge.

Mr. NYE. Do I understand that Mr. Doheny did not contribute?

Mr. SWANSON. No; but for eight years efforts were made to misappropriate and use the Government's oil lands while the Democratic administration was in power. Secretary Daniels had those oil lands put into a naval reserve in order to protect them; yet the Senator makes that charge with those facts staring him in the face and is supposed to be the chairman of a disinterested committee.

Mr. NYE. Will the Senator from Virginia say that an attempt was not made during that administration to obtain possession of those oil lands?

Mr. SWANSON. Such an effort was made. We had an investigation about it. People had obtained some of the lands under fraudulent leases, which we vacated. I was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs which investigated the subject here running over two years. Yet with that knowledge in his possession the Senator, pretending to be the impartial chairman of the committee, makes that charge. It is made merely from impression and from his imagination.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I made the charge, and I repeat it, that, had the Democrats been successful in the election of 1920, I believe that Sinclair, Doheny, and the other interested parties would have fared just as well as they did fare with the election going as it did.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator does he not know that Doheny quit the Democratic Party because he could not corrupt it, and went into the Republican Party because he knew he could corrupt it? [Laughter.]

Mr. NYE. No; I do not know that to be the case.

Mr. HARRISON. He did do it, did he not?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, my interest in this matter, I think, is about as impartial as it can be. I do not stand here on the floor at this time to excuse what was done by the Republican administration elected in 1920. I think they are deserving of all condemnation that may be heaped upon them, but I do argue that things not unlike what happened in the matter of the disposal of the naval oil reserves is a thing which has happened before, and which will continue to happen so long as we permit the present order to prevail.

That order is just this, that those who make handsome contributions to the party funds are those who are going to enjoy the great favors at the hands of the Government. I should like to ask those on the other side of the Chamber who are manifesting such an interest as they are at this time how they can excuse, how they can countenance the contribution of last week to help pay the deficit in the campaign fund of the Democratic Party that was made by Thomas F. Ryan. What can be said in excuse for the acceptance of that contribution?

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. NYE. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Because Mr. Thomas F. Ryan is a Democrat in principle; he has been all his life and he is now a retired business man. If he has ever asked a favor of any man in public life, I have never heard of it.

Mr. NYE. When did Mr. Ryan wash his face and hands in so far as the Democrats are concerned, in the estimation of the Senator, if ever he did?

Mr. HARRISON. He does not need to wash his face so far as the question of his being a Democrat is concerned.

Mr. NYE. I hold in my hand the proceedings of the national Democratic convention held in Baltimore in June and July of 1912, and I should like to offer at this time and read a short resolution which was offered in that convention by none other than a Democrat who, I believe, occupied, and even to-day occupies in memory, a more commanding place in the estimation of the people of this country than almost any other Democrat of recent years, namely, William Jennings Bryan.

Mr. Bryan offered this resolution:

Resolved, That in this crisis in our party's career and in our country's history this convention sends greeting to the people of the United States, and assures them that the party of Jefferson and of Jackson is still the champion of popular government and equality before the law. As proof of our fidelity to the people we hereby declare ourselves opposed to the nomination of any candidate for President who is the representative of, or under any obligation to J. Pierpont Morgan, Thomas F. Ryan, August Belmont, or any other member of the privilege-hunting and favor-seeking class; be it further

Resolved, That we demand the withdrawal from this convention of any delegate or delegates constituting or representing the above-named interests.

When, I ask, did Mr. Thomas F. Ryan wash his hands and his face?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, for the accuracy of history, I rise simply to take issue with my esteemed colleague, the chairman of the committee, in his statement that the occurrences which have been the subject of investigation by the committee, or occurrences of that character or nature, have occurred before and will occur again.

I want to challenge that statement. Happily for the history of our country, nothing like it is recorded in its annals—nothing approaching it in its magnitude or in its criminality—and I do not like to admit the statement that anything of the kind is likely to happen again.

The staggering corruption of the Grant administration was picayunish in character as compared with the transactions which have been the subject of investigation by this committee. The gravity of the thing can not possibly be overestimated. I am surprised that the chairman of the committee should have made any such statement upon this floor. I should like to ask him now if he can recall any incident in our history at any time that bears any comparison, either in magnitude or in gravity, to these offenses?

Mr. NYE. I am frank to say that I can not and I do not; and I do not think I so implied.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. I do not like to bring into this discussion anyone who has passed away, but I am forced to do it in what I think perhaps is the interest of truth.

Is it not a fact that Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior in the last Democratic administration, did resign from the Cabinet and enter the employment of the Sinclair Oil Co. or some of its subsidiaries at a salary estimated at $50,000 a year?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the Senator has not it quite right. Upon resigning, Mr. Lane took employment with Mr. Doheny.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. With Doheny? Doheny and Sinclair were very closely connected; and, Mr. President, just another question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will not the Senator answer a question from me before he asks another question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Just a second and I will.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. However, I do not imagine that the Senator from Indiana would think of comparing that offense, if offense it be, with the transactions that are the subject of investigation by this committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I thought possibly the Senator from Indiana was referring to that as supporting the statement made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No, Mr. President. This is what I had reference to:

I am under the impression—this, of course, was long before I was a Member of this body—that the legislation that made possible the very thing that has happened was enacted during the last Democratic administration.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In just a second. I am under the impression also that in the debate that ensued—I perhaps shall have something to say about that a little later, when I can be fortified by the facts and by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—I am under the impression that the very distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, now gone, the Hon. Robert M. La Follette, sr., did question the able Senator from Montana during the process of this legislation on this very point, and that in the course of his remarks and his interrogation the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin did point out just what might happen. I desire to ask if the Senator from Montana did not defend the legislation at that time and suggest that these things would not take place; and if after that, and not so very long afterwards, the Secretary of the Interior under the Democratic administration, Mr. Lane, did not resign from the Cabinet and accept employment with these interests at $50,000 a year, shortly thereafter followed by many of the executive officials of that same department in the Democratic administration?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have asked a question, but I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the Senator whether his question implied any reflection on Mr. Lane.

Mr. GLASS. How could it imply anything else?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then, if it did, I want to say that I do not believe there is a word in the testimony or in the record of Mr. Lane's administration that would justify any reflection upon his integrity.

Mr. GLASS. Nor is there any act in his public or private life that would countenance any such outrageous suggestion as has been made.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to accept the Senator's suggestion just as he has made it; and I would say the same thing were Mr. Lane alive and able to defend himself that I say to-day when he is dead and unable to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an instant?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want no part in this discussion. I have not risen for that purpose at all.

I was at college with Frank Lane. I was a member of the same Greek-letter fraternity with him at that college. I knew him for a lifetime. I do not care whether he took a position with Doheny or any other man at any sum, no matter what it was. Frank Lane was a decent, honorable, able, fine, upstanding American, who always did his duty patriotically and well, honestly and creditably, in every position, official or private, in which he found himself. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am not undertaking to reflect on anybody's memory. I am asking a simple question. Is it not a fact that Hon. Franklin K. Lane was Secretary of the Interior, and that shortly after this legislation was enacted he did accept employment of this kind?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Let us assume that to be the truth.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Well, is it the truth? That is what I am asking.

Mr. BRATTON. What comfort does the Senator from Indiana get from that kind of inquiry in connection with the discussion of the recent developments, so gigantic in corruption and in fraud and in repulsiveness to every American citizen that nothing that has ever gone before is comparable to them?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, so far as that is concerned, I do not defend corruption anywhere. I despise it. I always have and always shall, whether it is in the Republican Party or the Democratic Party. I am undertaking to get some answers to these questions, that is all, and then the Senate and the country can draw their own conclusion.

I understand those things to be true. I will ask the Senator another question in that connection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I would rather answer the question the Senator has asked me first.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Very well.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right that the act under which these leases were made was passed during the Democratic administration, while, however, the Republican Party was in power in both Houses of Congress in the year 1920; but that is no discredit at all to the Republican Party, because the leases, as was determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, were executed in defiance of the statute, and not in pursuance of it.

I have to say also that the Senator is in error about Mr. Lane's resigning after this legislation was enacted. My recollection is that the statute in question bore date June 4, 1920, and my present recollection is that John Barton Payne was Secretary of the Interior at that time. I may be in error about that, but that is my recollection.

The Senator has referred to my own part in the matter. I have no recollection of ever being interrogated by Senator La Follette with respect to this legislation; but, since the Senator has brought it up, I might say that the resolution to investigate the leasing of the reserves was introduced by Senator La Follette after an address made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], within whose State the Teapot Dome is located, and that I took hold of the investigation on the suggestion and at the very earnest solicitation of both Senator La Follette and Senator KENDRICK, and that I was acting in that matter in conjunction with Senator La Follette.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask it purely for information and for no other reason, and I hope I shall not be accused of attempting to reflect upon anybody's character, living or dead, for that certainly is not my desire.

Does the Senator know whether or not the Secretary of the Interior of that day was requested to resign by the then President of the United States?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that matter was fully disclosed in our hearings and it is a matter of public record. I have no hesitancy at all in stating what the facts were.

The Honolulu Oil Co. had made application for patents to certain placer-mining claims within naval reserve No. 2. I think it made application for patents to 17 claims. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommended that it be given patents to 13 of these claims and that its application for 4 more be rejected. His recommendation went before the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior either confirmed the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the Honolulu Oil Co. was entitled to patents to these claims or he was about to do so, and either had done so and a motion for rehearing was pending or he had indicated his purpose to affirm the judgment below. The record discloses that word was sent to him by President Wilson that he desired to have the case reopened, and the case was reopened and further testimony was taken; and it was out of a disagreement between Secretary Lane and President Wilson with respect to that particular matter that Secretary Lane eventually sent in his resignation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Do I understand the Senator to say that the President requested his resignation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think the record actually discloses whether President Wilson requested his resignation or not. I think it does not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the Senator know whether it does or not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask one other question of anybody who can answer it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So far as that is concerned, nobody doubts, so far as I have ever been able to discover, that Secretary Lane did not arrive at a conclusion in the matter which he thought was wholly justified by the facts and the law. There was a difference of opinion between him and President Wilson with respect to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I would like to ask one other question, either of the Senator from Montana or the Senator from North Dakota. I have been given to understand—I do not know whether it is true or not, but I think it is—that Mr. Harry Sinclair, during 1922, 1923, 1924, and possibly 1925, was a member of the State administration of New York, Governor Smith's administration, as a member of the racing commission there by appointment of Governor Smith. Is that true or not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am unable to advise the Senator with respect to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there any evidence on that question?

Mr. NYE. There is no evidence that has come to my attention that Mr. Sinclair was a member of Mr. Smith's administration after 1920. That, however, is a matter with which our committee has had no relationship at all. I do understand that in the campaign of 1920, at which Governor Smith was elected, Mr. Sinclair was a very liberal contributor to his cause; and that following the election he was made a member of the Racing Commission of the State of New York.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the committee, whether he is speaking from information before the committee?

Mr. NYE. I have just made that very clear, and I hope the Senator will get it, that I was not speaking for the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator speak from information——

Mr. NYE. He does.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the committee?

Mr. NYE. Not before the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I may say to the Senator from Montana that, as I understand the Senator from North Dakota, Harry F. Sinclair was a very liberal contributor to the campaign of Governor Smith, of New York, in 1920—and possibly also in 1922—and that subsequent to that campaign the Governor of New York did appoint Harry F. Sinclair as a member of the New York Racing Commission, and that he continued to hold that position through 1922, 1923, 1924, and probably 1925; that during all these years which this investigation has covered—during that entire period—the relations of Governor Smith and Harry Sinclair were very close and very cordial, because he was a part of the administration; and, Mr. President, I will go further and suggest that under these circumstances the chairman of this committee, which has done such excellent work, might do well to summon the Governor of New York and let the Governor of New York explain his relations with Harry Sinclair during those five years.

Mr. NYE and Mr. REED of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. The Senator makes an unreasonable request, because until it is disclosed that the Governor of New York was in any way involved in this oil scandal, was in any way a recipient of any of these Continental Trading Co. bonds, the Liberty bonds, the bonds which they held, it is not within our province to make any inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It may not be within the province of the committee to make an inquiry of that kind, but it seems to me that for the information of the country, as long as it has gone so far, the committee ought to go into every question connected with these bonds and with any contributions made by this man, who is now so much in the limelight.

Mr. NYE and Mr. REED of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not yield at just this moment. That in connection with that inquiry, a lot of things will be brought to light that will show that over on the Democratic side, perhaps, there are those now possibly lurking in the dark who may know as much about these Continental bonds as anybody who has thus far testified.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I desire to say that I conceive the question of contributions to State campaigns by Mr. Sinclair would be quite irrelevant, as the chairman has suggested, to the matter under inquiry; but I merely desire to say, because the Senator has interrogated me about it, that neither Mr. Doheny nor Mr. Sinclair was in any wise concerned in the Honolulu Oil Co.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not question that. My point is this: The chairman of this committee, which has been making the investigation, states that, according to information in his possession, Harry Sinclair did contribute liberally—that is, the Sinclair Oil Co., presumably, and its subsidiaries—to the Democratic campaign fund in New York; that subsequent thereto the Governor of New York did appoint Sinclair to a place as a member of his administration; that he continued to hold that position during the years up until 1925, inclusive. During all this time things were going on that the committee now is investigating. Because of these facts, I submit to the Senate, and to the country, for that matter, that the Governor of New York may be able to throw considerable light on what was going on during those years, and may know more about it than others. Therefore I made that suggestion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Surely the Senator does not mean to insinuate that Governor Smith turned any of the public property of the State of New York over to Mr. Sinclair, does he?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not know. That is why I think this committee ought to go into it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. A man might say that he did not know a good many things, but I submit to any Senator, and to the Senate, that when a man gets up and makes a statement that he does not know, and means by that to leave the sting of an insinuation that there is something wrong, and does that in response to a question, it is rather going beyond his right on the floor of the Senate.

I have no reason to interfere in this matter, but I thought the Senator would frankly say that he did not mean to insinuate that the Governor of New York had turned over any of the property of the people of New York to Mr. Sinclair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do mean to say this, that there is much circumstantial evidence here that would indicate that the Governor of New York ought to be called as a witness before this committee and clear up some matters in the Sinclair case.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr President, I understand that we are discussing the migratory bird bill. I have in my hand an editorial from the Hartford Courant that is about as appropriate to this discussion as it is to the migratory bird bill, and I ask to have the clerk at the desk read it for the benefit of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I do not think that there is anything wrong in discussing predatory birds for a while. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[The Hartford Courant, Sunday, March 11, 1928]

WHEREIN WE LET MR. DOOLEY EXPLAIN

To the EDITOR OF THE COURANT:

As a faithful reader of your paper—I even read clear through the statements of the candidates—may I be permitted to ask you a question? Why do the Republican candidates object to virtually nothing that has happened under the present régime and why do the Democratic candidates object to virtually everything? It seems to me that common sense must tell the average voter that all that is polifical is not perfect, nor is it all imperfect. Can you explain the reasons for this phenomenon or do they lie in the realm of metaphysics?

FAITHFUL READER.

HARTFORD, March 8, 1928.

We might explain this phenomenon after a fashion, but in all honesty we question whether we could explain it to your satisfaction, "Faithful Reader," or to our own. Certainly we could never explain it as well as it was explained this long time ago by Mr. Dooley:

"Years ago, Hinnissy, manny years ago, they was a race between th' Dimmycrats an' th' Raypublicans f'r to see which shud have a choice iv principles. Th' Dimmycrats lost. I dinnaw why. Mebby they stopped to take a dhrink. Annyhow, they lost. Th' Raypublicans come up an' they choose th' 'we commind' principles, an' they was nawthin' left f'r the Dimmycrats but th' 'we denounce an' deplores.' I dinnaw how it come about, but th' Dimmycrats didn't like th' way th' thing shtud, an' so they fixed it up between them that which iver won at th' iliction shud commind an' congratulate, an' thim that lost shud denounce an' deplore. An' so it's been, on'y the Dimmycrats has had so little chanct f'r to do annything but denounce an' deplore that they've almost lost th' use if th' other wurruds."

There has been no change, "Faithful Reader," since wisdom dropped from the sage lips of Mr. Dooley into the porch of Mr. "Hinnissy's" listening ear. To this very day the haves and the ins invariably "commind an' congratulate"; the have-nots and the outs invariably "denounce an' deplore." It will be so, we fancy, until Gabriel toots his ultimate trumpet and this spinning world slips through the crack of doom.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, it is not my intention at this time to discuss the question of flood control or the many matters relating to it, but I desire just for a moment to get back to the proposition which was before the Senate prior to the discussion of the oil scandal and corruption in politics.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield for a question.

Mr. GLASS. I did not desire to ask the Senator a question. I merely felt obliged to make a reference to some things just said in the Senate.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am very glad to yield to the Senator if I do not lose the floor. I have just a few words to say.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I rather feel that as a former associate of Franklin K. Lane in the Cabinet of President Wilson there is some obligation upon me to express, at least, my astonishment, if not my indignation, if I may do so temperately, that any Senator should in his place here and, by implication at least, asperse the character of one of the purest men who ever served his country in a public capacity by assuming to put him in the category of Sinclair and his associated criminals in this oil dénouement. As it seems to me, that was a breach of the proprieties which readily might, if not transcending parliamentary usages in this body, be characterized as something not short of dastardly.

No man ever lived who had a cleaner, purer record than Franklin K. Lane. No man ever lived until now, however widely he might differ from Mr. Lane, who ever dreamed of aspersing his honor or his sincerity in any action that he ever took, public or private. Near the end of a well-spent life, when he was about to lay down his public duties, there could be no better attestation of his probity than a remark he made directed to me as he turned and said: "I shall have to borrow from some friend money enough to pay the transportation charges of my family and myself to my home." Yet here upon the floor of the United States Senate to-day we have the intimation, the insinuation, that Franklin K. Lane was of the type of Harry Sinclair, and the aspersion comes from a Senator who himself comes from a State, one of whose governors has just returned from the penitentiary and another barely escaping the same fate by pleading the statute of limitations.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, the Senator might also mention the convicted mayor of the greatest city in that State.

Mr. GLASS. I resent the imputation upon Mr. Lane.

While I am on my feet I may say further that whatever may be differences among men as to the desirability or the proprieties of campaign contributions, no man can ever say that Thomas F. Ryan ever, on any occasion, at any time, in any behalf, sought any compensation from the Government or from any source for any contribution he ever made to his party. A Democrat from the first moment he possessed the right of suffrage, he took a pride in his party, and while there were times when those who differed with him rejected his proffers of aid, there never was a time when he was not willing to give them aid because of his political conviction and not because of any return of any nature whatsoever that he could ever expect from his party.

Never a candidate for any office, totally devoid of political aspirations as far as he himself was concerned, he stood ready at all times to give liberally and cleanly to his party without any concealment whatsoever. It would have been fairer had the Senator who took care to read the Bryan resolution before the Baltimore convention also have taken care to have said to the Senate that Mr. Bryan himself withdrew that portion of the resolution which undertook to asperse Mr. Ryan.

Mr. Ryan is a native and a citizen of Virginia. I believe I have never seen him half a dozen times in all my life. Neither he nor anybody else ever contributed as much as $1 to any campaign of mine in that State. But he is an honorable man and nobody ever successfully challenged that proposition in court or on forum or elsewhere. Any contribution that he has made or that he may make of a political nature has been and will be open and above board, subject to the investigation of any committee that may want to inquire.

This much, Mr. President, I felt obliged to say, and I apologize to my colleague for interrupting him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, am I to understand that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] has the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. Am I to understand that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] states that Mr. Bryan finally withdrew his resolution in 1912?

Mr. GLASS. I said that part of it which aspersed Mr. Ryan.

Mr. NYE. According to the record, the permanent chairman finally said:

The PERMANENT CHAIRMAN. The Chair is about to have the resolution, which is before the house, read. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The secretary read the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That in the crisis in our party's career and in our country's history this convention sends greeting to the people of the United States, and assures them that the party of Jefferson and of Jackson is still the champion of popular government and equality before the law. As proof of our fidelity to the people we hereby declare ourselves opposed to the nomination of any candidate for President who is the representative of, or under any obligation to, J. Pierpont Morgan, Thomas F. Ryan, August Belmont, or any other member of the privilege-hunting and favor-seeking class."

Mr. JAMES K. VARDAMAN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the convention, we understand that the question before the house is not the adoption of the resolution, but that it is to suspend the rules for the introduction of the resolution.

The PERMANENT CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; the motion is to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution. On that motion the secretary will call the roll.

Mr. W. W. BRANDON, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The PERMANENT CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRANDON, of Alabama. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules to put the resolution upon its passage?

The PERMANENT CHAIRMAN. We are operating under the rules of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. BRANDON, of Alabama. The motion being in that form, what vote of the convention does it take?

The PERMANENT CHAIRMAN. It takes a vote of two-thirds of the convention to agree to the motion. The secretary will call the roll.

The secretary having called the roll, the result was announced—yeas 883, nays 201½, not voting 3½, as follows.

There follows then, according to the record, the roll call by States and I note from that roll call that Mississippi voted 20 votes yea, no nays, and none not voting. Then the record proceeds:

The PERMANENT CHAIRMAN. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to suspend the rules and pass the resolution the yeas are 883, the nays 201; two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules are suspended and the resolution agreed to.

According to that, Mr. President, the reference to Mr. Ryan was not stricken from the resolution.

Mr. GLASS. It is utterly immaterial whether Mr. Bryan offered such a resolution or did not offer such a resolution, or whether it was voted up or voted down. As a matter of fact, as the resolution passed, any man could have voted for it. Mr. Ryan voted for it himself. If the Senator will examine the roll call he will see that 23½ votes from Virginia were for the resolution.

Mr. NYE. The Senator has quoted the record correctly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, while I have been very anxious to discuss the order of business in the Senate and shall do so a little later, I have no desire to contribute to the discussion with reference to the oil scandal and matters of that kind now being discussed before the Senate. Therefore I am glad to yield to the Senator from Idaho at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in discussing the oil scandal and the consequences which flowed from that transaction, I do not care to confound it with the general proposition of contributions to campaign funds. I think it stands upon an entirely different footing. Ordinarily contributions to campaign funds, however large they may be, are made for the success of the party, and, in so far as contributions are concerned, it is difficult to attribute any other purpose or motive to the contributor; but I look upon the contributions of Mr. Sinclair as involving an entirely different proposition. If I read the evidence correctly, and understand the facts correctly, those contributions had for their purpose the accomplishment of an ulterior and sinister object wholly aside from the question of party success. It was an attempt either to make easy the consummation of a transaction or to cover up a transaction which had already been concluded. I view it from that standpoint, and have done so since the evidence was disclosed.

Mr. President, as a Republican, as a Senator, and as an American, I trust, devoted to the principles of our Government, I thank the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and those whose work has resulted in the revelations with which the country is now familiar. I know that it is better for the Government; I know that it is better for the country; and, in my opinion, ultimately it will be better for the party of which I am a member that those revelations should be made. If that investigation shall result in an advantage to the party of which they are members, as it has resulted in credit and honor to those who have led the investigation, nevertheless I thank them; and every Republican who thinks more of his country than he does of his party will join in those thanks, because this investigation has had to do with the honesty, the decency, the integrity, and the stability of representative government.

It has been said this afternoon that this investigation and the corruption which it has disclosed has no parallel or precedent in our history. I doubt if it has any precedent anywhere; I doubt if anything of the same nature and kind has ever happened in any country. When one takes into consideration the purposes of the transaction, the attack upon the security of the Government itself, the high places in which the transaction occurred, and then the ignoble purpose for which the transaction was carried on, I do not know, Mr. President, of anything like it in the history of this country or of any other country.

I have, as no doubt we all have, looked upon that scene in Rome painted by her greatest literary genius—the scene when Verres came home from Sicily laden with the wealth of a betrayed and plundered people, threatening Senators, bribing judges, and conspiring against the very freedom of the city itself. I have read and reread, as no doubt we all have, the burning words of the most gifted tongue of the most eloquent race in history, Edmund Burke, when he raised Warren Hastings to that eminence of infamy from which he has never descended; for slimy, sordid, drab betrayal of a public trust, relieved of every element of vision or ambition, which sometimes adds fascination to crime, I know of nothing in the history of peculation to be compared in meanness of spirit and vulgarity of purpose with the group of men who met in the "little green house" in the very shadow of the Capitol in 1921 and 1922. There was the beginning of the carrying out of the deals which had been made earlier. Those men were there for the purpose of consummating a transaction which had for its purpose the acquiring of vast interests which belonged to the people of this country and which could only be acquired in violation of every rule of decency and every principle of governmental integrity.

Mr. President, this is not merely a case in which large contributions were made, but it is an instance of a conspiracy which I believe was formed in the city of Chicago at the convention in 1920 by a few men, unbeknown to the party itself, unbeknown to the rank and file, but by men who, under cover of party protection, were consummating a crime. I repeat, the man or the men who have revealed the facts have rendered a distinct public service to the people of this country, and the Republican Party will not for a moment, either here or elsewhere, undertake to criticize those who have brought about the revelations or undertake to defend or justify any part or parcel of the transaction.

Something has been said this afternoon about the proposed restitution of this money. It is to discuss this briefly that I arose. Let me explain, Mr. President, just how I view that matter. As I said a moment ago, if this were a campaign contribution in the ordinary sense, I should not be interested in it; I should undertake to deal with it under general laws which might be enacted or under policies which hereafter might be pursued; but I consider that we are dealing with a fund which was raised for the purpose of consummating a crime and that that fund was raised under such circumstances and conditions that no one knew anything about it except perhaps a half dozen or a dozen men. To my mind there is no difference between the man who receives stolen property after he discovers it has been stolen and the individual who in the first instance stole it. If it can be shown that the Republican Party had any knowledge of or any reason to believe that this transaction was being carried on and consummated, restitution would be nonsense and a superfluous, hypocritical act upon the part of anyone undertaking it; but it has taken six years to reveal this transaction. It is now disclosed that a very few men knew of it, the voters of the party knew nothing about it and, to my way of looking at it, the Republican Party can not retain this money without approving and ratifying the transaction in its original inception. It now for the first time as a party has the facts; to fail to repudiate as a party is as a party to approve. If the Republican Party refuses to return crooked money, it then approves receiving crooked money in this the first instance.

It has been said in the press and elsewhere that the thing the Republican Party to do is to reform its processes and its methods hereafter. I do not think we would meet with any very great success in advocating a different policy in the coming campaign or hereafter if the property or the tainted money was still in our possession.

I do not know of any way by which the Republican Party as a party can be exempted from all the implications of the transaction except to repudiate it when it becomes known, and to repudiate it by the act of the party in returning the money to the source from which it came. There is no other way in which to deal with it; and I venture to say that no man on this side of the Chamber would for a moment contend that we ought to retain the money which came from Mr. Sinclair. I venture to say that no man on the other side of the Chamber would contend that the Republican Party can retain the money which came from Mr. Sinclair without becoming morally responsible for every dollar and the manner in which it was received from Mr. Sinclair. If Mr. Hays was wrong in receiving the money, if he was guilty of an immoral act in receiving the money, we as a party become guilty of the same immoral act, and the same principles control us the moment we ascertain the manner and the method in which the money was received, and fail to repudiate the transaction and return the fruits of the wrong.

Every dollar of this money went into its treasury in order to satisfy the debt of the Republican Party. If the portion of it which it is proposed to return had gone to Mr. Hays, if it had gone to other individuals, and had been received by individuals, the party, in my judgment, would not be responsible for it; but it went to the Republican Party; it went into the Republican Party treasury; it paid the Republican debt; and, if the Republican Party retains it and refuses to repudiate the transaction, it becomes morally responsible for it from the beginning to the end. There is no escape from this conclusion. We can not remain silent and remain free from guilt.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does not the Senator from Idaho think that it might help the Republican Party in its repudiation if some of the responsible leaders of the party would also condemn these transactions?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not interested at this time in any particular leaders of the Republican Party. If those who were in charge of the Republican Party in 1920 and 1924 want to go before the people of this country with their lips sealed, and without any repudiation of this transaction, it might be that that is the best thing that could happen for the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to call the Senator's attention to facts, which, of course, he already knows, that the Secretary of the Treasury who was tendered some of these tainted bonds and failed to volunteer that information to the investigating committee until his name was accidentally disclosed recently, has not condemned these transactions; that Mr. Hoover, who was appointed to the Cabinet at the time President Harding took office, has not repudiated these transactions or uttered a word of condemnation of them; that Mr. Charles Evans Hughes, who was also in the Cabinet when these transactions were made, has not repudiated them; that President Coolidge, who may be said to have been the chief beneficiary in that the decks were cleared of debt for his 1924 campaign, has remained absolutely silent upon these questions.

Mr. BORAH. That is quite correct. That is entirely correct. If, however, it is foolish to return this money, then it would be perfectly foolish for those men to say anything. If it is wrong to return the money, or if it is unwise to do so, or if it is foolish to do so, there is no occasion for their saying anything. If it is the right thing to do, if it is the moral thing to do—and I think it is, because I think a man who will retain crooked money is just as immoral as the man who first grabs crooked money—then their future is to be taken care of by the people of this country who believe in decent government.

Mr. BRUCE and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment.

Let me say, Mr. President, that I am interested in what I conceive to be the thousands and millions of men and women who make up the intelligence and the moral force of the Republican Party who knew nothing about this transaction and who do not propose to be tainted by it. I am not here defending or at this time condemning individuals. I speak for the party, so far as I am concerned, as a party. The Republican Party is made up, it is true, of a few individuals called for a time leaders, but it is made up in its great strength and moral power of the countless thousands who do its voting, who do its fighting, and who win its victories; and what I want to know is whether or not those people are going to repudiate this deal or whether they are giving, by keeping the money, approval.

If the Republican Party goes to Kansas City and nominates a man whose clothes smell of smut, it will face defeat. If the Republican Party, after the Kansas City convention, returns again in the future, as it has in the past, to the great contributors who have paved their way to favor by contributions, it will face defeat. The people of this country do not believe in corruption—neither the Democratic rank and file nor the Republican rank and file; and this matter having come to the knowledge of those who really constitute the party and its strength, it seems to me that it is nothing less than decency for somebody to give them an opportunity to get rid of it. They want a clean party, and given an opportunity they will make it a clean party.

Mr. BRUCE and Mr. BLAINE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Maryland rose first. I yield first to him.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, to whom does the Senator from Idaho think the money should be returned?

Mr. BORAH. It should be returned to Harry F. Sinclair.

Mr. BRUCE. That is to say, the loot should be returned to the thief?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Republican party has nothing to do with the distribution of this fund beyond returning it to the source from which it came. If the Republican Party should take this money, as has been suggested, and give it to the Red Cross, or give it to the miners in Pennsylvania, or donate it to this or that cause, the cry would go up, and justly go up, that the Republican Party first sought to utilize it for the purpose of victory in the last campaign, and now it is trying to build up moral prestige and favor with the voters in the next campaign. I believe in returning it to the man from whom it came. I am not thinking to whom it is going but from whom it is going.

Mr. BRUCE. I was going to suggest that of course there are a great many homes for incorrigibles and a great many Magdalen asylums in this country. It seems to me this money might be turned over more advantageously to some institution of that kind than to Sinclair.

Mr. BORAH. I do not regard the Republican Party as the distributor of money which belongs to Sinclair.

Mr. BRUCE. I will ask the Senator just another question: Has he any real hope that this money is going to be raised and returned? It seems to me, to use a skeptical expression very often employed, that this proposition to return the Sinclair contribution to him "is magnificent, but not war."

Mr. BORAH. If the money is not raised and is not returned, I can imagine the kind of speech that the able Senator from Maryland will be making against the Republican Party about the middle of next October—not against some individuals but against the party.

Mr. BRUCE. I was just thinking of a little story bearing upon human reluctance about returning money which was told me some years ago by a very distinguished lawyer in Maryland, the late Severn Teakle Wallis. He said that he contracted to attend to a professional matter for some clients, and his clients paid him his fee; but that after the matter had been attended to they thought that it had not taken a sufficient amount of time to justify such a fee, so they very delicately suggested to him that he might refund a part of it. I recall very distinctly his saying to me after recalling these facts, "You know, BRUCE, the process of regurgitation is never very agreeable, but I refunded a part of it."

Mr. BORAH. As the process of regurgitation has to go on the part of the Republican Party and not the Democratic Party, I am sure the Senator will not shed any tears.

I believe the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] desired to ask me a question.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Idaho having declined to yield to me, I took my seat; but if he will yield for a brief statement and then for a question, I will be very happy to ask it.

Mr. BORAH. I did not yield because I was addressed from the other side of the Chamber first. I yield now.

Mr. BLAINE. I know the Senator from Idaho has a sincere purpose in asking for the return of this money to Mr. Sinclair, but I think he has conceived a situation to be which does not exist.

It may be all right to pass the hat around and collect the pennies and the nickels and the dimes from innocent parties and pay back money to this gentleman who made a contribution for one single purpose, and that was to corrupt the offices and officers of the United States. I do not believe it was the purpose of the Senator from Idaho that these men and women who contribute their mite should enter into any arrangement to compromise and compound the offense of Mr. Sinclair. Getting to the gist of this thing and the very foundation of all this, it is not so much that individuals are to blame as it is that a system is to blame; and the beneficiaries of that system are the ones to be dealt with in this discussion. As a result of the contributions, as a result of the motives of Mr. Sinclair in making this contribution, and the contributions of others who were seeking favors from the Government, there were certain beneficiaries.

In view of the fact that there were certain men in the Republican Party who became beneficiaries of those criminal acts—for they are nothing short of criminal—we have in the office of President of the United States to-day a President who came to that office by way of Sinclair's contributions. He came to the Presidency of this country on the death of Mr. Harding, he having been elected as Vice President in 1920.

He is a beneficiary of this system; and notwithstanding the fact that he sat in the Cabinet, as was then the practice, with Mr. Daugherty as Attorney General, Mr. Fall as Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Mellon as Secretary of the Treasury all those years, and then upon his election to the Presidency of the United States he appointed some of these men to be Cabinet officers and sat in consultation with them politically, socially, and officially, up to this moment he has remained silent with respect to this very thing that threatens to undermine this democracy. Other nations, strong as they have been, fell when the slimy serpent of corruption stuck its poisonous fangs into the body politic. He ought to know, though strong and pure at heart as are the American people, if that sort of thing—bribery, corruption, and debauchery—is to sit in high places and control the destiny of America, even this Republic can not long continue.

If we are to purge the Republican Party of this sort of thing, there is just one way to purge that party. That is to drive out of public life, drive out of public office, every bribe taker, every bribe giver, every man in responsibility who has been silent during all these years. Therefore I want to ask the Senator from Idaho if he will join some of us in a contest whereby there may be an opportunity to control the Republican National Convention at Kansas City and make secure this Government by driving those men and that system out of the control of the Republican Party?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, Mr. President; I will join the Senator, but before I start purging I want my party to return this tainted money. Before I start any reform within the party, before I start purging the party, I want to get rid of corrupt funds. We can not keep unclean money and at the same time talk about a clean party.

Mr. BLAINE. I think, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, that the way to attack this system is to attack those who are the beneficiaries of this bribe taking and bribe giving. I see no other way by which it can be done. You may pay back to Harry Sinclair all the money that he contributed; you may pay back their contributions to those who contributed to the Democratic Party, to all those who wanted to get their grip on the offices of the Government, and you have not changed the system. You have simply compounded unrighteous acts and compromised with evil.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, at the close of the campaign the Republican Party, as a party, owed a debt. That debt was owed by the party. Every member of the party in a sense was interested in or responsible for that debt. Some collections had to be taken somewhere to pay this debt. This $160,000 which I propose to return was collected from Harry Sinclair, and went into the coffers of the party, and paid the debt which the members of the Republican Party otherwise would have had to pay in some other way.

If we had taken up a collection, we perhaps would have gone to the man with his dollar, or his five dollars, or his ten dollars, or his hundred dollars, and raised the money to pay off the $160,000, and the other amount, though the $160,000 is the amount involved now. As it was, Mr. Hays went to Mr. Sinclair and got the money and paid off the debt.

That relieved the members of the party from paying the debt. I say that this $160,000 went to the benefit of the members of the Republican Party. Whatever benefit there was from the lease, the courts are dealing with that, but this particular fund went into the Republican treasury, and was for the benefit of the Republican Party as a whole, and that is the portion which I am going to ask the Republicans of this country to return, and I venture the opinion that it will be returned. That is the first step in purgation, that is the beginning of a clean and trustworthy party.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I want to congratulate the Republican Party and the country for having one great Senator who faces facts as they are, who does not try to drag a red herring across the trail of villainy by bringing in outside and extraneous issues, or by impugning the integrity of the dead, whose voiceless lips can not speak in defense of an honorable reputation.

Whatever differences of opinion I have ever had with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I have never ceased to respect his sterling honesty, his great intellect, and his superb courage, and that admiration has been increased to-day. I can, since hearing him, catch his viewpoint when he proposes a return of this money. Loathing, as he does, every contact with corruption, his mind naturally seeks for every avenue leading toward a purging of the ugly situation.

The difficulty is that the remedy the Senator proposes in my judgment does not avoid the evil in any way. The money employed was one of the vehicles which carried certain men into office. The repudiation of the acceptance of that money, however strong it may be, does not put the country in the position in which it might possibly have been had the money not been obtained and used in the election. There is no way to do that. Giving back to Mr. Sinclair this money is a good deal like paying an assassin for the knife that he drove into the back of the man he murdered and left sticking there. It enriches the culprit by that amount. Its effect on Mr. Sinclair is that, having lost his oil reserves through the decisions of the courts, he now gets back the money he expended in carrying out an agreement about which the Senator from Idaho agrees with me, an agreement made in advance that he was to get the oil lands.

That money is to be paid back to him, and he thereby becomes $160,000 the richer, and has lost nothing by his venture. In my judgment, it would be more in the nature of poetic justice if he lost both the oil lands and the money he had expended in order to corrupt men to turn the lands over to him in the first instance. That is the phase of it that I do not like.

The question then arises again, if the national committee received money, which the Senator describes as the same thing as receiving stolen goods, in this instance received it to pay a debt for which the members of the committee were personally responsible, and nobody else, and that committee were to say, "We have now learned of the corrupt source from which this money came; we propose to return it and we propose then to make up this deficit ourselves," it would be a case of those who received what the Senator described as stolen goods returning the stolen goods. But in this instance it is proposed to take up a general collection and pay that money.

Mr. BORAH. No; not general; among Republicans.

Mr. REED of Missouri. A general collection among Republicans who were perfectly innocent; I mean the rank and file were perfectly innocent. The perfectly innocent rank and file, who did not incur the debts of the committee, who had nothing whatever to do with any corrupt dealings with Mr. Sinclair—I glady state that—are the ones to contribute now to a fund to put back into the hands of Sinclair money he paid for a corrupt purpose.

We can not restore the status quo. We can not take back these offices which were thus in part obtained by the use of this money, and it seems to me more in the nature of poetic justice to let Mr. Sinclair stew in his own juice and pay for the juice. However, that is not a matter about which I have any right to complain, and if it is in accordance with the judgment of the Senator from Idaho to raise the money that way and return it, I have no complaint to make about it. I do say this—and this is the real purpose for which I rose—I agree with the Senator from Idaho that the rank and file of the Republican Party are not to be charged with this wrong until and unless they ratify that wrong in some way by their own act.

Every fair man concedes that the great body of the American people are honest and that they are patriotic. Honesty and patriotism are not the heritage of the members of either political party as distinguished from the other political party. Republicans and Democrats alike serve on the field of battle, they serve in civic affairs of the Nation, are good neighbors, and good friends. I hope they are beginning to feel the same burning indignation that flames in the breast of the Senator from Idaho. I am wondering whether their conscience can be so sharpened that it will result in any change in their votes.

This is the first spectacle the country has ever had presented of this gravity, but it is not the first spectacle of the sale of political favors in advance. Who does not remember that Matt Quay boldly said that he proposed to fry the fat out of the protected industries? That is, to take some part of the money the protected industries had made by and through the operation of a law indorsed by the Republican Party and put upon the books by it compel them to yield a part of their profits and put it into a campaign fund in order to perpetuate in power the party that continued to perpetuate the legalized plundering of the people by virtue of that law and the combinations made back of it.

Which one of us has forgotten that Mr. Dudley, the secretary of the Republican National Committee, sent into the State of Indiana letters saying to vote the floaters in blocks of five and to be sure that they voted right before the money was paid?

Which of us has forgotten that these same protected industries were levied upon by Mr. Mark Hanna and that a fund was raised so large that they could not expend it? Vast sums were sent into various parts of the country that were actually returned, the money having fallen into the hands of honest men who did not put it in their pockets.

Who is there to deny that part of it was used to buy certain colored delegates from the South in order to have their votes to write a platform satisfactory to the bosses of the party?

Where was the moral uprising when the committee entered upon a scheme eight years ago to raise some $13,000,000 to $17,000,000 for a campaign fund—a scheme that was largely broken up by the investigation of the Kenyon committee?

Where is the moral uprising that has occurred up to this date, when the Secretary of the Treasury has declared, and was quoted in the papers, and I have never heard it denied, that money raised in Pennsylvania was as honestly raised and as fairly expended as money raised for a church?

Where is the moral uprising in the Cabinet and in the White House against the action of the Secretary of the Treasury, who, while in the Cabinet, went to Pennsylvania and actively organized and brought together the crowd that raised the $2,000,000, he and his brother and his nephew contributing $75,000 to the fund and supervising and managing the crowd that gathered the $2,000,000 and more to renominate a candidate for the United States Senate? One blushingly and winkingly gazes at the spectacle of men and women standing in line for seven long days, from 35,000 to 50,000 of them in one city, to receive the $10 per head that they got for their work upon election day.

What voice of protest has come from the President who keeps this man still in his Cabinet? What voice of protest have we heard from the managers of the party?

We have heard from the so-called insurgent Republicans many a protest. I have heard the eloquent voices of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and others—I shall not undertake to name them all—denouncing such activities, and I have heard their votes cast in this Chamber, always in protest.

But, Mr. President, other scenes rise before my eyes and other voices speak to my ears. I recall when the investigations were first proposed that there was active opposition among the so-called stand-pat Senators, and how, when we passed a resolution asking for the removal of Mr. Dougherty and Mr. Denby, the vote was recorded from the stand-pat element against those resolutions. I recall with humiliation the fact that although the resolutions had been passed, and although they were passed because of the sworn testimony which had been adduced before a committee of the Senate, which abundantly justified the resolution, although that evidence was there, and although the resolution was there, the President of the United States refused to act and treated the resolution and the facts in evidence with contumely and scorn.

I recall, sir, that President Harding officially—I am going back now a little in the chronology—justified the transfer of the oil lands. But to return to the present administration, I recall that when, for an inconsequential reason, the President finally removed Daugherty, removing him only after the flame of public indignation had rolled in from the West and from the East, reaching Washington in the form almost of a conflagration, the President removed Daugherty and gave him a certificate of good character.

I recall when we undertook to investigate the situation in the State of Pennsylvania, while the resolution went through under circumstances where opposition would have been useless, when the entire investigation had been completed and the mass of corruption unfolded and the investigation in Illinois had been made and the iniquity there exposed, again the votes of the stand-pat element on the other side of the Chamber were nearly all in favor of the seating of VARE and of SMITH.

I recall a filibuster upon the floor of the Senate in the closing days of the last session which was conducted for no other purpose on earth than to abort that investigation and render it ineffective. I recall also the fact that it was boasted then that the committee was dead and the investigation dead with it, and that in order to accomplish that object distinguished men on the other side of the Chamber were willing to hold up a great appropriation bill and other necessary legislation. I have listened for a voice of condemnation from the other side of the aisle and I have heard such voices coming from the lips of the insurgent Republicans, and I think I ought to make one or two exceptions of what are called the standpatters. But the inner circle have stood there always in opposition when there was any chance for opposition, always in defense when there was any chance for defense, and when there was none they have had the appearance of the relatives of the accused at the bar, sitting there giving aid and comfort by their symapthetic presence.

But through this all there are two great facts that stand out. One is that the Teapot Dome would have been transferred, the California oil lands would have been transferred and the transfers would have stood, Doheny would have been holding the oil lands of California and Sinclair would have been holding the oil lands known as the Teapot Dome, Fall would still have been in the Cabinet, Denby would still have been at his post, the stocks of those companies which were organized to cover the profits and the corruption would have been mounting higher and great fortunes would have been made, the conduct of the national committee would have stood unchallenged—all of this would have been if it had not happened that the so-called insurgent Republicans joining with the Democrats exposed and laid bare this frightful and intolerable condition.

The other fact is that through it all no voice of protest has been raised by any member of the Cabinet, no word of encouragement has been spoken, no indignant demand has been made for justice; and the President has been as silent, as complacent, and apparently as satisfied as though nothing was wrong. The one solitary thing he did was to suggest the appointment of two civil attorneys to recover the oil lands. That suggestion he concurred in, although I am not sure he made it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that was done by a resolution adopted by the Senate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; however, he did make the appointments. He went that far. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The President complied with the resolution after it was adopted.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, there was an ugly scandal in the Grant administration—the whisky ring. It involved the then Vice President of the United States; it also involved the Secretary to the President. When those facts were exposed that old soldier said, "Let no guilty man escape." But what do we hear from the President? He has been known as the silent man, but the record will show that he has talked more than almost any President who has ever held the office, sometimes speaking in his own name and sometimes speaking through the White House "Spokesman," who has been all the time himself; but not once during all these years of time have we heard any clarion call from him for justice, any demand that iniquity shall cease, any protest. And there sits in his Cabinet Mr. Mellon, who went to Pennsylvania and certified that he spoke in the name of the President and then helped gather the election fund and helped to expend it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator think that those in Pennsylvania who got $10 apiece ought also to return the money?

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is a little aside from what I am discussing, but the answer is obvious.

It appears, more than that, the Secretary of the Treasury received $50,000 of bonds, and that he knew they came from Harry Sinclair. They were sent to him to cover up the transaction. At the time he received them he was in full possession of all the facts that the country was in possession of. He knew that it was not safe for him to hold them. By returning them he certified to the fact that he knew they were corrupt. He knew a committee of the Senate was seeking to get every ray of light possible with reference to the transaction, and he concealed what he knew. He failed to speak when he should have spoken. So when we talk about putting things back, the only way to put things back is to put these people out; and the only way I know that that can be accomplished is to have a housecleaning, and I suppose we shall not have it until after next November.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCE. If this Sinclair fund shall be returned, ought it not to be returned with interest? That reminds me, if the Senator from Missouri will excuse me a moment, of an incident which happened in the course of my professional experience. Two of the most conspicuous merchants of Baltimore had a settlement. After the settlement one of them claimed that he had overpaid the other by mistake. Litigation followed, and the court held that the mistake had not been mutual, and so the plaintiff, of course, lost his case. The case went up to the court of appeals in Maryland, where the action of the court below was affirmed, but, extraordinary as it may seem, subsequently the merchant who won the litigation paid the amount to the merchant who had lost. A good many years afterwards the merchant who lost, having in the meantime become a valued client of mine, was asked by me one day whether it was true that the amount had been refunded. With a very sour face he said, most ungratefully, of course, "Yes; his conscience pricked him enough to pay back the principal, but not enough to pay the interest." So it seems to me that if restitution of the Sinclair money is to be made, and due credit is to be given to the Republican Party for it, interest ought to be paid as well as the principal.

If the Senator from Missouri will pardon me for just one moment more, let me say that, while I am treating this matter jocularly, I wish it to be understood that no Member of this body is more sensible than I am to the noble impulse which has led the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to make the suggestion of restitution that he has made. Of course, that suggestion is in accord with the generous, magnanimous character with which we are all so familiar. If all the members of both parties were like the Senator from Idaho there would be no political scandal, there would be no official corruption, there would be no tainted funds to restore.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland a question. Does he believe that we ought to keep this money?

Mr. BRUCE. No; I have already made a suggestion that it should be given to some reformatory institution, where it could do some real good and not where it could be used again by Sinclair for purposes of bribery and corruption perhaps.

Mr. BORAH. The only difference between the Senator and myself, therefore, is as to whether it should go back to Sinclair or go to some eleemosynary institution.

Mr. BRUCE. As I said, I think it is a fine suggestion that this money should be repaid.

Mr. BORAH. But I want to ask the Senator does he believe that the Republican Party ought to keep this money?

Mr. BRUCE. Indeed I do not; I must say that I am in accord with the Senator from Idaho as to that.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I thought.

Mr. BRUCE. And if the money had passed into the till of the Democratic Party I would feel about it exactly as he feels about it in the case of the Republican Party.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, what I have said this afternoon has not been said in any spirit of elation. It is a matter of profound sorrow to me that these conditions existed and, therefore, had to be disclosed. There is nothing so destructive of morals as the spectacle of men in high places betraying their trust. Nearly all the good there is in this world springs from a sense of honor, mingled with pride, and the desire always to live up to certain standards. When those standards are lowered, when they are debased by those who have been charged with a public duty, the effect upon the immature minds of the country is terrific; and the only way we can in any manner hope to restore the proper moral tone is not by speaking in defense, not by making excuses, not by trying to avoid disclosures, but by making an example of those who have done wrong.

Yet here we stand, with no voice from the White House, with no protest from the Cabinet, with no word of encouragement from the administration. So we have stood and so we have fought along different lines for about four years now. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and his committee have been like hunters in the wilderness, with no one to beat the bushes for them; they have had no aid from the White House, no aid from the secret service, no aid from grand juries, save as they forced the impaneling of grand juries in specific cases. The great Department of Justice has never moved, except when this committee has drawn out facts and brought them in such shape before grand juries as to force action.

What does the boy think who witnesses this spectacle? When we try to teach the youth of the land the way of rectitude and honor, among other things we point to illustrious example of our great men, to Washington and Lincoln and Jefferson and other men who blazed the way along the path of honor; and we have said to the children of our land, "There is your example."

The thing that sustains our courts and that has kept them pure has been the idea constantly taught that the judge must be just and that the court must be upright and beyond reproach. By maintaining that ideal our courts have for the most part, aye, almost invariably, been the real refuge places for justice. We drag down that ideal; we destroy it by examples such as we have had. So, Mr. President, I gain no satisfaction from these disclosures, and, while I would not like to see this money returned to Sinclair, I should be glad if every child in the land would contribute its penny in some way to manifest its disgust with, and repudiation of, this horrible thing that has happened in our land.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that at the conclusion of the routine morning business the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with No. 355, where we left off on the former day when the calendar was considered, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED PAN AMERICAN HIGHWAY

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter on the proposed Pan American highway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is here printed, as follows:

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reference to the proposed Pan American highway project now up in the House, by Mr. MCLEOD, I beg to be allowed to take this opportunity to present my views on the subject.

The route through Mexico and Central America is an engineer's problem solely, but after South America is entered the route should be deeply studied. I would suggest that it proceed from the Panama frontier to San Pablo in Venezuela, thence straight to Trinidad; thence on a southerly course through Colombia, Peru, and Brazil to Trinidad, in Argentina; thence to San Francisco and on to Asuncion. From thence, following the contour of the Plate River, standing well out from it, to Buenos Aires, and that is quite far enough down for the present.

From Asuncion to Rio de Janeiro, 900 miles, the local people would no doubt soon bestir themselves and build a connecting link.

This course down from Panama would cover approximately 4,000 miles, divided as follows: Colombia, 800; Venezuela, 300; Peru, 400; Brazil, 450; Bolivia, 900; and Argentina, 1,200.

This route would cross the headwaters of all of those terrible South American rivers, which are so harmless during the dry season but are raging seas during the rainy season, rising 50 feet and covering vast regions of forest.

This route would also escape the west coast mountains, thus making the road more suitable to be traveled by Americans who are unfamiliar with mountain roads. This route would be located in the highlands of the Andes Mountains, where the course is level and the climate is salubrious, never rising above 70°.

The traveler along this proposed route would escape the dust and hot, dry winds of the rainless west coast regions, also the swampy and sickly section of Brazil and its myriad river system, which will ever be impossible for road and bridge building.

So it will never be desirable to foster side roads from the main highway toward the east coast, as the rainy season prevails from March to September, and for the sake of health none should ever mix in with this ferocious phenomena.

If the mountains could be negotiated, roads might eventually be built across to the west coast, as the main highway's course is parallel with the west coast as low down as Santiago, Chile, and at an average distance of no more than 500 miles, but such side roads would cost out of all proportion to their importance.

The distance from Panama's border to Buenos Aires along this route would be around 4,000 miles and would follow the sun more nearly than any other land route on earth.

The most heavenly weather prevails continuously from September to March of each year along the whole route from Panama to Argentina. Of course, it is universally known that down in Argentina they use our wintertime to have their summer, during which the inhabitants entertain themselves by growing crops and grass. This route will go through the interior and is much more preferable, I think, than a west coast route.

If the building of roads is for encouragement and benefit, by all means establish them where they are most needed, and that is in the interior, for the west coast is now handsomely and adequately served by their fine and capable shipping.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, March 19, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of ages past, be with us yet lest we forget. We turn again to Thee for light and wisdom, that we with the entire body of our fellow citizens may continue to labor toward that destiny which has been given to our Republic. Forbid that the flame of a fervent love for all that is glorious in our institutions should burn low. Arm us with the breastplate of righteousness and the shield of truth, that our priceless heritage may ever be preserved. As we meet the challenge of our day, be with us, that we may keep enthroned within the spirit of humanity, which is the gift of Heaven. O every home needs happiness, every friend needs companionship, and every good cause needs encouragement. Stir the best things within us and around us, for these are dependent on Thee and the inspired teaching of Thy holy word. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 17, 1928, was read and approved.

LAKE DENMARK CLAIMS

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I understand there is on the Speaker's desk a report from the Comptroller General in reference to the Lake Denmark claims incident to the explosion in July, 1926. I would like to ask whether the general reference included the printing of the report as a House document.

The SPEAKER. The report has been referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed as a public document.

REPORT OF DIVISION OF SIMPLIFICATION

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to call the attention of the House to a very brief report which has been made by the division of simplification of the joint committee of the House and Senate on taxation which I intend to ask shall be printed in the RECORD for the information of Members.

There has been considerable inquiry as to what the joint committee on taxation was doing and there was printed in the RECORD last week, inserted by Senator SMOOT, a brief report of the division of investigation. This report has been presented to the joint committee by the chief of the bureau of simplification, Charles B. Hamel. Mr. Hamel, as Members will remember, was the first chairman of the Board of Tax Appeals, a position from which he resigned and engaged in private practice. About a year ago he accepted the position of chief of the division of simplification of the joint tax committee, where his services have been very satisfactory, but he now desires to give his attention to his private business. He has consequently sent in his resignation and his place will be filled by his very efficient assistant, E. H. McDermott.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is the committee as active in its work as it has been? I understand that it has laid off quite a number of men, particularly in the engineer staff.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The joint committee is not carrying on as many lines of work as it did when the revenue bill was before the Ways and Means Committee, and some of the men have been dropped from the rolls, not only engineers but others, the thought being that there would not be as much work done during the summer and we ought not to carry as large a force on the pay roll as we had.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But you intend to keep up the activities, or your successor will?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly; this report will show that important work is planned, and this is only the report of one division.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's committee generously and patriotically met several weeks before Congress and prepared a tax bill and passed it immediately. How much longer is the tax bill going to be held up without action?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I regret to say that I can not give the gentleman any information.

Mr. BLANTON. It is an administrative holdup, is it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know what is holding up the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman give us any idea when we are going to get the benefit of this tax bill, which removed certain tax burdens upon the shoulders of the people, and which was passed here in the House last December?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I regret to say that I can give the gentleman no information. I do not know whether it will come over here at all.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this report of the chief of the division of simplification be printed in the RECORD as an extension of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

(Division of simplification, Charles D. Hamel, chief and counsel; E. H. McDermott, assistant counsel)

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION,
Washington, March 16, 1928.

Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN,
Chairman Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There is submitted herewith a statement relative to the work of the division of simplification from April, 1927, when the division was organized, to March 1, 1928, and the work now in progress.

COMPLETED WORK

On November 15, 1927, a printed report was submitted by the joint committee to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate. This report consists of three volumes printed under one cover. It includes the work of both divisions of the joint committee up to that time. In the first volume there is a comprehensive survey of the problems of simplification; a statement of the work necessary to be done in that connection; an estimate of the possibilities of effective simplification, and specific proposals for simplification and improvement of about 12 major provisions of existing law. In addition, there is a proposal for the entire rearrangement of the form of the revenue act; and the act, as thus rearranged, is printed in full as Volume II of the report.

The legislative counsel and the special assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury contributed much toward the form and the substance of this rearrangement.

The third volume is a comprehensive survey of the administration of the income and profits taxes, submitted to the committee by the Treasury Department.

A majority of the suggestions for revision of particular provisions were adopted in framing the pending revenue bill, as was also the suggested rearrangement of the form of the act and a number of suggested typographical improvements.

Both divisions of the committee endeavored to be of assistance to the Committee on Ways and Means during its consideration of the pending bill.

WORK IN PROCESS

A careful examination of the more complicated sections of the law is in progress. The purpose is to determine how much actual simplification of these sections is possible. Among the provisions of existing law which have been criticized, on the ground of complexity, and which therefore are being examined may be mentioned the following:

Section 219. Estates and trusts.

Sections 222 and 238. Credits for taxes.

Sections 217–232. Net income of nonresident aliens and foreign corporations.

Sections 201–204. Corporate distributions and the determination, recognition, and basis for gain or loss.

Section 206. Net losses.

Section 209. Earned income.

Sections 214–234. Deductions to individuals and corporations.

Sections 221–237. Payment of tax at source.

Section 256. Information at the source.

Sections 277–278. Period of limitation on assessment and collection.

Sections 284 and 3220, Revised Statutes. Limitations on credits and refunds.

As stated, the object is to determine whether these and the other complicated provisions in the act can be set forth in simpler language without thereby causing uncertainty, creating ambiguity, or disturbing the settled constructions of the courts and the Board of Tax Appeals. The scope and difficulties of this undertaking are self-evident.

There are a very considerable number of statutory provisions applicable to income taxation which are not to be found in the revenue acts and have never been collected together. It is proposed to assemble these provisions into a compilation or code, suggesting at the same time, where it seems advisable, such changes as may be necessary to adapt these provisions to modern conditions. This will result in what may be called an administrative code, containing all the statute law relating to the administration of internal-revenue taxes. It is believed that the benefits should warrant the time and effort necessary to this task.

Simplified administration seems as essential as simplification of the act. The survey of administration prepared by the Treasury Department for the committee and printed in the report of November 15, above referred to, forms an excellent basis on which to institute studies directed toward simplification of the administration of the law, both in Washington and in the field.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES O. HAMEL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it was contemplated that on to-morrow the Navy Department appropriation bill would be taken up. On account of the delay in the necessary printing in connection with the consideration of that bill it will not be ready for consideration until Wednesday morning. In view of this situation, I ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow, Tuesday, Calendar Wednesday business may be in order, and that on the following day Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that on to-morrow Calendar Wednesday business may be considered and that on Wednesday Calendar Wednesday business be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

Mr. TILSON. There is no reason for anyone objecting. It is not doing away with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the Calendar Wednesday business be ready to-morrow?

Mr. TILSON. It will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WALTER W. MAGEE

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on Sunday, April 15, 1928, the House meet at 12 o'clock m., for the purpose of holding memorial services on the life and character of Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, late a Representative from the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

Mr. WHITE of Maine, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, presented a conference report on the bill (S. 2317) continuing for one year the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes, which was read and ordered printed.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES OF THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9200) to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. CELLER objected.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill and the next bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object. We ought to dispose of them now. That has been done once.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It has been done twice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5774) to provide for the appointment of an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. CELLER objected.

HOOPA VALLEY RESERVATION, CALIF.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 441) to authorize an appropriation to pay half the cost of a bridge and road on the Hoopa Valley Reservation, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the matter of building roads across Indian reservations for the benefit of the public out of funds in the Treasury is a matter upon which we should proceed very cautiously, and we should be very careful about establishing undesirable precedents.

I have made a careful study of this particular case. It appears there is some advantage to the Indians from this expenditure, that there is a very great advantage to the general public, and that this desired road is to be a connecting link between certain improved highways. In cases of that kind in the past there has been sometimes a division of the expense between the Federal Government and the State or county, the Federal Government taking care of such as might be chargeable to the benefit of the Indians and the State or county the rest. This bill on its face purports to do that, but I find that in fact the State contribution will not be what it ought to be.

In Fortieth Statutes, page 570, the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1919, the road from Hoopa to Weitchpec was authorized, with a limit of cost of $30,400; but, as a matter of fact, appropriations have been made by Congress amounting to $61,763 upon that road from Hoopa to Weitchpec.

A portion of it is completed. This bill proposes to build the rest of it and build a bridge at a cost of about $70,000. If this bill goes through as written, the $35,000 added to the $61,000 heretofore appropriated will amount to $96,000 out of the Treasury as against $35,000 by the State or county, and the use of the road does not justify as heavy a charge as this against the Federal Treasury.

It is true that the $61,000 heretofore appropriated was reimbursable out of funds of the Indians, but that was only a little salve to put the bill through. The Indians have no funds, and never will have any. We have charged that $61,000 on the books, and we will never get it back.

On the basis of the rule that ought to be followed in such cases and the respective use of the road, this Government ought not to contribute over $10,000 for the balance of the road. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] I do not see at the moment, but I am making this suggestion in the RECORD: If the gentleman would reduce this to $10,000, with a further amendment that the balance would be taken care of by the State or county, personally I would not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the gentleman offer such an amendment and let us proceed?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not feel justified in doing that in the absence of the gentleman whose bill this is.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the gentleman from California would prefer to have his bill amended rather than have the gentleman from Michigan kill the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am advised the gentleman from California is ill, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report of the grand jury of St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. BLANTON. What report is this, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MAAS. It is a report of the Federal grand jury on a post-office lease investigation at St. Paul.

Mr. BLANTON. In what way is the Congress and the country concerned about it?

Mr. MAAS. This is a Federal lease on a post office made by the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it show dereliction on the part of officials of the Government?

Mr. MAAS. It charges dereliction and graft.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman wants to develop that with respect to his administration, I have no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the report a public document?

Mr. MAAS. In what respect?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Grand jury reports are not always public documents.

Mr. MAAS. This has been made public.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was it made in open court?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object; there is no use filling the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with all these grand jury reports.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LUMMI INDIAN RESERVATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8731) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a road on the Lummi Indian Reservation, Wash.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington what benefit this road will be to the Indians.

Mr. HADLEY. The road is the principal artery of travel on the reservation. It extends from one end of the reservation to the other, upon the easterly side of the reservation, which is upon the westerly shore of Bellingham Bay, upon which the reservation abuts. It is a very necessary and important artery of travel to the Indians in traveling upon the reservation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman realizes that the only justification for the appropriation is the direct benefit to the Indians?

Mr. HADLEY. I understand that, and I am stating that it is essential, and the committee report, based upon the evidence before the committee, shows that it is a very important and essential artery of travel for the Indians on the reservation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is similar in type to the one that I referred to a moment ago, but in this case I find the facts somewhat different.

The Indians are to be benefited by the construction of the road and the general public likewise has a benefit; but in this case there has been $35,000 spent by the county on a bridge and the Indian office advises me that one-half of the bridge is on the Indian reservation. Thirty-five thousand dollars has been spent on this bridge by the county and nothing by the Government. In addition, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] advises me that $19,000 has been spent on this road in the reservation by the county authorities. Therefore this $20,000 will be somewhat less than a 50 per cent contribution, will close the matter as far as the Government is concerned, and I withdraw any objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill (S. 1478), now on the Speaker's table, is identical with the bill in the form reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That not to exceed the sum of $20,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion and graveling of the road which has been partially constructed by Whatcom County across Lummi Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the proper authorities of the State of Washington or the county of Whatcom shall agree to maintain such road free of expense to the United States.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "agree," insert the words "in writing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

HAWAII NATIONAL PARK

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10483) to revise the boundary of a portion of the Hawaii National Park on the island of Hawaii in the Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may dispense with the reading of the description of the boundaries.

Mr. SINNOTT. Reserving the right to object, I understand the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON] has an amendment to be offered which has been agreed upon with the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundary of that portion of the Hawaii National Park on the island of Hawaii firstly described in the act of Congress approved August 1, 1916 (39 Stat. 432), entitled "An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the figures "432," insert a semicolon and the following:

"Section 391, title 16, United States Code."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments by Mr. HOUSTON: On page 2, line 5, strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-one."

On page 4, line 19, strike out all down to the bottom of the page and insert the following new paragraphs 16, 17, 18, and 19:

"16. Three hundred and fifty-four degrees and fifty-four minutes sixty feet along the remainder of Keaau;

"17. Two hundred and thirty-one degrees and thirty-one minutes one thousand six hundred and seventy-eight and eight-tenths feet along same;

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED EMERGENCY OFFICERS

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I call your attention to two tables appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the Senate side. On March 14, page 4696, is a table showing the employees of the Veterans' Bureau who will be beneficiaries of the emergency officers' bill. On March 15, page 4745, is a table giving by States the names of beneficiaries, their addresses, their occupations, extent of disability, and the amount of increased compensation that will be required by all disabled emergency officers in the event that the bill becomes a law.

It does not show the nature of the disability. I have that data in addition. It was left out of the RECORD for obvious reasons.

Many have asked me who would be beneficiaries of that law, and for that reason I call the attention of the House to the tables.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman for or against the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am against it.

ASSIGNMENT OF CERTAIN NAVAL OFFICERS AS FLEET ENGINEERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5531) to amend the provision contained in the act approved August 29, 1916, relating to the assignment to duty of certain officers of the United States Navy as fleet and squadron engineers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection and let me make an explanation?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. DREWRY. This bill is for the purpose of utilizing the services of experienced naval engineers so that they may be assigned to duty at sea as well as on land.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think that a naval officer ought to be taken off the land and sent to sea?

Mr. DREWRY. In some cases; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman could force all of the naval officers who are now on land to go to sea, I would be willing.

Mr. DREWRY. This is a matter of engineering duty, and naturally they have engineering duty on land as well as at sea.

Mr. BLANTON. We are accumulating a great many of them. The ones who do not want to stay on land want new cruisers and big battleships to govern and to lord it over a big bunch of men.

Mr. DREWRY. This bill permits the assignment of officers on engineering duty to sea service.

Mr. BLANTON. I have a good reason for my objection.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman objects I would like to get certain information into the RECORD. Under the present law the Secretary of the Navy, as I understand it, may assign any commander to sea duty without his consent, which is correct. He ought to have that authority. If this bill should become a law, then hereafter he could only assign a commander to this kind of duty by getting the consent of the commander.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. It is ridiculous.

Mr. DREWRY. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. Take the existing law, and the gentleman will see that that is not the case.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Let me read what the Secretary of the Navy said. I read from the report:

> In the third place, it will authorize assignments of commanders to sea duty as fleet or squadron engineers only upon their own request.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

ENLARGEMENT OF CAPITOL GROUNDS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2301) to create a commission to be known as the commission for the enlarging of the Capitol Grounds, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rose to say that I withdraw my objection, since the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT] has explained the situation to me.

Mr. HOOPER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the consideration of the bill, and intend to object.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 279) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia," approved March 2, 1867.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ASPHALT, GILSONITE, ETC.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 68) to provide for the disposition of asphalt, gilsonite, elaterite, and other like substances on the public domain.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GORGAS MEMORIAL LABORATORY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8128) to authorize a permanent annual appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am as ready as anyone to pay tribute to General Gorgas, and I am as interested as anyone in anything that is for the promotion of health. When this bill was called the other day I asked that it might go over in order that I might have an opportunity to study the bill and to read the hearings, stating that the bill was not drawn well, or, in my judgment, safely. The bill went over. A propaganda has been organized in my district. Those who are interested in promoting this bill apparently do not feel safe in leaving the bill to rest upon its merits. They apparently feel that the merits of the bill are not sufficient, and that they must resort to a back fire in my district. I am getting telegrams galore from people who never saw the bill, but who like myself are in sympathy with the promotion of health or who desire to pay honor to the memory of General Gorgas, but who have no information whatever about the terms of the bill.

Now, I resent the attempt to pass a bill through here in that way. If the gentleman is willing to leave this go over until we can study it and see that it does what the gentleman says he thinks it will do, then I shall not object. For instance, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER] in the hearings said they had an assurance that the Republic of Panama would contribute a site and money for a building on the site to the amount of half a million dollars. The bill is drawn so that they are not obliged to do that. The bill is so drawn as to make it possible to put the Treasury of the United States to that expenditure. There are other places in the bill where you could drive a four-horse team through it without interfering with the provisions of the bill. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will first ask the gentleman if he knows who is responsible for trying to build up the back fire in my district after my request for time to study this bill?

Mr. THATCHER. I wish to say——

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to find out who is behind this bill.

Mr. THATCHER. Let me make this statement——

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that I am not going to let it go through to-day.

Mr. THATCHER. The best medical and sanitary judgment is in favor of this measure. If any of the constituents of the gentleman are telling him what their views may be, that is their concern.

Mr. CRAMTON. It only comes since my action last Wednesday, when I stated that I wanted to study the bill. It is one of these propaganda movements that has been started up that does not quicken my interest in the bill. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill may be passed over to-day without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over to-day without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ROAD CONGRESSES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 107) to provide that the United States extend to the Permanent International Association of Road Congresses an invitation to hold the sixth session of the association in the United States, and for the expenses thereof.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. This requires three objections. I object, for one.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I object.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Three objections have been heard. The Clerk will call the next bill.

PAN AMERICAN CONFERENCE ON HIGHWAYS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 108) to provide for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Second Pan American Conference on Highways at Rio de Janeiro.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the same. It requires three objections. I object, for one.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I object.

The SPEAKER. Two objections are heard.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Three objections have been heard. The Clerk will call the next bill.

RETIREMENT DATE FOR RETIREMENTS OF FEDERAL PERSONNEL

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10288) to provide for a uniform retirement date for authorized retirements of Federal personnel.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The only purpose of this bill is to simplify the bookkeeping and save a lot of expense. It does not affect the retirement-date feature.

Mr. BLANTON. But it does interfere with the present mode of retirement, and it does affect in some ways the status of a few employees of the Government. We have been getting along pretty well under the present system.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If the gentleman thinks it will affect the status of anybody at the present time, I have an amendment to suggest.

Mr. BLANTON. I will look into it a little further and confer with the gentleman.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman let it be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

REPORTING CERTAIN CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9583) authorizing the reporting to Congress of certain claims and demands asserted against the United States.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when there is filed in the General Accounting Office a claim or demand against the United States that may not lawfully be adjusted by the use of an appropriation theretofore made, but which claim or demand, in the judgment of the Comptroller General of the United States, contains such elements of legal liability or equity as to be deserving of the consideration of the Congress, he shall submit the same to the Congress by a special report containing the material facts and his recommendation thereon.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TRANSFER OF RETURNS OFFICE, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9570) to provide for the transfer of the returns office from the Interior Department to the General Accounting Office, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from South Dakota if it will be agreeable to him to have the bill passed over?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Let me say that the only amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior is that the "contract" should read "contracts." There is an amendment to carry that out.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend and revise my remarks on this bill by inserting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and also ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 2, 1928.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WILLIAMSON: Your letter of January 19, 1928, has been received, inclosing with request for report thereon, H. R. 9570, Seventieth Congress, first session, entitled "A bill to provide for the transfer of the returns office from the Interior Department to the General Accounting Office, and for other purposes." A bill drawn along the lines of this measure has heretofore been the subject of correspondence between myself and the Comptroller General of the United States, and I inclose herewith for your information a copy of a letter from the Comptroller General dated December 20, 1926, on which it will be seen I made an indorsement that I would support such a bill as he suggested. The measure under consideration, if enacted into law, will be in the interest of good administration and has my approval.

I have one amendment to suggest and that is, after the word "contract," in line 4, page 1 of the bill, that the letter "s" be added, so as to read "contracts."

As a matter of information it may be stated that all of the returns of contracts from 1860 to 1925, inclusive, are now stored through the courtesy of the General Accounting Office in the Emory Building, First and B Streets NW.; all returns of contracts for 1926, 1927, and 1928, as well as card indices and record books pertaining to the returns office, are in the Interior Department Building, Eighteenth and F Streets NW. At the present time three permanent clerks—two in grade CAF–3, at $1,560 per annum each, and one in grade CAF–2, at $1,560 per annum, and one temporary clerk in grade CAF–3, at $1,500 per annum—are employed in connection with the operation of the returns office. The cost for cards, folders, typewriting paper, and other stationery and miscellaneous articles required in the operation of the returns office has been approximately $300 per annum.

In this connection, it is proper to add that while this bill does not in express terms repeal the existing law establishing the returns office and providing for the filing therein of copies of contracts by the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Interior, respectively, such a repeal is contained in section 19 of H. R. 5767, Seventieth Congress, first session, entitled "A bill to establish uniform requirements affecting Government contracts, and for other purposes," which is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives. In this bill likewise provision is made under sections 10 and 11 for the filing of contracts in the General Accounting Office and the furnishing of certified copies thereof.

Very truly yours, HUBERT WORK.

PUBLIC PRINTER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6669) fixing the salary of the Public Printer and the Deputy Public Printer.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and not intending to object——

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. I take it that no Member can reserve two-thirds of the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. We can pass this bill to-day, as well as any other day.

Mr. BLANTON. If you pass this bill, increasing this salary to $10,000, you will have a hundred other bureau chiefs coming here demanding that their salaries, too, be raised to $10,000.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is: Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the conditions I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Are there three objections?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; three Members have objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan reserved the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Three of us are on our feet now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan object?

Mr. HOOPER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there are three members of the Committee on Printing, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] being one of them. He came to me when the House convened to-day and said that none of the committee could be here to-day, and that they wish to have this bill retain its present status until they could be here. I wish the gentlemen would withdraw their objections so that it may be left as they request.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in objecting was because we were denied the opportunity of getting information. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that no one man can stand up here and reserve the right to object when he by his own objection can not stop the consideration of a bill. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I again ask unanimous consent that this bill may be allowed to go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11078) to provide for the coinage of medals in commemoration of the achievements of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN TAXES TO OKANOGAN COUNTY, IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 431) to authorize the payment of certain taxes to Okanogan County, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to point out to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] that the wording found in section 2, line 11, does not carry out that intent. I would suggest an amendment so it will read:

That the payment of such authorized appropriation to the said Okanogan County, in the State of Washington, shall be in full settlement.

Mr. HILL of Washington. That is acceptable.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Otherwise it would leave the thing open.

Mr. HILL of Washington. That amendment will be acceptable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Okanogan County, in the State of Washington, as taxes claimed by said county under section 2 of the act of July 1, 1892, relating to the payment of local taxes on allotted Colville Indian lands, the sum of $104,010.76: Provided, That there may be deducted from said amount by the Secretary of the Interior such sum or sums as he may find have been paid to said county for Indian tuition; also the excess, if any, where the rate based on the value of Indian allotments may be found to be in excess of the rate on taxable land.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $104,010.76, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said sum to said county, as provided in the foregoing section.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 10, insert the following: "Provided, That such authorized appropriation shall be in full settlement of all claims arising under and at any time after the passage of the act of July 1, 1892 (27 Stat. 62, 63)."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 11, after the word "that," insert the words "the payment of," and after the word "appropriation" insert "to the said Okanogan County, in the State of Washington."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDEMNITY TO THE GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9043) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of France on account of losses sustained by the owners of the French steamship Madeleine as a result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Kerwood.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is not money which our Government owes to the Government of France. This money is due as the result of a collision between one of our boats and the little steamship Madeleine. The entire damages amount to about £3,000, which is about $15,000. The fault of the steamship Kerwood has been established by a regular court of inquiry. These people were damaged as the result of the faulty navigation of the Kerwood, and I know the gentleman from Wisconsin would not want to withhold the payment of this just claim.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will state to the gentleman that this damage occurred during the war. American taxpayers, through the Federal Government, have had some financial dealings with the French Government and they have not been paid. Until such time as the French Government shall pay the American Government some of the money they owe us, I am going to object to every bill of this kind.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am sure if the gentleman will stop to consider, he will realize that here are people who are entitled to be compensated for damages which occurred from the fault of the management of a United States ship.

Mr. SCHAFER. And the taxpayers of America are entitled to receive compensation from the French Government on the war debt, and I therefore object.

DIVISION OF SAFETY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6848) to create in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor a division of safety.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOOPER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. HOOPER. I have been asked to request that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we are going to let it be passed on now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I intend to object if the gentleman does not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ELECTORS OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7373) providing for the meeting of electors of President and Vice President and for the issuance and transmission of the certificates of their selection and of the result of their determination, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this is a long bill and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the electors of President and Vice President of each State shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in December next following their appointment at such place in each State as the legislature of such State shall direct.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the executives of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Secretary of State of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 1 of this act to meet, six duplicates of original of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Secretary of State of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Secretary of State shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Secretary of State of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the State Department.

SEC. 3. That the electors shall make and sign six certificates of all the votes given by them, each of which certificates shall contain two distinct lists, one of the votes for President and the other of the votes for Vice President, and shall annex to each of the certificates one of the lists of the electors which shall have been furnished to them by direction of the executive of the State.

SEC. 4. That the electors shall dispose of the certificates so made by them and the lists attached thereto in the following manner:

First. They shall forthwith forward by registered mail one of the same to the President of the Senate at the seat of government.

Second. Two of the same shall be delivered to the secretary of state of the State, one of which shall be held subject to the order of the President of the Senate, the other to be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

Third. On the day thereafter they shall forward by registered mail two of such certificates and lists to the Secretary of State at the seat of government, one of which shall be held subject to the order of the President of the Senate. The other shall be preserved by the Secretary of State for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

Fourth. They shall forthwith cause the other of the certificates and lists to be delivered to the judge of the district in which the electors shall have assembled.

SEC. 5. That when no certificate of vote and list mentioned in this act from any State shall have been received by the President of the Senate or by the Secretary of State by the fourth Monday in December of the year in which the meeting of the electors shall have been held, the President of the Senate or, if he be absent from the seat of government, the Secretary of State shall request, by the most expeditious method available, the secretary of state of the State to send up the certificate and list lodged with him by the electors of such State; and it shall be his duty upon receipt of such request immediately to transmit same by registered mail to the President of the Senate at the seat of government.

SEC. 6. That when no certificates of votes from any State shall have been received at the seat of government on the fourth Monday of the month of January, after the meeting of the electors shall have been held, the President of the Senate, or, if he be absent from the seat of government, the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody one certificate of votes from that State has been lodged and such judge shall forthwith transmit that list by the hand of such messenger to the seat of government.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the word "of."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the editorial that appears in the Indianapolis News with respect to this bill, dated March 16, 1928, which is just last week——

Mr. HICKEY. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order is that we are going to object. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I consent to that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLANTON. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. HICKEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

R. 5772) to regulate, control, and safeguard the disbursement of Federal funds expended for the creation, construction, extension, repair, or ornamentation of any public buildings, highway, levee, dam, excavation, dredging, drainage, or other construction project, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. I object.

DOUBLE PENSIONS FOR DEPENDENTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10479) granting double pensions to dependents under existing pension laws in all cases where an officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man or student flyer of the United States Army dies or is disabled due to aircraft accident.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota is there any objection, while on the subject, to amending the bill by providing the same double compensation for a man injured in a submarine?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from New York remember during the war when the committee brought in the war risk insurance bill and proposed to pay the wife of a general $17,500 and the wife of an enlisted man about $2,000? Does the gentleman remember the splendid argument which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] made, that when a man dies he gives all he has, and his life is worth just as much to his widow as is the life of any other man to his widow, without reference to the position he held?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; his life is worth as little to him as that of the other fellow.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to allow the bill to come up? I am going to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

RESERVE SUPPLIES HELD BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7752) to limit the issue of reserve supplies or equipment held by the War Department.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, this bill is so far-reaching in effect that I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] if he will accept an amendment which will permit the Government to issue supplies instead of keeping them until after the supplies are about to become deteriorated and useless. I propose to offer an amendment at the end of the bill excepting supplies or equipment becoming obsolete, deteriorated, or useless. In other words, if we say that the War Department can not issue any supplies from this reserve, they must keep all supplies on hand, regardless of whether the supplies are deteriorating or not. This means that we may be buying supplies for current use while similar supplies may be deteriorating and going to waste. I think before they become uselss or deteriorated we ought to use them. Will the gentleman accept that amendment?

Mr. JAMES. There was a provision to this effect in the appropriation bill of 1923. I think the gentleman's amendment is good, and we will accept it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This language is proper on an appropriation bill, because it only applies to one year, but this is a permanent provision, and we do not want to keep supplies until they become deteriorated and useless. With that reservation I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no issues of reserve supplies or equipment shall be made where such issues would impair the reserves held by the War Department for two field armies or 1,000,000 men.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "men," strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "except supplies or equipment becoming obsolete, deteriorated, or useless."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

POLITICAL STATUS OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8567) to amend section 29 of the act of March 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," and for the insertion of a new section in said act between sections 29 and 30 of said act, to be designated as "section 29½" of said act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker. I demand the regular order. I object. This bill has no place on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BEEDY. It was put on the calendar by mistake.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, SEVILLE, SPAIN

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 211) to amend Public Resolution 65, approved March 3, 1925, authorizing the participation of the United States Government in the International Exposition to be held in Seville, Spain.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Texas will withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, after I objected the other day I got a letter from the department, which sustained my idea of the bill. This bill will have to be passed before the department may now pay out the sum of $200,000. I have a letter from the department, and I would like to submit it to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. If I am incorrect, I shall gladly withdraw my objection.

Mr. BURTON. This is somewhat urgent.

Mr. BLANTON. I am quite ready to get the letter right away and submit it to the gentleman, and will be back here on the floor within a few minutes, and the gentleman can call it up again if I am mistaken. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed to the heel of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman mean that it be passed without prejudice for the present?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that it be passed without prejudice for the present to the heel of the calendar.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the heel of the calendar?

Mr. BLANTON. It is the end of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests that if it is to go to the end of the calendar there will be no chance of reaching it this afternoon.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be passed without prejudice, subject to be called up later by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, then I object to its consideration.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

SITTING OF MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House for two weeks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PACIFIC SOUTHWEST EXPOSITION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 126) providing for the cooperation of the United States in the Pacific Southwest Exposition in commemoration of the landing of the Spanish padres in the Pacific Southwest and the opening of the Long Beach, Calif., world port.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; if the House is willing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, this matter came up the other day when we had a special call of this calendar. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] then said that he had some matters that he wanted to examine into with reference to the bill. I say to him that this bill is in exactly the form in which innumerable bills have passed the House with reference to expositions. It provides for no expense whatsoever to the Government.

It has the approval of the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, and the Department of Commerce, and it has a report from the Director of the Budget to the effect that it is not in conflict with the President's financial policy. It merely permits the entry of goods into the United States for exposition purposes while the exposition is being held.

Mr. BLANTON. If I had the time, I would explain to the gentleman a very good and sufficient reason; but the House is in such a temper to proceed hurriedly that I can not do that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I hope the gentleman will take the time. I am satisfied the Members of the House will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. None of us being alike, we must all use our own judgment. Our Creator has so made men that they differ in their physiognomy and in their judgment and otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. If I had the chance to answer the gentleman, I would not object; but we want to proceed with the calendar, and I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADDITIONAL PAY TO MEN ON SUBMARINE VESSELS AND DIVING DUTY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9289) to provide additional pay for personnel of the United States Navy assigned to duty on submarine vessels and diving duty.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW] to this provision of the bill, which provides for 25 per cent additional pay for officers, which, I think, is proper, and then limits the additional pay for enlisted men to not to exceed $30 a month; but limits the minimum to not less than $5. The low-pay enlisted men get about $21 a month. On the enlistment basis they would not receive more than $5. The country was quite shocked when it heard that we were proposing to give but $1 additional pay.

Mr. ANDREW. Does the gentleman refer to the divers or to the men on the submarines?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Submarines. Every time they submerge they now get $1. Would not the gentleman accept an amendment, on line 4, page 2, to read, "not less than $15," instead of "$5"?

Mr. ANDREW. The provision is for a minimum of $5 additional pay per month, a 25 per cent increase. We have a provision also that the submarine personnel may get additional pay as high as $30 a month. The thought was that the minimum might go to men attached to the submarine service at the docks, to new men not yet qualified, and that the Secretary of the Navy might arrange a scale of pay according to the character of the service and according to the experience of the men.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do I understand the gentleman's bill gives the Secretary of the Navy sufficient latitude to fix different salaries within the same grade?

Mr. ANDREW. Yes; so far as additional pay is concerned, between $5 a month and $30 a month, according to the character of the work. That is, the Navy could differentiate between men newly assigned to submarines and those fully qualified, or between those cruising with the fleet and those quartered on shore or on shore-based tenders.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, in view of that statement, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice until we can confer further. I think that is a very dangerous thing to pass without full understanding and discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MONUMENT TO SACAJAWEA, OR BIRD WOMAN

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 75) authorizing the erection of a monument to the memory of Sacajawea, or Bird Woman.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LEAVITT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have a statement from an official in the State of Montana, correcting the statement as to the burial place of Sacajawea as given in this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TABLET OR MARKER AT MEDICINE LODGE, KANS.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8132) authorizing the appropriation of $2,500 for the erection of a tablet or marker at Medicine Lodge, Kans., to commemorate the holding of the Indian Peace Council, at which treaties were made with the Plains Indians in October, 1867.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ENFORCEMENT OF NARCOTIC DRUGS ACTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10083) to provide for advances of funds by special disbursing agents in connection with the enforcement of acts relating to narcotic drugs.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this proviso was carried on an appropriation bill from time to time, and recently it went out on a point of order. I want to make it certain that the spending of this money contrary to the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes will be applicable only to the enforcement of the drug acts, and therefore I would suggest that on page 2, line 8, it be amended so as to read:

Such advances in connection with the enforcement of the act hereinbefore stated relating to narcotic drugs—

And so forth. That would make it clear. With that understanding I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Prohibition, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to direct the advance of funds by special disbursing agents in connection with the enforcement of the act entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes," approved December 17, 1914, as amended by the revenue act of 1918, and the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes,' approved February 9, 1909," as amended by the act of May 26, 1922, known as "the narcotic drugs import and export act."

Such advances may be made, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, from the appropriations available for the enforcement of such acts and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 2, line 8, after the word "advance," insert "in connection with the enforcement of the acts hereinbefore stated relating to narcotic drugs."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 2, in line 10, after the word "States," insert:

"Sec. 529, title 31, U. S. C."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SECOND PAN AMERICAN CONFERENCE ON HIGHWAYS AT RIO DE JANEIRO

The next business on the Consent Calendar was Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 30) to provide for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Second Pan American Conference on Highways at Rio de Janeiro.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

PERMANENT INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ROAD CONGRESSES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 31) to provide that the United States extend to the Permanent International Association of Road Congresses an invitation to hold the sixth session of the association in the United States, and for the expenses thereof.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

PUEBLO INDIANS OF NEW MEXICO

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9483) to provide for the acquisition of rights of way through the lands of the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment to suggest which I feel sure will be agreeable to the gentleman from New Mexico. The committee amendment strikes out the limitation that no right of way shall be granted within less than 500 yards from the plaza of any existing pueblo. The committee amendment changes that to the Santo Domingo pueblo. As I understand, that is the only case where a question now arises, but I can see it might arise as to some other pueblo. I want to add at the end of the committee amendment, after the words "New Mexico":

nor shall any such right of way be granted any portion of which lies less than 500 yards from the plaza of any other existing pueblo without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. The committee, on the presentation of the matter by the gentleman from New Mexico, took subsequent action. It struck out all of the provision and inserted in its place:

Under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, what grant of authority the department would feel that language would give them. It no doubt gives broad enough authority to the department, but I am not sure the department would feel that Congress meant that they could prevent the grant of a right of way within 500 yards of the Santo Domingo pueblo. For instance, they might only construe it to mean that the right of way would be granted, but under such regulations as the department might require, and it might be held that those regulations did not go so far as to prescribe the location of the right of way.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman from New Mexico discussed that with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I would be glad to have him make a statement.

Mr. MORROW. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that a railroad already exists there, and the right of way has been paid for. An act of Congress was passed, but it did not bring in the Government as a party, and it is necessary now to go back and apply certain laws that apply to Indian reservations in order that this may be carried out. The railroad is already built and runs through this very plaza, and the purpose of our amendment was to leave the matter entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. If there is any interference there, the only question raised is the schoolhouse. The schoolhouse happens to be on one side of what is intended shall be the highway, and the railroad people themselves are perfectly willing, as I understand it, to remove the schoolhouse and rebuild it. The purpose is to let alone the railroad that is already constructed.

Mr. CRAMTON. I wonder whether it would be agreeable to the gentleman from New Mexico to let the bill pass over so that we may work out the amendment?

Mr. MORROW. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

ALABAMA AND COUSHATTA INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5479) to provide for the purchase of land, livestock, and agricultural equipment for the Alabama and Coushatta Indians in Polk County, Tex., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would be interested in having some statement from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The report carries none, and therefore I am obliged to object.

Mr. BRIGGS. A report has been filed with the committee on that subject.

Mr. CRAMTON. But it is not in the report. If the gentleman wants it to go over, that will be all right with me; and if I can get a copy of the report I will be glad to study it.

Mr. BRIGGS. I will be glad to furnish the gentleman with a copy, and I can do that right now.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have the report right here, if the gentleman would like to see it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like a chance to read the report. The gentleman can not get his money before May or June in any event.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is perfectly true.

FLAG AND INSIGNIA OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5724) to prevent desecration of the flag and insignia of the United States and to provide punishment therefor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person or persons, firm or firms, corporation or corporations, or other organization or organizations, who, in any manner, for exhibition or display, place or cause to be placed upon the flag, colors, design, standard, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States, or upon any intended representation thereof, any inscription, picture, design, device, symbol, name, advertisement, words, marks, notice, or token, or who shall possess, distribute, display, or exhibit, or cause to be distributed, displayed, or exhibited any flag, color, design, standard, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States, upon which shall in any manner be placed, attached, annexed, affixed, associated, or made a part thereof, any inscription, picture, design, device, symbol, name, advertisements, words, marks, notice, or token whatever, or who willfully and publicly show open or hostile contempt for, trample upon, or otherwise deface or defile any such flag, color, ensign, standard, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States, shall upon conviction be fined not less than $100, or imprisoned for not more than six months, or both, for each such offense: Provided, That flags, colors, ensigns, standards, coats of arms, or other insignia the property of or used in the service of the United States, or any State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, may have placed thereon such inscriptions, names of actions, words, figures, marks, or symbols as are authorized by law or by the rules and regulations of the United States Government or any department or division thereof.

SEC. 2. That the words "flag," "colors," "coat of arms," or "insignia" used herein include also any picture or representation or simulation of the same.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not apply to the use, wholly disconnected from trade advertising, of the flag, colors, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States on newspapers, books, cards, certificates, commissions, decorations, banners, pictures, stationery for correspondence, or in or on any other article or in any position where its use is purely and obviously for ornamental or patriotic purposes.

SEC. 4. That this act shall go into effect upon its passage and publication, except as to goods which shall have been made and marked and in stock at that time, and as to such goods it shall be in force six months after its passage and publication.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, in line 9, strike out the word "for" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to wit"; and in the same line strike out the words "or otherwise"; and in line 12 strike out the word "less" and insert the word "more"; and on page 3, beginning in line 8, strike out after the word "effect" the remainder of line 8, all of lines 9, 10, and 11, to the word "six"; and after the word "its" strike out the word "passage" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enactment."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Is not the indiscriminate use of the flag now prohibited in advertisements?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I say that this bill——

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman mind answering my question, please?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am undertaking to answer it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not the indiscriminate use of the flag now prohibited in advertisements?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. This prohibits the indiscriminate use of the flag in advertisements.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am afraid the gentleman's bill opens up something that is now prohibited by law.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Because you use the language "except for advertisement."

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Not at all. This bill applies by national law to the desecration of the national flag, substantially if not precisely, the provisions of law that are in force in every State flag desecration act.

Mr. BLANTON. But at the present time, if I understand it correctly, the indiscriminate use of the flag in advertisements is prohibited by law.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. That is exactly what this is intended to do.

Mr. BLANTON. But this bill, I am afraid, on account of the way in which it is framed, would open that up.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Because it says "except for advertising purposes," and so on.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I think the gentleman is indulging in a very unnecessary fear.

Mr. DYER. That is not the effect of it at all.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman is sure his bill does not open that up, I do not object. I did not make an objection to begin with, because I did not think the bill covered that phase of it, but from a reading of the bill itself it would appear that it does.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Oh, the bill can not be open to any such objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill. I realize it will pass, but I want briefly to state the grounds of my opposition.

There is some embarrassment, of course, in opposing this bill, a bill to protect the flag. But why this bill? Since the organization of the Federal Government the flag has been fairly well protected without national legislation on the subject.

To me there is a principle of government involved in this proposed legislation. Gentlemen stand on the floor of this House and decry concentration of power in the Federal Government, and yet every time we are confronted with a proposition to increase power, if there is some sentiment involved, we vote to give a little more power to the Federal Government. Now, I submit this proposition, which is absolutely sound in a system of popular government. I challenge anybody to deny the soundness of the proposition which I am about to state.

This is a government created by the people, for the people. In such a system, a system of popular government, if we are to preserve it as a vital, efficient system of government, we must let the smaller units of government do whatever they will do, because in the smaller units of government there is the larger personal interest and responsibility. It is not the perfection of government that is important in nature; it is the perfection of people.

It is a fact, and it is a great fact, that notwithstanding some things that have taken place in the history of our country, 46 State legislatures have written prohibitions against the desecration of the American flag. Why do we not leave it there? Nobody claims that the flag is not being protected by the States.

Every time the Federal Government comes in to share responsibility with the States, it is a fact that the States are weakened in their interest, weakened in their efforts, weakened in their sense of responsibility; and it is by this process that we are destroying the State, building up here at this seat of government a great, big, top-heavy system. This Government is not made up of capitals, of officials, of laws, or even of written constitutions, or yet of flags. It is of the people. This is their flag. It is better for them if they will, and the record shows they will, protect their own flag in their own local governments through their own elected officers than to have an appointed marshal make the arrest and the trial had before an appointed Federal judge. They are doing that now. Everybody admits it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply want to suggest that frequently we find in the research work which we have to do in the Committee on Appropriations that many, many of the local communities, even as large as the States, are willing to surrender power that belongs to them naturally and legally just for the mere bagatelle of a Federal appropriation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is a tragedy.

Mr. MADDEN. It is; and we frequently refuse to let them surrender their rights and we then are blamed for not making such an appropriation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am sorry to oppose this bill. I have the highest respect for the author of the bill, and I have the highest respect for the motives behind it, but I state to you, gentlemen, with 46 States of the American Union already having written laws that protect this flag against desecration, why do we want the Federal Government sharing that responsibility? I do not believe we ought to vote up this bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. McKEOWN. If this bill becomes the law, will there be penalties providing for the arrest of men who violate the law?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; but I do not want in my limited time to discuss the details of the legislation. I am discussing the governmental policy that is involved in a situation where we have 46 States that are admittedly taking care of the situation, protecting the flag, and no complaint from any section. In this case I say it is not wise to enact a national law.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDSON. What two States have not such a law now?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand Virginia is one.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And Kentucky.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. And Virginia has now passed such a law.

Mr. DOMINICK. I was just going to suggest that to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman think that the National Government has a right to pass a law to prevent the desecration of its own flag?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Of course it has; but this is the flag of the people. Our system of Government is not divided now. This is one Government, one people, and one flag. The people have the governmental responsibility, a part is lodged in the municipality, a part is in the county, and a part in the State, and another part in the Federal Government. If the people of the 46 States, now 47, are taking care of this thing, it is their flag, their States which all together make up their governmental machinery and their Nation. When they are taking care of it, why not let it alone? I make the point that after the formative period of a popular government—and we have long passed that period—all true progress in such a system, by the very nature of the system, must be in that direction which places the power to govern and the necessity to govern closer and closer to the people. State rights is not important. It is not the right of the State to govern which is important, but it is the necessity for them to govern which is important if our system of government is to live.

Mr. LINTHICUM. They will make it a uniform law throughout the whole country.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I suggest that the State laws are practically uniform. But this argument in favor of national legislation because the States have not enacted uniform laws is not sound; it is an argument against national legislation. The people have a right to have their own ideas reflected in legislation. It is the people's Government. I submit it would be a grander, a more assuring spectacle to see some local constable hail a violator of the flag before a local justice of the peace with the people gathered as indignant spectators than to have an imported Federal marshal carry the offender off to a Federal court for trial. When Uncle Sam steps in the States step out; not always, perhaps, but that is the tendency. There is no complications here, no interstate problems, no feature which is beyond the power or jurisdiction of the States, no lack of State efficiency. It is just one more addition to the great Federal colossus.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, it is true that most of the States have adopted a law practically the same if not in this exact language. The author of this legislation felt, and the committee felt, that it was proper for the Congress itself to put its approval and seal upon the legislation that affected the flag of the Nation. It does nothing more than that except to authorize and approve of the action of the people of the country throughout the various States. It is most appropriate that Congress should do something with respect to its own flag. It is no reflection on the States; we have enacted many laws that States have enacted, and this one is only for the purpose of putting the approval of Congress on the flag of the Republic. I will yield to the author of the bill.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, there is no intention and certainly this will not have the effect in any way of interfering with the State laws. It will simply supplement them and add to the prevention of the desecration of our flag the full power of the Federal law. This legislation has been proposed from time to time in past years; indeed, recommended to the Congress by several of our Presidents. The Congress of the United States is the primary authority for a law of this kind. My friend from Texas will agree that the fundamental authority and duty to protect the flag of the United States rests with the Federal Government. That is what was declared, inferentially at least by the Supreme Court of the United States in the memorable decision in Halter v. Nebraska (205 U. S. 34), upholding the constitutionality of the Nebraska State law. It should be obvious that it is the right, if not the duty, of the National Government to exert all its authority and power to protect the emblem of its own sovereignty. All this bill will do will be to provide a Federal flag desecration law, as the fundamental law of the land on the subject, and by no means will it conflict with the statutes of any State. In other words, we will have for the protection of the flag and for its preservation inviolate a Federal law, and thus there will be a joint exercise of power by the Federal Government and States to insure the purpose in view. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that no gentleman will hastily or lightly vote against this measure, because it is preeminently our duty to pass it.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. DYER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GILBERT. What two States in the Union have not passed the law?

Mr. DYER. I think there is only one now—I think Virginia passed it the last session. The only one remaining is Kentucky.

Mr. GILBERT. I have no information about it, but if Kentucky is the only State that has not passed such legislation, then this legislation must be passed purely for the benefit of Kentucky?

Mr. DYER. Oh, no; if all the States had passed it, this would be offered in the same way, because it is the flag of the Nation. It is no reflection on any State.

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect for the argument of my good friend from Texas, it is perfectly true that the people of the United States express themselves through their State legislatures, and they also express themselves through the Congress, here.

This whole legislation is nothing more or less than an expression on the part of the people of the United States through Congress itself of the determination to protect the emblem of our national sovereignty. It is a matter peculiarly within the domain of the National Congress, the legislation in no way reflects upon any one State. Let any one State do whatever it sees fit to do so far as passing laws to protect the flag is concerned. The function of the Congress of the United States more than any State government is to protect the emblem of national sovereignty, and as the situation is at present, if there is any desecration of the flag within any State and the State does not see fit to prevent it or to punish on account of it, or if there is any desecration of the flag in connection with its use or any article shipped in interstate commerce there is no single law on our statute books by which we can protect our Stars and Stripes. I say that it is a part of the function of the Congress of the United States to protect the emblem of its own sovereignty. I hope sincerely that this legislation will be passed.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, it appears from the discussion that Kentucky is the only State that has not already a law identical with the one sought to be enacted. In Kentucky we have no revolutionists, we have no reds. If there ever had been occasion for a law of this kind, Kentucky certainly would have enacted it. If one in Kentucky should purposely and wantonly insult the flag, he probably would never reach the court house. I am not opposed to the legislation. I simply want to inform the House that it has never been necessary and never will be in Kentucky to have a law to protect the national emblem from desecration. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] as a State rights speech is as far-fetched as any argument I have heard in this House for quite a while. The idea that this affects State rights is preposterous. If the National Government has a right to do anything, it has a right to protect that emblem which represents it, not only in this country but throughout the world. All of the States have passed laws with the exception of Kentucky, and from what the gentleman from Kentucky says about that State it does not need to pass a law; but all of those laws are different. They intend the same thing, but they are different, and now we have here an opportunity to enact a law for the whole country, uniform, so that a man traveling from one State to another will know what desecration of the flag means.

The provisions of the bill read as follows:

That any person or persons, firm or firms, corporation or corporations, or other organization or organizations, who, in any manner, for exhibition or display, place or cause to be placed upon the flag, colors, design, standard, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States, or upon any intended representation thereof, any inscription, picture, design, device, symbol, name, advertisement, words, marks, notice, or token, or who shall possess, distribute, display, or exhibit, or cause to be distributed, displayed, or exhibited any flag, color, design, standard, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States, upon which shall in any manner be placed, attached, annexed, affixed, associated, or made a part thereof, any inscription, picture, design, device, symbol, name, advertisements, words, marks, notice or token whatever or who willfully and publicly show open or hostile contempt, to wit, trample upon, deface, or defile any such flag, color, ensign, standard, coat of arms, or other insignia of the United States, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $100, or imprisoned for not more than six months, or both, for each such offense.

It is provided, however, that coats of arms, flags, insignia, and so forth, used in the United States or any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, may have such names, words, figures, and so forth, authorized by the rules and regulations of the United States Government, and, further, that it shall not apply to the use when wholly disconnected with trade advertisement of the flag, colors, coat of arms, or other insignia on newspapers, books, cards, banners, stationery, and so forth, where the use is purely or obviously for ornamental or patriotic purposes.

I am particularly pleased to see that Congress has at last reached the position of legislating against any degredation of the Stars and Stripes, the oldest national flag now in existence; all those which preceded it have been changed, substituted, or altered. This great flag, like the great country it represents, has grown with the admission of other States into the Union by the addition of stars upon the blue background.

It stands for American life, liberty, and happiness; it represents those democratic principles laid down by the fathers; it is sacred to the heart of every patriotic American and stands for the unlimited power and resources of 115,000,000 citizens.

It is quite befitting at this time that the desecration of the flag shall be prohibited by the National Government; it was only in the last Congress that the National Government took over Fort McHenry as a national reservation and shrine because at that fort the national anthem written by Francis Scott Key was born, and it was this Congress which provided additional funds whereby the old fort may be restored to its pristine glory when the battle was fought; it was at this fort, by the writing of the Star-Spangled Banner, that additional vitality was given to the flag of which we are speaking. At Fort McHenry will fly this great emblem of freedom and independence.

Fort McHenry will ever serve as a beacon light of our liberty, where loyalty will be intensified as time rolls on, where love of country will be enshrined in the hearts of every son and daughter of the United States of America, and we shall have carried out the prayer of the author of the Star-Spangled Banner—

O thus be it ever when freemen shall stand
Between their lov'd home and the war's desolation!
Blest with vict'ry and peace may the heav'n-rescued land
Praise the power that hath made and preserv'd us a nation!

I sincerely trust that this bill will be passed, and then I want to see another bill passed, and that is one to make Key's Star-Spangled Banner the national anthem by act of Congress. [Applause.]

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, SEVILLE, SPAIN

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 401, (H. J. Res. 211) to amend Public Resolution 65, approved March 3, 1925, authorizing the participation of the United States Government in the international exposition to be held in Seville, Spain. The gentleman from Texas objected to the consideration of this bill, but he now informs me that he has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has assured me that certain safeguards will be made so that the Government will be protected. I have withdrawn my objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object, not that I am opposed to the joint resolution, but when a bill or resolution is up here and it has been objected to, then Members go away under the impression that it has been settled. Some of them perhaps would object to this now. It is a bad policy to return to these bills.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. JEFFERS. In this case it was stated when the bill was under consideration that the gentleman from Texas was to go to his office and get some information and come back, and then that this request would be made so that every Member was given warning.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am sure that nobody will be surprised.

Mr. DYER. With that statement I shall withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the House joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That appropriations heretofore made or hereafter to be made under the authorization of Public Resolution 65, approved March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1256), to enable the Government of the United States to participate in an international exposition at Seville, Spain, may be expended on the certificate of the Secretary of State that the employment of personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere and that the materials or services are necessary to enable the Government of the United States to participate in said exposition for the purposes enumerated in that resolution without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, or of any other act regulating or limiting the expenditure of public moneys: Provided, That this authority shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

BROOKSVILLE PLANT INTRODUCTION GARDEN

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 26) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of real property located in Hernando County, Fla., known as the Brooksville Plant Introduction Garden, no longer required for plant-introduction purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DRANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ENTRIES WITHIN RECLAMATION PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 475) to amend certain laws relating to the submission of proof on entries within reclamation projects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SERVICE MEDALS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5789) to authorize the award and supply of service medals to individual soldiers as prescribed by Army Regulations for the rendition of certain services.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the bill do?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The object of this bill is to have those in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who receive medals for distinguished service get them for nothing instead of having to pay for them as they do now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the committee amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to procure and issue without expense to persons entitled to them, and to the families of such as may be dead, the following service medals, together with the ribbons, clasps, stars, and similar devices as may be prescribed as a part thereof:

(a) Civil War campaign medal; (b) Indian campaign medal; (c) Spanish campaign medal; (d) Spanish War service medal; (e) Cuban occupation medal; (f) Porto Rico occupation medal; (g) Philippine campaign medal; (h) Philippine congressional medal; (i) China campaign medal; (j) Cuban pacification medal; (k) Mexican service medal; (l) Mexican border service medal; (m) Victory medal and clasps; (n) fourragère as an individual decoration; (o) any service medal or similar device hereafter authorized: Provided, That the fact that a person is not in or did not die in the service shall not preclude such gratuitous issue.

SEC. 2. That whenever any article presented under the provisions of this act shall have been lost, destroyed, or rendered unfit for use, without fault or neglect on the part of the owner, such article may, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, be replaced at cost price: Provided, That to persons in the military service of the United States such article may be replaced free of charge.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend from the appropriations for the support of the Army so much as may be necessary to defray the cost of the issues provided by this act.

SEC. 4. All laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the author of the bill a question. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the action just taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to reconsider the action just taken. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Maryland will be permitted to ask a question.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman why not also insert "the Navy"? You have regulations prescribed by the Army. Why not also have it "Naval regulations"? Why should not the amendment embrace the Navy?

Mr. SCHAFER. And why not insert "the Coast Guard" while we are at it? [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. The Coast Guard is entitled to some medals. The Coast Guard became a part of the Navy during the war.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And at that time it did very useful work.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, why does not the leader of the "wets" [Mr. LINTHICUM] offer an amendment to include the Navy and the Coast Guard?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. We do not legislate for the Navy. We have no jurisdiction.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill after the word "Army" by inserting the words "and Navy."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment I wish to offer.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman from Wisconsin will wait until my amendment is considered. After the word "Army" insert "Navy."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland will send up his amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] will yield, I want to suggest to him that it is hardly practicable to take that up at this time. The whole bill authorizes the Secretary of War to do certain things. Why not let that other matter come up as a separate bill and be passed on by the Navy Department, and make sure that it conforms to their requirements?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I suggest that the gentleman from Maryland introduce a bill of that kind and have it referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The amendment has not been offered yet. I make the point of order against it.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order of the gentleman from New York comes too late. There has been discussion.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over for a few minutes so that I can prepare a proper amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. You had better amend the rules of the House in the meantime.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I wish they could be amended in some respects.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is a great deal of danger that the gentleman by his amendment may interfere with the passage of this bill. It is a matter that ought to be considered separately. I am sure the Committee on Naval Affairs will give careful attention to any bill that the gentleman from Maryland may introduce.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think the gentleman should cooperate with me. My amendment is that wherever the words "Army Regulations" appear in the bill we should insert the words "and Navy," and after the word "Secretary" the words "or Secretary of the Navy" should be inserted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send up his amendment. The Clerk can not get it that way. If the gentleman wants to offer an amendment, he will have to send it up to the desk. It can not be taken up in this way.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order that there was no quorum present before the Chair put the question as to the engrossment and third reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over for 10 minutes, subject to call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over for 10 minutes, subject to call. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Meanwhile the Clerk will report the next bill.

VICKSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10564) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant and convey to the county of Warren a perpetual easement for public highway purposes over and upon a portion of the Vicksburg National Military Park, in the State of Mississippi.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. What bill is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. 429 on the calender. H. R. 10564. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant and convey to the country of Warren, State of Mississippi, a perpetual easement for the construction and maintenance of a public highway on the Vicksburg National Military Park, Vicksburg, Miss., at such location and under such conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the county of Warren shall perform at its own cost and expense such work as the Secretary of War may require incident to the construction and maintenance of said highway.

SEC. 2. No part of the property granted and conveyed by the Secretary of War for the purposes aforesaid shall be used for any other than highway purposes, and when said property shall cease to be so used it shall revert to the United States of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the spelling of the word "county," in line 4, page 1, will be corrected by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY ACADEMY, WEST POINT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11623) to authorize construction at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no occasion for such a bill as this. All that need be done is to get an estimate from the War Department, have it approved by the Budget, and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations. I protest against getting appropriations for the Army in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MISSOULA NATIONAL FOREST, MONT.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 126) to add certain lands to the Missoula National Forest, Mont.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to any valid existing claim or entry, all lands of the United States within the areas hereinafter described be, and the same are hereby, added to and made parts of the Missoula National Forest to be hereafter administered under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests; and the provisions of the act approved March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465), as amended, are hereby extended and made applicable to all other lands within said described areas——

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the descriptions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, for strategic purposes I am obliged to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11685) to accept the cession by the State of California of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Lassen Volcanic National Park, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Committee where the committee acquires jurisdiction to provide for a United States commissioner to write a regular judicial code for this park.

Mr. SINNOTT. In the first place, by reference from the Speaker. The bill was referred to my committee. There is a long line of precedents authorizing that to be done by the Speaker. All of these jurisdictional bills have been referred to the Public Lands Committee. Of course, I realize the force of the gentleman's criticism. There is a matter of procedure involved here, but there are other matters which are not matters of procedure. It is just one of those bills where there is an intermingling of procedure and other matters.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The reason it struck me so forcibly was that recently we had a hearing on a very important bill before the Committee on the Judiciary in which the jurisdiction of these commissioners in the parks was referred to in connection with the bill. I am sure that some of my colleagues on that committee would want to examine this bill, and I would like to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Surely.

Mr. CRAMTON. There have been any number of cessions of jurisdiction, and there have been one or two at this session. They are all along a uniform line, and I am advised that this bill is along the same line as the others. The gentleman will appreciate the desirability of having uniformity along these lines in the different parks. I do not understand that this brings anything new into being.

The State of California has just ceded jurisdiction over this area and the Government has accepted jurisdiction. That is the primary fact in the bill, and hence it goes to the Public Lands Committee. Having accepted that jurisdiction it is necessary to provide for judicial procedure in that area and that follows along as the second fact.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Suppose the condition were reversed? Suppose a bill called for the creation of commissioners in a certain area and incidental thereto jurisdiction was acquired over a park and such a bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, in this particular case the jurisdiction has been ceded by the State and we want to accept it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No harm can come if the bill goes over?

Mr. CRAMTON. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SERVICE MEDALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the House will return to the consideration of H. R. 5789, a bill to authorize the award and supply of service medals to individual soldiers as prescribed by Army regulations for the rendition of certain services, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that that amendment will be followed by others to perfect the bill along the line of granting medals and making awards to individuals in the Navy and Coast Guard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LINTHICUM: Page 2, line 21, after the word "War," strike out "be and he is" and insert:

"The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and they are."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the point of order of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That it is not germane; that the bill under consideration is a bill providing for the furnishing of certain medals and awards granted under authority of acts of Congress. The Navy does not necessarily award its medals under the same acts of Congress, and, therefore, this amendment is not germane to the bill under consideration.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, there is no reference in the bill to any law which authorizes the Army to grant these medals.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the medals are named there. If the gentleman will read the bill he will see that the medals are specified.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This is to grant medals, ribbons, or other devices to men who have performed duties in certain capacities and in certain wars. What I want to do is to follow this amendment by providing that this shall apply to the Navy granting ribbons or other devices, the same as the Army, and then to do the same thing with respect to the Coast Guard.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman is trying to do, but we are not going about it in the right way.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And the gentleman is not expressing his sympathy in the right way. If he is in sympathy with the proposition, he ought not to object.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If I understand this correctly, this is a bill suggested for the purpose of taking care of those who have lost their medals.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Therefore it has nothing to do with the authority given for bestowing these medals.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the gentleman speaking for his whole committee?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am just speaking from what I consider a common-sense standpoint.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. No; not to bestow them originally; it is to give them to them instead of having them pay for them after the award has been made.

Mr. McCLINTIC. In order that we may have a clear understanding, am I correct in the statement that it is only to take care of medals that have been lost?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. No; it goes further than that, but it does not authorize the granting of any medals.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I assumed that, inasmuch as it did not refer to how these medals were originally given, it did not affect existing law and related to the granting of medals by any branch of the service.

Mr. HUDSON. If the gentleman will permit, it is based altogether on the existing law.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. It is, and merely provides that they shall get them free instead of having to pay for them.

Mr. McCLINTIC. In other words, the statement is made that existing law requires them to purchase or pay for the medals?

Mr. JAMES. They pay 50 cents and this would give them free the first time.

Mr. CRAMTON. In support of the point of order, let me suggest, Mr. Speaker, the central idea of this bill is not merely the granting of medals. The central idea is how medals shall be granted to one class of persons—those granted under Army regulations. The gentleman from Maryland wants to bring in two other classes of persons. If the bill originally had provided for grants to two classes, to the Army and the Navy, he could bring in perhaps a third class, but inasmuch as the bill only provides as to one class of persons, the gentleman can not bring in two other classes. There is ample justification for the reasonableness of the rule, if you contemplate what would happen to this bill in case the gentleman's amendment should be adopted.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Does the gentleman take the position that to give the Navy and the Coast Guard the same privilege would require a separate bill in each one of the cases?

Mr. CRAMTON. I contend, certainly, that when a bill is before us to prescribe how medals shall be given under Army regulations it is not germane to put in something about how medals shall be given under Navy regulations or under Treasury regulations.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then the gentleman would be of the opinion that it would require a separate bill affecting the Navy and the Coast Guard?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). The Chair is ready to rule. We have before us a proposition authorizing the Secretary of War to do certain things. The gentleman from Maryland seeks to amend this proposition by authorizing the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury to do the same thing; in other words, the gentleman is offering to amend an individual proposition by a general provision so as to include several departments.

There is a long list of precedents which state that one individual proposition may not be amended by another individual proposition even though the two may belong to the same class, such as admitting a Territory, an amendment providing for the admission of another Territory is not in order; to a bill providing pensions for veterans of the Indian wars, an amendment providing for pensions for veterans of the Mexican War is not in order. Also, in section 9809 there is a precedent exactly similar to the one pending, where to a bill for the relief of dependents of men in the Regular Army an amendment proposing to extend the benefits of the act to dependents of men in the National Guard and the Reserve Corps was held not to be germane. This decision was afterwards upheld by Speaker Gillett.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to provide for the gratuitous issue of service medals and similar devices, for the replacement of the same, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BONDS IN CRIMINAL CASES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 52) to regulate the business of executing bonds for compensation in criminal cases and to improve the administration of justice in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that is purely judicial in its character and purpose and it is reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Would the gentleman have any objection to having the bill passed over without prejudice so we may examine it with that care which I know the gentleman wants us to give it?

Mr. GILBERT. I thoroughly agree with what the gentleman from New York has said about what bills ought to be on this calendar. While this is a very meritorious bill in my opinion, I realize it is subject to discussion and will have no objection whatever to the gentleman's request.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the right to object. This is an important bill. The report does not indicate that it has ever been submitted to any District authority, to the commissioners, to the courts affected, or to anyone else in the District. It seems to me that in respect of a bill of this importance pertaining to the judicial procedure of the District the House ought to have before it some information as to the attitude of the District authorities.

Mr. GILBERT. I will give the gentleman that information. The police judges want the bill. It was prepared at the instance of an ex-police judge. The commissioners reported on it, saying that they thought the reforms should be made but that the bill was not necessary because this could be done without the passage of the bill. With that position the judges take issue.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to put in the RECORD in connection with his remarks the report of the commissioners and the report of the judges so we can study them?

Mr. GILBERT. Is not that in the report?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; there is nothing of that kind in the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

LOAN OF FIELD GUNS TO DALLAS, TEX.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2820) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain field guns to the city of Dallas, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to loan without bond, without expense to the United States, to the city of Dallas, Tex., for the purpose of display in the State fair park in that city, two 3-inch field guns, model 1902, serial Nos. 151 and 153, with carriages, which were used by Battery A, Texas National Guard, from 1906 to 1917, until such guns may be needed for national defense.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the words "directed to," strike out the word "loan" and insert the word "lend."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill, S. 2820, is identical with the House bill introduced by myself which would authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the city of Dallas, Tex., two field guns for the purpose of display in the State fair park of that city.

These guns, model 1902, serially numbered 151 and 153, with carriages were used by Battery A, Texas National Guard, from 1906 to 1917.

The original proposition was to authorize the Secretary of War to donate these guns to the city of Dallas, but it was explained by the Secretary of War that these guns are classed as modern guns of the general type used in the World War and all on hand would probably be required in the event of another national emergency, either in their present condition or after relining to use the same ammunition as is used in the present 75-millimeter field gun. For that reason it was suggested by the Secretary of War that the authority should be to the Secretary of War to lend these guns to the city of Dallas, and this bill has been drawn to conform to that suggestion.

Battery A (Dallas Artillery Company) was organized in 1879, and served in the Texas Volunteer Guard and in the Texas National Guard. This organization, designated by the War Department as Battery A, Texas National Guard, was the nucleus around which was constructed the Sixty-first Field Artillery Brigade of the Thirty-sixth Division of the United States Army for service in the World War, and served with distinction in France from August 12, 1918, to March 9, 1919.

Prior to the World War this organization, under the call of the President, served on the Mexican border from May 9, 1916, to March 24, 1917. Many times it was called into service for riot duty and flood duty to assist the civil authorities, and during its existence has won eight first prizes in interstate competition.

Because of its efficiency and its record it was the second National Guard battery in America to be supplied with the long-recoil modern field guns in 1915.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of War to lend two of these guns to the city of Dallas for display in the State fair park, which is a city park. Also there is held annually at this park a fair known as the Texas State Fair, though it does not have any support from the State treasury. This is perhaps the greatest annual fair held in the United States and probably the greatest fair of its kind in the world. During the two weeks which this fair is held each year there is an attendance of approximately a million people.

In a very definite sense the city of Dallas under this bill would become the custodian of these guns, not only for the Government but for those with whose activities these guns have been so closely associated, and for the people at large.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Do I understand that this is to be followed by another amendment for another city for another complement of guns along in June? [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This is for the city of Dallas.

Mr. KETCHAM. And Houston is not to be included?

Mr. CRAMTON. There will be fighting enough there without our furnishing any guns. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC MARKET ON PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. J. Res. 204) providing that the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to give notice that on and after January 1, 1929, the Government will cease to maintain a public market on Pennsylvania Avenue between Seventh and Ninth Streets NW.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I am with the gentleman from Wisconsin unless this resolution is amended. I understand that the site has not yet been designated for the Department of Justice. There is no reasonable chance of its being needed for building purposes before the 1st of January, 1930.

Mr. SCHAFER. I think it is presumptuous for the committee to bring in a House resolution declaring that it will be needed just because the House of Representatives has passed legislation. The matter is before the Senate. I do not believe in trying to intimidate the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it should appear in the RECORD that it is not expected to use this site for building purposes before January, 1930.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the resolution provides for giving notice to the lessees only.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why should they do it? There has been no law to discontinue the market site. I object.

PERSONAL PHYSICIAN TO THE PRESIDENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3456) allowing the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army, to the medical officer assigned to duty as personal physician to the President.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to object anyway. The President receives a salary of $75,000 a year and a certain expense account. Does not the gentleman think he ought to be able to employ his own physician? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is objected to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. A similar bill is on the calendar objected to and restored and three objections have stricken it from the calendar. What is the rule when a like bill is messaged over from the Senate and goes on this calendar?

Mr. BLANTON. If the point of order is made against it, it ought to go off; the House having rejected such a measure, a similar bill ought to go off the calendar.

Mr. CRAMTON. Before the Speaker rules, let me say that where there are three objections to a bill on the calendar it is not the action of the House, it is the action of three persons who can change their minds. I do not believe that you can hold that the House has acted because there have been three objections to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. There will always be enough here, we hope, to object to a bill of this kind.

Mr. JAMES. When the gentleman from Texas objected to this bill before it was because he said it put the men on the roll forever.

Mr. BLANTON. That was only one of my many objections. I have a lot in my pocket now I have not pulled out. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the question of the gentleman from New York, the opinion of the present occupant of the Chair is that they are two distinct bills. One has been on the calendar objected to, and when the Senate bill comes over it goes on the calendar; and if it is objected to once, it will take three objections to take it from the calendar the next time.

Mr. BLANTON. We hope to have the three objections here to stop it when it is called again.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' HOSPITAL, PERRY POINT, MD.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8223) to authorize the sale of certain buildings at United States Veterans' Hospital No. 42, Perry Point, Md.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] give me some information? Are these buildings desired in order to provide school facilities for children of Government employees in Maryland?

Mr. LINTHICUM. This is not my bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am the author of this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the gentleman from Maryland can give me the information, perhaps, that I desire, and that is whether these buildings are desired by the State of Maryland to provide school facilities for children of Government employees at Camp Perry and other points?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have not looked at the buildings. They might be useful if the Government would appropriate money to us to put them in order, but I presume the gentleman from Michigan might object to that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would expect the State of Maryland to ask that. The State of Maryland would want the corn shelled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell or otherwise dispose of the following-described buildings now situated on the reservation of the United States Veterans' hospital, Perry Point, Md., which are of wooden construction and are unsuitable for the hospitalization of beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau: Fifty-seven 2-story frame dwellings, designated as types D–1, D–2, D–5, D–6, D–8, and D–10, and numbered 1001 to 1040, inclusive; 1189 to 1192, inclusive; 1194 to 1203, inclusive; 1205, 1207, and 1208.

SEC. 2. In addition to the foregoing, the director is further authorized to sell or otherwise dispose of seven 2-story frame dormitory buildings and one 2-story frame kitchen and mess building, numbered as follows: 23, 46, 46–A, 46–B, 46–C, 46–D, 46–E, and 47.

SEC. 3. The net proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' HOSPITAL, SUNMOUNT, N. Y.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9966) to provide for the reimbursement of certain patients at the United States Veterans' hospital, Sunmount, N. Y., for loss and damage to personal effects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, I do not believe the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has jurisdiction of this matter. The bill is not a large one and appears to be a very clear case, but if it does not belong to the Committee on Claims, then it belongs to some committee that has jurisdiction to report an appropriation, because the form of the bill does authorize the payment of this out of an existing appropriation. I shall not object to the bill, but I direct the attention of the committee to that question, because if it should be followed up by a course of such bills I think we would have to raise the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, the general law provides for the payment of claims when the loss is sustained by fire. This is the same kind of a loss, except that the damage was sustained as the result of the breaking of a steam pipe.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is something that goes to the merits of the case. I think the bill is meritorious. I am not going to object, but the fact that the gentleman states does not give his committee jurisdiction of a bill such as this, which authorizes certain things to be paid out of certain appropriations.

Mr. CRAIL. I think it does have jurisdiction, because the only difference is between the breaking of a steam pipe and the fire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reimburse, out of the appropriation for medical and hospital services, those patients at United States Veterans' hospital, Sunmount, N. Y., who suffered loss and damage to their personal effects on May 27, 1927, through the explosion of a rubber gasket in the high-pressure steam line passing through the storage room at that hospital: Provided, That the total amount paid hereunder shall not exceed $420.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' HOSPITAL, NORTH LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10027) to authorize the transfer of a portion of the Hospital Reservation of the United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78, North Little Rock, Ark., to the Big Rock Stone & Material Co., and the transfer of certain land from the Big Rock Stone & Material Co. to the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the form of the bill is defective. Section 3 sets up certain conditions to accompany the transfers, but in form it is a separate section of the bill. It sets up the beginning of a sentence without completing it. Section 3 ought to be tied in with the rest of the bill. If the gentlemen will study section 3 they will see that it starts out bravely but never gets anywhere. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice so that gentlemen can consider that point.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment I think which would correct that. Let us see if this will cure it. I provide that on page 1, line 6, after the word "convey" that there shall be inserted the words "by deed, containing restrictive covenants to run with the land and reservation to the river front as prescribed and provided for in section 3."

Mr. CRAMTON. Even then you have a section 3 that starts somewhere and does not finish. I think the gentleman from New York and the gentleman in charge of the bill ought to consider it. I think they can improve the form of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think that this will accomplish what we desire, which is to stop blasting close to a hospital where there are these sick men?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no idea what would be the construction of section 3 as it stands in the bill, connected with nothing else in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. We have been assured that the deeds will pass between the Government and this company, which will accomplish what we have in mind.

If there is any phraseology which the gentleman thinks will better accomplish this I would be very glad to have him amend the paragraph so that we can pass this bill, the deeds can issue, and we can stop this blasting in close proximity to where these sick men are domiciled. It is not my bill and I have no personal pride in it.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I have no desire to put anything in the way of it, but anyone who will read section 3 will see how it is defective—

Upon condition that the Big Rock Stone & Material Co. will conduct no blasting operations nearer United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78 than the extreme southern point of the 5.06 acre tract to be conveyed under the authority of this act.

And so forth.

You are hung up, because it does not provide that sections 1 and 2 are dependent upon these conditions. If the gentleman from South Dakota feels that time is important in the passage of this bill——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think it is an element.

Mr. CRAMTON. And of course the gentleman wants the bill effective.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a House bill. The gentleman from New York has studied the matter and he says he has an amendment which he thinks will cure it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Let us accept his amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am willing to accept it, and then I suggest that whoever is interested in the bill give it some further study before it is finally acted on in the Senate, in order to see that it is in effective form. I withdraw my request.

Mr. RAGON. This is an agreement between the stone company and the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My amendment would tie in section 3 with the conveyance of the deed and would make the restriction covenants run with the land, so that a subsequent purchaser without notice could not claim any acquired rights.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. This bill was drawn in a Government department at the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON]. He did not draw the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. That explains the mystery. I did not understand it before. I could not believe the gentleman from Arkansas would draft so careless a measure.

Mr. RAGON. I suggest to the gentleman that the bill was already prepared and sent up to the committee.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object and will offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, upon the conveyance to the United States of certain property hereinafter described, to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Material Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, part of the hospital reservation of the United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78, North Little Rock, Ark., described as follows:

Beginning at a point 529.2 feet east of the northwest corner of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west, which point is the northeast corner of the 18.09-acre tract of land purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. under authority of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1923; thence south along the east boundary of said 18.09-acre tract, which is also the east boundary of the Big Rock Stone & Material Co.'s property, a distance of 1,927.8 feet; thence south 33 degrees 34 minutes east a distance of 457.7 feet; thence north 6 degrees 10 minutes west a distance of 2,320.8 feet to the point of beginning, comprising a total area of 5.6 acres, more or less.

SEC. 2. The Big Rock Stone & Material Co. shall convey to the United States in exchange for the above-described land the following: A 5-acre tract of land in section 20; also an adjoining 1.82-acre tract in section 21; all in township 2 north, range 12 west, and more specifically bounded as follows: Beginning at a point 529.2 feet east of the northwest corner of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west, which point of beginning is the northeast corner of the 18.09-acre tract of land purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. under authority of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1923; thence north 60 degrees 27 minutes west a distance of 608.2 feet to a point 300 feet north of aforesaid northwest corner of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west; thence approximately 810 feet west to the east bank of the Arkansas River; thence in a southerly direction along the east bank of the Arkansas River to a point approximately 670 feet due west of the aforesaid northwest corner of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west; thence due east through the aforesaid section corner a distance of 1,199.2 feet to the point of beginning, comprising a total area of 6.82 acres, more or less.

SEC. 3. Upon condition that the Big Rock Stone & Material Co. will conduct no blasting operations nearer United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78 than the extreme southern point of the 5.6-acre tract to be conveyed under the authority of this act from the United States to the Big Rock Stone & Material Co., and upon the further condition that the United States shall have the privilege of using the Arkansas River front of the property heretofore conveyed by the United States to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. and of the property conveyed under the authority of this act for the construction of any revetments, piers, wharves, or similar structures along the banks of the Arkansas River abutting on the land and the free passage over the land to such revetments, piers, or wharves which may be deemed necessary for the use of the said hospital reservations by the United States Government.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "convey," insert "by deed containing restrictive covenant to run with the land and reservation to river front road, as described and provided for in section 3 of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALUTE TO OFFICIAL HUNGARIAN DELEGATION

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we are honored to-day in having in the diplomatic gallery at this moment the Hungarian minister to the United States and a delegation from the Hungarian House and Senate, and other officers of the Hungarian Government, who came over for the purpose of unveiling the statue of Kossuth in New York the other day. [Applause, the Members rising.]

ADDRESS OF HON. JAMES O'CONNOR, OF LOUISIANA

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR] on St. Patrick's Day at a banquet of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman, Mr. CONNERY, for the honor he has conferred upon me in requesting the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by me on St. Patrick's Day at a banquet of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, of New York, on the subject of "Ireland's contribution to America's greatness." It was their one hundred and fortieth anniversary of a day that is celebrated the world over. The observation of it by the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, of New York, one of the oldest institutions in America, carries with it a mark of historical significance. Among its members are Americans of the fourth, fifth, and sixth generation. In fact, they go back for their American origin to the very earliest days of colonial life. That organization has been addressed annually by the foremost men of our country. I deem it a great privilege and honor to have been accorded the opportunity of being a speaker at this the most recent of their magnificent celebrations. May I not reiterate my pride in the action taken by my distinguished friend, WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr., the son of Irish parents, a distinguished soldier of the World War, and one of the finest Americans of the Congress of the United States, in making my address the subject of an extension of his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

IRELAND'S CONTRIBUTION TO AMERICA'S GREATNESS

Mr. President, invited guests, and friends of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, I wish to thank the president of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, of New York, for the honor he has conferred upon me in inviting me to address this historic organization and its guests at this their annual banquet.

It is a great occasion, a magnificent function, though it happens annually on the 17th of March. That is a day and night which is honored throughout the world. In Paris, in Berlin, in Moscow, and in Vienna, in London, and Budapest ceremonies as stirring as those which are held in Dublin and Galway mark the 17th of March as a day that has the affection of men and women who have Irish blood in their veins and dwell in these widely separated cities of the British Isles and the Continent. The day is fittingly observed in every city of the Orient. It is observed on the shores of every sea. In Australia and in South America the patron saint of Ireland holds sway over the imaginations of peoples in towns, villages, and hamlets, and though not over as many, exercises the same potent spell that is cast by that wonderful name upon the thoughts of peoples in New Orleans, San Francisco, and New York. The test of an institution's worth and an individual's merit lies in their power to endure and hold a place in the thought of a number of generations. Nothing can withstand the constant and steady stroke of time. Even the pyramids will one day be with the sands of the desert that constantly threaten to engulf them. Kingdoms and dynasties pass away and are forgotten:

"The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself—
Aye, all which it inherit shall dissolve
And like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a wrack behind.
We are such stuff as dreams are made of
And our little lives are rounded with a sleep."

But there are some institutions and some men's fame that defy the corroding and devastating influence of the years. As a result of some great virtue, some powerful appeal that lies in them, they seem to possess perennial, immortal youth. St. Patrick's grip upon the hearts and affections of the people not only of the Irish race but of kindred people is apparently as vital now as it was a century ago. His splendid vision, his broad humanity, his liberal and democratic zeal, his unquenchable love of freedom has appealed powerfully and sympathetically to all people. But particularly to the Irish did his viewpoint of human existence commend itself, for every Irishman was potentially a St. Patrick whose hopes he symbolized and whose aspirations he personified.

We of Irish origin are glad to share with our friends who claim descent from other nations of Europe the veneration and the love and affection which we owe and give the patron saint of Ireland. For after all, Mr. President, we are in a measure divided only as the waves; we are one as the sea. All of us are extensions of European stock, some of our parents stepping off the immigrant ship a day or two ahead or behind the parents of other men and women who have blended, fused, and merged so that the native-born American is or will be a composite in a very large measure of Irish, German, English, Scotch, Spanish, and Italian blood. And to that composition Ireland has contributed wit, courage, loyalty, and patriotism. Irish blood has been spilled on every battle field from Lexington to Chateau-Thierry. Its trail of crimson may be traced from Valley Forge over the Plains of Chalmette below New Orleans and on through Argonne Forest. In Flanders fields are found crosses that bear the simple legend, "Sacred to the memory of 'Patrick Sullivan,' or 'John O'Brien,' an American soldier." Crossing the ocean in the day of sailing ships and barks, millions of Irish boys and girls landed on the Atlantic or the Gulf coast, and there in their humble way started to lay the mudsills and foundations for America's greatness as it is to-day. For we do enjoy the "glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome." They were not marked to stand on the central place of the stage of life. Its dazzling splendor was not for their eyes. But as hewers of wood and drawers of water, as toilers and workers and laborers they cleared the forest, they constructed our transcontinental railroads and those that run north and south from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, they strung the telegraph wires, they dug out the coal from the mines, they constructed the tunnels and subways, built our bridges and skyscrapers, and as an army of unknown soldiers laid and paved the way for the magnificently dazzling enchantment that the United States of America is to-day. And they left descendants behind them, in other generations, who fought up from the ground on which their ancestors begot them that have ornamented and do ornament the bench, every chair of science, every pulpit, and are among the choice spirits of the world of art and journalism. Their name is legion. They have given to the pages of the history of the North, South, East, and West so many illustrious names that to mention one would only dim the luster of others. Stars of the first magnitude, they gleam and shine with a brighter light as the years roll on. Music makers and dreamers of dreams whose deathless songs and ditties may be compressed into lyrics such as the Land of Ruins, the Bivouac of the Dead, the Conquered Banner, and the Valley of Silence. They have distinguished themselves in the forum of the law and in legislative halls which have rung with their eloquence for liberty and freedom which constantly must be fought for—

"For freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
Though baffled oft is ever won."

And I glory in their work, that of the Irish immigrant and his descendants. The first man on earth was a workingman, and the last man on this earth will be a workingman. There is a dignity in work, in toil, in labor, and I honor the memories of the Flynns and the Slatterys that rest forever in the graveyards of New York, California, and Louisiana and in the cemeteries that dot the landscape from ocean to ocean. Irish immigrants were real empire builders. They fought the good fight and prepared newer, finer, and more wonderful days for us that followed them. Their youth bore no flowers in its branches. The chaplet of fame was not for their brows. There was no divine poet to sing them into immortality. For them the resounding acclaim of nations were not lifted in chorus. They strove humbly and in lowly station, but they failed not. With bulldog courage they acted a silent and desperate part in forging the chains of our national greatness. They went down unhonored and unsung, but in the fullness of time the men that dug the ditches and drained the swamps, constructed the railroads, and built our cities will be given a chapter in the history of the United States of America which will be written in letters that will never fade. America could not separate her fame from the work of Irishmen upon her shores without diminishing her own glory. Irish blood has become a part of an enriched American blood which means that the Irish spirit is a part of the American spirit. I do not mean that American blood if it had never been mingled with Irish blood would not have flowed on bravely to the sea of a grand destiny, but I hold with all the earnestness of a patriotic conviction that the stream of American life is richer by reason of the Irish blend—rich, warm, and vivid. The love of liberty and freedom characteristic always of all Americans from the very earliest days of colonial life has been strengthened, fortified, glorified, and exalted by the dauntless spirit that sustained the martyrs and heroes of Ireland through almost eight centuries of unparalleled resistance to oppression and tyranny, a resistance that began with the arrival of Strongbow on the shores of Ireland and which continued until almost the present day. It was that heroic spirit which sustained them when the whole heavens were darkened to their suffering eyes, which sent them to the scaffold and gibbet with erect heads, which cheered their lonely hours in prison, and caused their hearts to burst into patriotic song when in exile. They lived, they suffered, and they died for liberty, but they did not die in vain. With Irish blood came a priceless legacy into the life of America, the unconquerable, unfaltering, unsubdueable spirit of martyrs which, like truth though crushed to earth, would rise again. They did not fail.

"For they never fail who die in a great cause;
The block may soak their gore; their heads may sodden in the sun;
Their limbs be stretched to city gates and castle walls,
But still their spirits walk abroad.
Years may elapse and others share as dark a doom;
They but augment the deep and swelling thought that overwhelms all others
And leads the world at last to perfect freedom."

"What were we had Brutus not lived" may well be changed by America to "What were we had not Ireland agonized and suffered a thousand Golgothas." But she has triumphed. Phœnixlike she has repeatedly arisen from the ashes of many a death. And as our blood and our people carried on in the past it is our duty to carry on in the future so that the pillars of freedom will stand and the spirit of liberty hold sway over our minds and our hearts. Dum tacent, clamant—though dead, they still speak to us from their graves. America owes a debt that it gladly acknowledges to the Irish who came here long years ago and now sleep their last sleep in American soil. We, the descendants, full and partial of that blood, Americans in thought and in action, are endeavoring to add to that which was so freely bestowed by the immigrants from Ireland who are dead and gone. They played out their part in the grand drama of life and now are in the bosom of their Father and their God. We of the second, third, fourth, and fifth generations are as fully Americans in our love for the flag of this country and all that it holds as the descendants of any other European stock that may lay the flattering unction to its soul that it has a superior claim.

I am glad as one who was born of Irish parentage next to the Plains of Chalmette, where was fought the Battle of New Orleans, when Jackson and Coffee followed by men of Irish blood and Irish valor, preserved that vast territory west of the Mississippi River as a part of the United States of America, to come to you on a great night like this and say that though ever mindful of the songs and tears of the country that gave our ancestors birth, we are for this our native land first, last, and always, and that inscribed upon our hearts and minds and ever upon our tongues are the words that ought to be upon the walls of every schoolhouse—aye, upon the walls of every church in the Republic:

"Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State,
Sail on, O Union, strong and great,
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate.
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workman wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat
In what a forge and what a heat
Where shaped the anchors of thy hope
Fear not each sudden sound or shock,
'Tis of the waves and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail
And not a rent made by the gale;
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea,
Our hearts, our hopes are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears
Are all with thee, are all with thee."

Not by accident came our country into existence, but by the Almighty was it designed and set among the nations of the earth to play out a grand part in the destiny of mankind and the rise of humanity to nobler heights.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

4 of the act approved June 17, 1910, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," is hereby authorized and directed to purchase or procure and distribute supplies to meet the consolidated requirements of the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government in Washington, D. C., and of the field services of any such department or establishment when requested by the head thereof. That each executive department and independent establishment shall furnish from time to time, when called on to do so, estimates of its requirements for inclusion in purchases which it is proposed to have made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and there shall be reserved from proper appropriations sufficient amounts in each case to reimburse the general supply fund hereinafter created. The General Supply Committee shall charge the proportionate cost of supplies, including breakage, shrinkage, and transportation, exclusive of drayage and handling charges in the District of Columbia, and bill the same to each requisitioning department; and each requisitioning department and independent establishment shall reimburse said general supply fund out of its appropriation upon proper vouchers.

SERVICE IN THE PHILIPPINE CONSTABULARY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9496) to recognize commissioned service in the Philippine Constabulary in determining rights of officers of the Regular Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good bill for Calendar Wednesday. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD explaining this bill, so that on the next Calendar Wednesday my friend from Michigan will understand it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman try again to get a favorable report from the War Department? The gentleman ought to wrestle with them, and not with me.

Mr. McSWAIN. No. I think the committee is fair and will consider propositions on their merits, irrespective of the opinion of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will call the next bill.

LANDS IN BISMARCK, N. DAK.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill S. 2279) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase certain lands in the city of Bismarck, Burleigh County, N. Dak., for Indian school purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from South Dakota give us any information about this land? It occurs to me if it is estimated to be worth $120 an acre we would have rather a high price to pay for it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I refer the gentleman to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HALL]. He is more familiar with it than I am.

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. It is on the river bottom, adjoining the city of Bismarck, and it is valuable.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Is it already under cultivation and improved?

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Can the gentleman give us an assurance that the price proposed to be paid for the land is a fair price in comparison with other adjacent land values?

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to purchase for the Bismarck (N. Dak.) Indian school, from the Dakota Corporation, Bismarck, N. Dak., or its successors in interest, certain adjoining tracts of land within the limits of the city of Bismarck, Burleigh County, N. Dak., described as follows: The southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, containing 40 acres; part of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, containing 23 acres more or less; and part of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, containing 30 acres more or less, all in section 5, township 138 north, range 80 west of the fifth principal meridian, containing 93 acres more or less, subject to survey. The purchase price shall not exceed $120 an acre, and the lands shall be warranted free of all encumbrances.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXECUTION OF WARRANTS IN CRIMINAL CASES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9784) for the issuance and execution of warrants in criminal cases and to authorize bail.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that this bill may go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DESCHUTES PROJECT, IN OREGON

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1186) to provide for the construction of the Deschutes project, in Oregon, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is full authority of law for the Secretary to do everything that this bill proposes, and therefore I object.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, there is not the full authority of law, as it is specified in this bill. This is a Senate bill. All it does in the world is to put it up to the Secretary to determine whether there is a unit of this project feasible, and if he finds it feasible it directs him to send in an estimate to your committee, and then it is for your committee to determine whether he shall go ahead or not.

The importance is this: In 1920 Congress made an appropriation for this project, but certain complications arose regarding the water rights; accordingly the farmers were told that they could let that appropriation lapse without prejudice to their rights; the appropriation lapsed and those farmers have been living upon this dry land ever since that time, expecting to get a Government appropriation. Now, this year, at great expense to themselves—they are all poor people—they sent on to Washington a delegation to appear before the House Irrigation Committee to present their project. This bill does not in any way commit the Federal Government. We can not get this matter before your committee unless we take this procedure.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, the gentleman is not quite accurate there.

Mr. SINNOTT. I mean as to getting an estimate from the Secretary.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will agree with me that the Secretary now has full authority to investigate; he has a fund he can use in investigating this project and its feasibility. The Secretary can now, following such an investigation, recommend an estimate, if he can get by the Budget with it, and he probably could in this case. Then it comes to Congress. The Secretary has full authority now to take care of the needs of the gentleman's constituents and this bill gives no added authority. It does, perhaps, put a little urgency behind the request in that it "directs" him to do a certain thing which he is not now directed to do.

Mr. SINNOTT. What the gentleman says is true, except as to the direction of the Secretary to transmit estimates to Congress; but we are confronted with a situation, not a theory. The Secretary tells us he has adopted a tentative 10-year program.

Mr. CRAMTON. But it is not a program that has any permanency. It is entirely personal to the present Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. It has never been approved by Congress, and the Secretary of the Interior can change it to-morrow. A new Secretary could adopt a new tentative program and the one to which the gentleman refers is simply personal to the present Secretary of the Interior and has no legal status.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is correct, but we are helpless in the face of that attitude on the part of the Secretary. Our only hope is to compel him to do it and to get estimates sent in to your committee, and then your committee will pass upon the ultimate feasibility of the project.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to object.

REGISTRATION OF MAIL MATTER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11279) authorizing the Postmaster General to establish a uniform system of registration of mail matter, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there some gentleman here from the Post Office Committee?

Mr. FOSS. I can speak for the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to call the gentleman's attention to section 2, which provides:

That the provision of section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. L. 158), with respect to the registration of official matter of the executive departments, is hereby amended to read as follows.

The Twenty-third Statutes at Large, page 158, is now section 231 of title 39 of the United States Code. If the gentleman amends that section to read as follows, he will wipe out all the provisions for the mailing of official mail. What the gentleman wants to do is to amend by adding this new proviso in reference to registered mail. Therefore, I have an amendment which reads as follows:

is hereby amended by adding the following paragraph.

Instead of reading:

is hereby amended to read as follows.

Mr. FOSS. That is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That will make it clear; otherwise the gentleman is amending provisions in the section which he does not intend to amend.

Mr. FOSS. I will say that this was prepared by the attorney in the Post Office Department, but I am perfectly willing that the language which the gentleman from New York suggests should be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, and then I have a series of amendments to offer with regard to cross references to the code.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3927 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 209 of the act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1058), be, and the same is hereby, amended further to read as follows:

"Mail matter shall be registered on the application of the party posting the same, and the fees chargeable therefor, in addition to the regular postage, shall be, in all cases, prepaid as follows:

"For registry indemnity not exceeding $50, 15 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $50 and not exceeding $100, 20 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $100 and not exceeding $200, 30 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $200 and not exceeding $300, 40 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $300 and not exceeding $400, 50 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $400 and not exceeding $500, 60 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $500 and not exceeding $600, 70 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $600 and not exceeding $700, 80 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $700 and not exceeding $800, 90 cents.

"For registry indemnity exceeding $800 and not exceeding $1,000, $1.

"All such fees shall be accounted for in such manner as the Postmaster General shall direct."

SEC. 2. That the provision of section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. L. 158), with respect to the registration of official matter of the executive departments, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Provided further, That any official domestic letter or parcel to be registered by any executive department or bureau thereof, or independent Government institution, located at Washington, D. C., or by the Public Printer, which requires registration may be registered without the payment of any registry fee."

SEC. 3. The act of February 27, 1897 (ch. 340, 29 Stat. L. 599), providing limited indemnity for loss of registered mail matter, and the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L. 1174), fixing such indemnity as not exceeding $100, and that portion of the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat. L. 1337), making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department and for other purposes and providing indemnity for the loss of third and fourth class domestic registered matter, are amended to read as follows:

"For the greater security of valuable mail matter the Postmaster General may establish a uniform system of registration, and as a part of such system he may provide rules under which the senders or owners of any registered matter shall be indemnified for loss, rifling, or damage thereof in the mails, the indemnity to be paid out of the postal revenues, but in no case to exceed $1,000 for any one registered piece, or the actual value thereof when that is less than $1,000, and for which no other compensation or reimbursement to the loser has been made, the amount of such indemnity to be fixed by the Postmaster General."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "States," insert "(sec. 384, title 39, U. S. C.)"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in this connection that Forty-third Statutes at Large, page 1058, does not seem to be the correct reference, and I could not get the cross reference in the code and therefore I do not amend that part of it.

I offer another amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, line 1, strike out the parenthesis after the figure 158 and insert "(sec. 321 of title 39 of the U. S. C.)."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, line 3, after the word "amended," strike out the words "to read" and insert "by adding the following paragraph."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, before offering the next amendment I want to ask the gentleman if Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 1337, refers to the present $25 limit on losses at this time.

Mr. FOSS. Fifty dollars.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Third and fourth class mail?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then my reference is correct. I offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 3, line 14, after the figure "1174," insert a comma and the following: "Section 381, title 39, United States Code"; and on page 3, line 16, after the figures "1337," insert a comma and "section 383, title 39, United States Code."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL EXPENSES OF THE GOVERNMENT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6103) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for fiscal year ending June 30, 1884," and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not the proviso too broad? Suppose an employee of the Government invents some improvement which is very valuable, is he compelled to give the Government free use of it?

Mr. VESTAL. If he is employed by the Government and the invention is made while working in his capacity as an agent of the Government. If the head of the bureau certifies this invention will be used by the Government, then the Government, of course, gets it without the payment of any royalty.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The same as a factory rule?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes; but the man who takes out the patent has his commercial rights outside.

Mr. LAGUARDIA Outside of the Government?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the custom is, and without this bill, the Government has the right to the use of the improvement without payment if it is invented in Government time and in Government work.

Mr. VESTAL. That is correct; and then on top of that, may I say that a number of instances have occurred where an employee of the Government, instead of taking out a patent had some one else take out the patent and the Government has been involved in a number of suits. There is now $600,000,000 worth of such claims in the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of chapter 143 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. L. 625), as relates to issue of patents without payment of any fee be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The Commissioner of Patents is authorized to grant, subject to existing law, to any officer, enlisted man, or employee of the Government, except officers and employees of the Patent Office, a patent for any invention of the classes mentioned in section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, without the payment of any fee: Provided, That the applicant in his application shall state that the invention described therein, if patented, may be manufactured and used by or for the Government for governmental purposes without the payment to him of any royalty thereon, which stipulation shall be included in the patent: Provided further, That the head of a department or independent bureau certifies that the invention is used or likely to be used by or for the Government for governmental purposes."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "fee," strike out the balance of line 3 and all of lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 and insert:

"When the head of the department or independent bureau certifies such invention is used or liable to be used in the public interest: Provided, That the applicant in his application shall state that the invention described therein, if patented, may be manufactured and used by or for the Government for governmental purposes without the payment to him of any royalty thereon, which stipulation shall be included in the patent."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLUMBIA BASIN RECLAMATION PROJECT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7029) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, this bill departs from our established reclamation policy and takes the appropriations out of the General Treasury instead of the reclamation fund. It proposes to expend something like $300,000,000. I think it is hardly desirable to consider it on the Consent Calendar, and I object.

CONVEYING A PORTION OF FORT M'ARTHUR TO THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10310) authorizing the Secretary of War to convey a certain portion of the military reservation at Fort McArthur, Calif., to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., for street purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object if the gentlemen will accept an amendment that no part of the appropriation, if granted, shall be used for any other purpose than street purposes and that if it shall cease to be used it shall revert to the United States.

Mr. CRAIL. We will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., by suitable instrument an easement for a right of way over a certain portion of the military reservation at Fort McArthur, Calif., to be designated by the Secretary of War, and subject to such conditions, restrictions, and reservations as the Secretary of War may impose for the protection of the reservation and subject to a perpetual right of way over said land for the uses of any department of the Government of the United States. Said road is described as follows:

Beginning at a point in the southerly line of said lot 13, block 5, distant thereon east 22.04 feet from the southwesterly corner of said lot 13, block 5, said point being also a point in the northerly line of Thirty-sixth Street; thence west along said southerly line of said lot 13, block 5, and along the westerly prolongation thereof, a distance of 78.84 feet to a point; thence northeasterly along a curve concave to the southeast, tangent at its point of beginning to a line bearing north 21° 21′ 30″ east and having a radius of 192.20 feet, a distance of 104.47 feet, measured along the arc of said curve to a point; thence northerly along a curve concave to the west tangent at its point of beginning to said last-mentioned curve at its point of ending and having a radius of 267.87 feet, a distance of 490.90 feet, measured along the arc of said curve to a point; thence northwesterly along a curve concave to the northeast tangent at its point of beginning to said last-mentioned curve at its point of ending and having a radius of 192.20 feet, a distance of 115.10 feet, measured along the arc of said curve to a point in the westerly prolongation of the northerly line of lot 1, block 4, Rena Harbor Heights tract, hereinbefore mentioned, distant thereon west 60.40 feet from the northwesterly corner of said lot 1, block 4; thence east along said last-mentioned westerly prolongation and along said northerly line of lot 1, block 4, said last-mentioned northerly line being also the southerly line of Thirty-fourth Street, a distance of 76.14 feet to a point; thence southeasterly along a curve concave to the northeast, tangent at its point of beginning to a line bearing south 20° 24′ 20″ east and having a radius of 122.20 feet, a distance of 64.88 feet, measured along the arc of said curve to a point; thence southerly along a curve concave to the west tangent at its point of beginning to said last-mentioned curve at its point of ending and having a radius of 300 feet, a distance of 626.51 feet, measured along the arc of said curve to a point; thence southwesterly along a curve concave to the southeast tangent at its point of beginning to said last-mentioned curve at its point of ending and having a radius of 122.20 feet, a distance of 53.07 feet, measured along the arc of said curve to the point of beginning.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, after line 4, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That no part of the appropriation granted and conveyed by the Secretary of War for the purpose aforesaid shall be used for any other than street purposes, and when said property shall cease to be so used it shall revert to the United States of America."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING JOINT RESOLUTION FOR UTILIZATION OF RESOURCES AND INDUSTRIES OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 36) to amend section 3 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, etc.," approved February 8, 1918.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER, Mr. STOBBS, and Mr. PERKINS objected.

FORT WADSWORTH, N. Y.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11762) to authorize an appropriation to complete construction at Fort Wadsworth, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I see that the Military Affairs Committee has reported to the House and the House has passed bills authorizing numerous Army construction projects and fixed the limit of cost. Are we to say that the War Department is privileged to exceed the limitation and then come back to Congress to increase the limitation?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am sure my good friend has not read the reason for this. The original estimate of the House project at Fort Wadsworth contemplated an expenditure of $285,000. It was found when they came to investigate the foundation that a considerable sum would be required owing to the nature of the ground for the necessary piling for foundation, and it is for that purpose that the appropriation is deemed necessary by the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not going to object on this occasion, but what I think the House should emphasize is that when we fix the limitation of cost of a building project the War Department should cut its cloth accordingly and keep within the limit.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I think the gentleman will find that there is a very good reason for this extension.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $40,000 to be expended for the construction, installation, and completion at Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., of barracks and such utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PURCHASE OF LAND AT SELFRIDGE FIELD, MICH.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11808) to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land at Selfridge Field, Mich.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire approximately 1 acre of land at Selfridge Field, Mich., for a railroad right of way; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $1,750 for that purpose.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "acquire," insert "by purchase or condemnation."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASE OF REAL ESTATE IN HAWAII

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11809) to authorize an appropriation to complete the purchase of real estate in Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, the report from the War Department presents an unfortunate situation. I am not sure what rights we have left here. I do know that 8 per cent interest on a judgment is an unreasonable rate of interest to charge to the Government. It may be they can make it stick, but the Supreme Court of the United States in cases arising where we seized land during the war and settled for it afterwards has never allowed over 6 per cent interest. That is what they allowed in the Seaboard Air Line case and in others.

If the gentleman is willing to accept an amendment to make it "not more than" $34,700, which would permit the Committee on Appropriations in considering the appropriation to give some study to the situation as to the 8 per cent interest, I would not object.

Mr. JAMES. I understand the 8 per cent interest was awarded by a jury, but we have no objection to that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I had it down to $30,300, but perhaps my arithmetic is as bad as that of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand it is agreeable to have it amended to "not more than," and that would give the Committee on Appropriations a chance to go into the question of the amount.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman from Michigan is satisfied, I am.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not satisfied, but I am yielding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated $34,700 to complete the purchase of a tract of land known as the Kalena tract, which is embraced within the boundaries of the Schofield Barracks Reservation, Territory of Hawaii.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 4, strike out the word "purchase" and insert the word "acquisition."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 1, at the end of line 3, insert the words "not more than."

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LANDS IN WISCONSIN FOR PARK PURPOSES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9144) to provide for the conveyance of certain lands in the State of Wisconsin for State park purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon payment of $1.25 per acre, to transfer and convey to the State of Wisconsin the following-described tracts of land, to wit: Fractional section 25, township 28 north, range 25 east of the fourth principal meridian, 55.4 acres; fractional section 26 in said township and range, 578.3 acres; fractional section 36 in said township and range 412.4 acres, all in the State of Wisconsin, the same to be held and made available permanently by said State as a State park under such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for use thereof by the public: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter upon and utilize for the purpose of obtaining stone for river and harbor work, and other uses of the department, any area within said park which he may determine to be necessary for such purpose: Provided further, That should the State of Wisconsin fail to keep and hold the said land for park purposes or devote it to any use inconsistent with said purposes, then title to said land shall revert to and be reinstated in the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ABSAROKA AND GALLATIN NATIONAL FORESTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15) authorizing an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stats. L. 655), to make additions to the Absaroka and Gallatin National Forests, and to improve and extend the winter-feed facilities of the elk, antelope, and other game animals of Yellowstone National Park and adjacent land.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice. I will say to the gentleman from Montana that I desire to study the report of the bill and also the hearings on the bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. There are no hearings on the bill.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I desire to study the report and perhaps some other features. I ask that the bill go over until the next calendar day without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CUSTOMS APPEALS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6687) to change the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the committee amendment.

There was no objection and the Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the title of the United States Court of Customs Appeals, created by the act approved August 5, 1909, is hereby changed to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

"SEC. 2. (a) The jurisdiction now vested in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in respect of appeals from the Patent Office in patent and trade-mark cases is vested in the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

"(b) Sections 4911 (44 Stat. 1336), 4912 (sec. 60, title 35, U. S. C.), and 4915 (sec. 63, title 35, U. S. C.) of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and section 9 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes, and to protect the same,' approved February 20, 1905 (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 89), are amended by striking out the words 'Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia' wherever they occur therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals' in each instance.

"(c) Where before the effective date of this act an appeal from the decision of the Patent Office has been filed with the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia—

"(1) If any hearing before said court has been held in the case, or if the case has been submitted for decision, then further proceedings in respect of the case shall be had in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been enacted.

"(2) If no hearing before said court has been held in the case, and the case has not been submitted for decision, then the appeal, together with the original papers, printed records, and record entries duly certified, shall, by appropriate orders duly entered of record, be transferred to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, and further proceedings in respect of the case shall be had in the same manner and with the same effect as if the appeal had been filed in said court.

"(d) Nothing contained in this act shall be construed as affecting in any way the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in equity cases.

"SEC. 3. The opinion of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals in every case on appeal from the decision of the Patent Office shall be rendered in writing, and shall be filed in such case as part of the record thereof, and a certified copy of said opinion shall be sent to the Commissioner of Patents and shall be entered of record in the Patent Office.

"SEC. 4. This act shall take effect 30 days after its enactment."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, does this bill come from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It does.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to be making quite a considerable change. How large a volume of patent business will there be that will probably be transferred to this court?

Mr. HICKEY. There were 148 cases last year.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And there is no question, I suppose, but that the Court of Customs Appeals will have time to give to this work?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They have plenty of time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Were there any hearings on the bill?

Mr. HICKEY. Rather extensive hearings.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was anyone there from the Department of Justice?

Mr. HICKEY. No; but the Patent Office representative was there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Also representatives of the patent bar, and the judge of the Customs Court, and the judge of the district court. The judges were heard informally.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And they all favored the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They all favored the purpose of the bill. These are appeals only from the administrative decisions of the Commissioner of Patents.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO NEW MEXICO

Mr. MORROW rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Mexico rise?

Mr. MORROW. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (Calendar No. 251, H. R. 9207) granting to the State of New Mexico certain lands, for reimbursement of the counties of Grant, Luna, Hidalgo, and Santa Fe, for interest paid on railroad-aid bonds, and for the payment of the principal of railroad-aid bonds issued by the town of Silver City, and to reimburse said town for interest paid on said bonds, and for other purposes, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PACIFIC SOUTHWEST EXPOSITION

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and House Joint Resolution 126 be passed in the form I send it to the Clerk's desk, being the amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means, with the title amended as shown on the last page of the printed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the rules be suspended and the House Joint Resolution 126 passed with the amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 126) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits for display at the Pacific Southwest Exposition to be held in commemoration of the landing of the Spanish padres in the Pacific southwest and the opening of the Long Beach, Calif., world port, and for other purposes

Resolved, etc., That all articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of display at the Pacific Southwest Exposition to be held during the year 1928 for the purpose of commemorating the landing of the Spanish padres in the Pacific southwest and the opening of the Long Beach, Calif., world port, upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted free of the payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exhibition to sell any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and exposure, the duty, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of sale or withdrawal, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal of such articles.

SEC. 2. The heads of the various executive departments and independent establishments of the Government are authorized to collect, prepare, and lend, upon request, to the Pacific Southwest Exposition, articles, specimens, and exhibits which, in their judgment, it may be in the interest of the United States to exhibit at such exposition: Provided, That the furnishing of such articles, specimens, and exhibits shall be without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no demand for a second. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. EVANS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS of California. Mr. Speaker, Long Beach, through the cooperation of her chamber of commerce and other civic organizations, offers to the world during the months of July and August, 1928, the Pacific Southwest Exposition. This pageant of progress, art, and education is primarily in commemoration of the appearance of the Spanish padres in that community in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and in celebration of the opening of the Long Beach world port.

In connection with the announcement of this great public enterprise, a few facts concerning this proud and prosperous city by the sea might be of interest to the Members of the House and to the public generally. Some 30 years ago, on a spot in southern California, where the placid waters of the great Pacific meet the slopes of the coast range, under the balmy rays of a glorious sunshine, this city was founded. It has proven itself not only the magic city of the great Southwest, but can well justify the claim of being one of the most progressive and rapidly growing cities of the entire United States, if enterprise, energy, increase in population, and general governmental and municipal accomplishments are to be determining factors. Leaping into the forefront among the large cities of the Pacific coast, with a population of approximately 150,000, and increasing 100 per cent in less than a decade, she is recognized as the second city of the great Pacific Southwest. Long Beach is first and above all a city of homes, schools, and churches, where you will find a community of permanent, well-built structures of unusual refinement and charm. The semi-tropical climate permits a type of architecture economic in design, yet peculiarly in keeping with the traditions and history of the country. It will probably be conceded that no city in America of the size of Long Beach has a higher standard of citizenship or a more uniformly law-abiding and peace-loving people. While it can be said that her fine homes, churches, and schools are outstanding in their significance, it can as well be said that Long Beach is a city of industrial, commercial, and financial position among the other metropolitan cities of the country. The income from the rich oil fields, which lie in the background, and famous throughout the world, finds its way into the banks and financial institutions of the city.

The shipping and transport business which centers here from a large radius of prosperous and highly developed country makes the new Long Beach Harbor one of the most important on the Pacific coast. As evidence of this prosperous and wholesome condition found in Long Beach, one is reminded of the great business and office buildings which have sprung up there during the past few years—modern and up to date in every detail. Some of the most elegant and well-appointed banking institutions in America can be found in Long Beach. The new Pacific Coast Club, completed within a year and a half at a cost of several million dollars, is a structure of rare elegance, architectural beauty, and refinement. Recently a Cabinet officer, while a guest of the club, pronounced it the most beautiful and adequately designed of any building of its kind in the United States. These are only a few of the many modern public and private structures that have sprung up in this progressive city during the past few years. There are hundreds of others to which reference could be made with equal propriety, but neither time nor space will permit it here.

In addition to the 150,000 people of Long Beach who will actively participate in the exposition which is to be held, the enterprise will have the active interest and support of the great metropolitan area of Los Angeles and adjacent communities with an estimated population of two and a half million people. Within a radius of 50 miles of the proposed exposition there are located some 70 incorporated cities whose people will join the people of Long Beach in bringing about a successful outcome of this project. The manufacturing, community development, oil, marine, aviation, agricultural, and other interests, are cooperating in the movement. During the exposition the great international rudder trophy race will be run at this place. Entries by five nations have already been made for this international sporting event. Many foreign countries tributary to the Pacific and otherwise have signified their intentions of cooperating by sending exhibits, which are to be admitted free of duty under the provisions of this resolution.

Probably the most interesting feature of this great event to the people of Long Beach is that it marks the opening of the Long Beach world port and harbor. There are those who will be surprised to learn that Long Beach has already expended nearly $7,000,000 in the development of this great harbor, which lies at her front gate, and is now taking immediate steps to expend a further sum of approximately $3,000,000 in building docks, moles, breakwaters, and other improvements, making in all an expenditure of $10,000,000 of her own money, without having received from the Government or any other source one dollar in aid.

This nicely typifies the spirit of the forward-looking progressive men and women of Long Beach who have faith in their city, their country, and above all have the courage to dare and to do. This city is going to open the eyes of the country and show the people who will assemble there from all sections and countries the tremendous possibilities of not only Long Beach but the possibilities and promises of the great Southwest.

There is another feature of this enterprise which we feel is of no less interest, and that is that it will commemorate the entry into that section of the Spanish padres in the latter part of the eighteenth century. Those who have visited southern California and are familiar with its history can readily appreciate and understand how intimately and closely is the history of these early pioneers and crusaders connected with the country itself. All the early romance and tradition of this now coveted section is closely woven around and into the work of these men, led by Father Junipero Serra, the founder of the missions. No part of our American history is more colorful than this early period in which there was first introduced into that country Christian civilization.

The missions were constructed a distance of a day's journey apart on foot. As a part of and around them subsequently grew and sprung up the cities and towns of California. Beginning with Mission San Diego a short distance north of the Mexican boundary, they extended along the valleys and fertile spots northward to above Monterey. These edifices supplied all the requirements of that day and time of home, church, school, and fort for the protection from invasion by hostile natives that inhabited the country generally. It was there that science, education, and art were introduced to the Indians. They were taught to cultivate the soil, plant the fields, and produce crops, as well as the various mechanical arts, and in fact all the things incident to Christian and industrial civilization. So it is not difficult for one to understand the fondness of Californians for this traditional and historical period. It is all beautifully, as well as correctly, symbolized in the great mission play produced by a man who is loved by all Californians and by all who know him, a native son, John Stevens McGroarty, the poet and historian of the Green Verdugo Hills, as he is familiarly known.

These are but few of the many interesting and historical events that will be portrayed at the Long Beach Pacific Southwest Exposition, and I take pleasure in extending to my colleagues, the Members of this body, each a personal invitation to visit Long Beach and southern California and attend the exposition.

FORMER CHEYENNE RIVER AND STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATIONS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9860) to amend the act of April 25, 1922, as amended, entitled "An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, N. Dak. and S. Dak.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to refuse relief to these settlers. On the other hand, there is a good deal of force in what the department says. It says:

> Under existing law complete payment is required during the year 1928 on all purchases and practically all homestead entries of Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian lands. The purchasers will have had 8 years within which to complete payment, while some of the homesteaders will have had 18 years, some less than that, according to the date when their entries were made. During all those years the Indians have been deprived of the use of their money, and the burden of taxation has been borne by those entrymen who complied with the original act making the land subject to entry, paid up promptly, and received patents for their homesteads. The injustice of this is apparent. On the other hand, to compel complete payment on all the entries and purchases during the present year will involve a great deal of money and might prove disastrous to the local banks, not only through financing loans but also by the withdrawal of individual deposits. This condition might be avoided by requiring only a portion of the entire amount due to be paid at this time.

The passage of the bill in its present form would work an injustice and it is not believed the extensions of time for payment it proposes to grant are warranted by present conditions.

The gentleman's bill proposes an extension to the year 1931. The department approves an extension to 1930. To my mind an extension to 1930, since it carries with it a freedom from taxation, is hardly a fair proposition. The settlers who paid up and got their patents are to have until 1931, under this bill, the burden of paying taxes that ought to be paid by these lands. They all met the same crop conditions. Still some paid up, and some did not. Those who paid up are to be penalized by being obliged to carry a severe burden of taxation which these others ought to share. I realize the necessity somewhat, but I do not believe we ought to give an extension for as long a period as the committee report recommends.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I want to state with reference to the statement made by the Secretary of the Interior that the department is in error in stating that an injustice has been done the Indians by reason of payments for homesteads and land purchases being deferred. Section 6 of the act of May 29, 1908, provides that when the money is paid in it shall be placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians in what is known as the 3 per cent fund. At no time since this act was passed has this fund been less than $1,000,000. It has been ample for all purposes. No part of the moneys received in payment can be disbursed directly to the Indians under the act.

Mr. CRAMTON. It bears interest?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; at 3 per cent.

Mr. CRAMTON. It can not bear interest until it goes into the Treasury.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The only difference is that the Indians get 5 per cent interest on deferred payments instead of 3 per cent when the money is paid in. They are ahead 2 per cent interest on all deferred payments.

Mr. CRAMTON. That 5 per cent will go to the credit of this Indian fund?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not bear down on this phase of it so much as on the other phase—the fact that these people, who do not pay not only get an extension of time for payment but will be relieved from taxation, and thereby they will impose an unfair burden on the other settlers who have paid.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I admit that this point is well taken, and, in fact, in the early part of the session I refused to introduce a bill providing for further extensions, as I desired to fully inquire into the necessity for such a bill. The conditions in that section, however, have been unfavorable since the war, and farmers have found it difficult and in many cases impossible to meet their obligations. A number of their banks have been closed, and credit is not available to many of the settlers. A great many of the settlers who are taxpayers and who themselves are neither homesteaders nor land purchasers under the act have written and petitioned for the extension provided for in this bill. The board of county commissioners of Dewey County, in which many of these lands are located, have passed resolutions asking that this act be passed. I have a petition, signed by over 150 taxpayers, very few of whom will be benefited by this bill should it become law, asking that this bill be enacted into law. I also have a great many letters from people scattered all over Corson, Dewey, and Ziebach Counties requesting a further extension of time within which to make the remaining payments.

Mr. CRAMTON. What would the gentleman say about the feasibility of an amendment which would provide that, notwithstanding this extension of time and the failure to take patents which would result, the land should be subject to taxation?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Well, I have not given that enough study and thought to be able to express an opinion.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then would it not be well to let the bill go over so the gentleman might make a study of that phase of it?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The only trouble is that these payments will be due before long, and if we are going to get this bill through we must push it along. I may state in this connection that the Senate committee has made a favorable report on a similar bill, with the exact amendment that the committee attached to my bill. Personally I feel the matter is rather urgent, and I hope no objection will be raised to-day to the passage of the bill in the form that it left the Committee on the Public Lands. I do not believe there is going to be very much objection from the people who pay taxes, because under this bill the delinquents will have to commence making payments this year, and within three years all payments will be cleaned up and patents issued. I think the larger good demands a reasonable further extension.

Mr. CRAMTON. The situation is that the bill as introduced provided for a two-year extension; as approved by the department it provided for a three-year extension, and as reported by the committee it provides for a four-year extension.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. But actually only a three-year extension because they have to make their first payments this year.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the effect of it is four years. I do not feel it ought to go further than the department's recommendation.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Then we will run counter to the Senate amendment, which is apt to greatly delay the passage of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not yet gotten to the point where I will accept a proposition just because the Senate has taken action, for, notwithstanding what has been said to-day about the very careful consideration of the entire membership of the committee, I think that is the exception rather than the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I want to say to the gentleman before he insists upon that, that I have gone into this with unusual care with the view of getting all the facts. I simply want to say that I believe the amendment proposed by the committee will be reasonably satisfactory to the people in the area affected who pay the taxes. In this connection I may say to the gentleman that two Indians, representatives from the Standing Rock Indian Reservations, were here recently and raised some objection to the bill, but after it was explained to them they went away thoroughly convinced that it would do them no injustice. I will put in the RECORD the two sections of the statutes which cover this matter.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from South Dakota speaks for the taxpayers there and I will accept his statement, but that is as far as I feel I want to go. If the gentleman could see his way clear to conform to the department's recommendation and strike out three equal annual installments and make it two, and strike out the words "December 1, 1931," I shall not object.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Then you would substitute the amendment suggested by the department, which reads:

Shall be granted an extension of time for payment on one-third the amount, including principal and interest, due and unpaid on his entry or purchase until the 1st day of December, 1928; the remainder to be paid in two equal annual installments falling due on December 1, 1929, and December 1, 1930; all such amounts to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until the payment dates: Provided, That upon failure to make complete payment of any installment the entry shall be canceled and the money paid forfeited.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is it exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, in lieu of the amendment offered by the committee, I would offer the amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, which is found at the end of the report made by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan suggested the question of taxes. I take it the gentleman refers to State taxes?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This land is subject to State taxes at this time?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; not the unpatented lands. They will become subject to taxes only after the date of final payment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then they are not taxing this property at a time when these entrymen are in such distress and when they are asking for an extension of time?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; taxes will not be levied until final payment, when patents will be issued. At that time the lands involved will become subject to the State tax law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. When it is patented and fully paid for.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Following are the sections of the statutes to which I made reference sometime ago. Section 6 of the act of May 29, 1908 (3 Kappler's Laws and Treaties, p. 376), with reference to the Cheyenne River Indians, provides that when the money shall be paid in by the homesteaders and land purchasers it shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians in the 3 per cent fund. This section reads as follows:

[Sec. 6, act of May 29, 1908]

That from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservations aforesaid in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota the sums to which the respective tribes may be entitled, which shall draw interest at 3 per cent per annum; that the moneys derived from the sale of said lands and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, respectively, shall be expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. * * * (3 Kappler's Laws and Treaties, p. 376.)

Section 5 of the act of February 14, 1913 (3 Kappler's Laws and Treaties, p. 557), affects the Standing Rock Indians, and provides as follows:

[Last proviso of sec. 5, act of February 14, 1913]

Provided, That from any moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the Standing Rock Indians derived from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of their portion of the surplus and unallotted lands disposed of under section 6 of the act approved May 29, 1908, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to distribute and pay to each of the Indians belonging to said tribe and entitled thereto a sum not exceeding $40 per capita. (Last proviso, No. 5, act of February 14, 1913; 3, Kappler's Laws and Treaties, p. 557.)

Under this provision a $30 per capita payment was made in 1921 and arrangements are now being made to pay the additional $10 per capita, making the total provided for in the provision. There is ample money in the Treasury to the credit of these Indians for the purpose.

The resolution passed by the Board of County Commissioners of Dewey County, to which I made reference, reads as follows:

OFFICE OF AUDITOR OF DEWEY COUNTY,
Timber Lake, S. Dak., January 12, 1928.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the regular January, 1928, meeting of the Board of County Commissioners of Dewey County, S. Dak., there was brought to the attention of the board (consisting of five members) the fact that under the present acts of Congress relative to payment for lands disposed of on the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations in South and North Dakota, final payments must be made therefor, unless Congress enacts further legislation granting extensions of such payments, many good people will have to let their land go as they can not now meet the final payments.

This board believes it would be for the best interests of homesteaders on such lands and purchasers of such lands and for the best interests of the communities within which such lands are situated that Congress pass an act which shall provide for an extension of such payments for a period of at least three years.

We would respectfully ask that you use your influence to have introduced and passed by Congress an act which will provide for a reasonable extension of such payments.

Respectfully yours,

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
[SEAL] By CAL. RITCHEY, Chairman.
J. F. KNIGHT.
J. E. WIEGAND.
BERT BOWDEN.
J. L. EADS.

The Commercial Club, of Dupree, Ziebach County, S. Dak., also passed the following resolution, which indicates how the business men of that community feel about the proposed extension. This resolution sets out—

DUPREE, S. DAK., February 17, 1928.

The Commercial Club, at Dupree, S. Dak., at its regular meeting passed the following resolution:

"Whereas on January 25, 1928, a bill was introduced in the United States Senate, being Senate bill 2828 (being a companion bill to H. R. 9860, introduced January 23, 1928), the bill, if passed without amendment, would extend the payments on land to any homesteader or purchaser of Government land by his making proper showing that he is unable to pay the full amount due on such land within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations in North and South Dakota.

"That said bill provides for the following extension of time: First, extension to the 1929 anniversary of the date of his entry or contract of purchase; and if at the expiration of the extended period the entryman or purchaser is still unable to make the payment, he may upon the same terms and conditions, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be granted such further extensions of time, not exceeding a period of two years, as the facts warrant; and

"Whereas an amendment to the said bill has been suggested, authorizing the extension for a period of three years, providing that one-third of the remaining debt be paid each year, with interest at 5 per cent, the first of such payments to be made on the 1st day of December 1928, the next due the 1st day of December, 1929, and the last payment due December 1, 1930.

"We, the Dupree Commercial Club of Dupree, S. Dak., with full knowledge of all conditions regarding the aforesaid homestead entries and land purchases and the settlers' ability to pay, do hereby respectfully suggest that the amendment offered be changed to divide up the remaining indebtedness on said lands into five equal payments with interest at 5 per cent, the first of such payments to become due December 1, 1928, the second payment to be due December 1, 1929, the third payment to become due December 1, 1930, the fourth payment to be due December 1, 1931, and the fifth payment to become due December 1, 1932."

That the last suggestion mentioned will be the best solution for all concerned.

DUPREE COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By FRANK E. RILEY, President.
By WALTER R. MENZEL,
Secretary.

The petition referred to sets out the matter in the following words:

ISABEL, S. DAK., January 21, 1928.

Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned petitioners, respectfully request that all payments on land of whatsoever nature located on the Standing Rock and Cheyenne River Indian Reservations upon which there are payments yet due be extended for a period of three years. This to include either lands homesteaded or purchased at the various land sales. In submitting this petition we would respectfully advise that, owing to the general financial depression and far-below-normal crop production of the past few years has made it impossible for farmers and others living in territory described to meet their obligations, and if these payments were forced it would cause many to abandon their lands. Can we not have speedy action in connection herewith?

As stated a moment ago, this petition is signed by over 150 residents, covering a large part of the area involved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing extensions of time for the payment of purchase money due under certain homestead entries and Government-land purchases within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, North Dakota and South Dakota," approved April 25, 1922, be amended so as to read as follows:

"That any homestead entryman or purchaser of Government lands within the former Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations in North Dakota and South Dakota who is unable to make payment of purchase money due under his entry or contract of purchase as required by existing law or regulations, on application duly verified showing that he is unable to make payment as required, shall be granted an extension to the 1929 anniversary of the date of his entry or contract of purchase upon payment of interest in advance at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the amounts due from the maturity thereof to the said anniversary; and if at the expiration of the extended period the entryman or purchaser is still unable to make the payment he may, upon the same terms and conditions, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be granted such further extensions of time, not exceeding a period of two years, as the facts warrant."

With the following committee amendment:

Beginning in line 10, page 2, strike out the remainder of the bill and insert: "shall be granted an extension of time for payment of one-fourth the amount, including principal and interest, due and unpaid on his entry or purchase until the 1st day of December, 1928; the remainder to be paid in three equal annual installments, falling due on December 1, 1929, December 1, 1930, and December 1, 1931; all such amounts to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until the payment dates: Provided, That upon failure to make complete payment of any installment, the entry shall be canceled and the money paid forfeited."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota offers a substitute for the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning in line 10, page 2, strike out the remainder of the bill and insert:

"Shall be granted an extension of time for payment on one-third the amount, including principal and interest, due and unpaid on his entry or purchase until the 1st day of December, 1928; the remainder to be paid in two equal annual installments falling due on December 1, 1929, and December 1, 1930; all such amounts to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until the payment dates: Provided, That upon failure to make complete payment of any installment the entry shall be canceled and the money paid forfeited."

The substitute was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended by the substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA AND COOS BAY GRANT LAND

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10563) extending the provisions of the recreational act of June 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 741), to former Oregon & California Railroad and Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands in the State of Oregon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 14, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 741), entitled "An act to authorize acquisition or use of public lands by States, counties, or municipalities for recreational purposes," are hereby extended to former Oregon & California Railroad grant lands revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 218), and to former Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands reconveyed to the United States under the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. SEC. 2. That all moneys received from or on account of any lands leased or sold hereunder shall be applied in the manner prescribed by the aforesaid acts of June 9, 1916, and February 26, 1919.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAVING LA FAYETTE EXTENSION ROAD

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11723) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the La Fayette Extension Road, commencing at Lee and Gordon's mill, near Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and extending to La Fayette, Ga., constituting an approach road to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill proposes that we shall spend nearly $200,000 on a road approaching a national military park.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will first permit me to make this statement, then I will be pleased to have information.

For some time, surrounding our national parks, which are generally situated in States having a small amount of taxable property and a large amount of property that belongs to the Federal Government which is not subject to taxation, there have been demands for the improvement of roads approaching national parks; and almost invariably we have absolutely refused such appropriations. We have held we could not afford to enter on a policy of building roads approaching national parks. In States like Tennessee and Georgia, where there is a great amount of taxable property surrounding these roads and a great deal of commercial use of the highways, I do not believe we ought to be entering on a policy of spending Federal money exclusively for building these roads.

I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. The trouble about it is we have already entered upon such a policy. Two weeks ago to-day a bill introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS] providing for an appropriation of $20,000 per mile for the paving of a road from St. Elmo, Tenn., to Rossville, Ga., was passed without objection by this House, this amount being a larger appropriation than that authorized under this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to proceed one step further. This is a road owned by the Government of the United States. The Congress on March 3, 1925, or by an act approved on that date, authorized the Secretary of War to return these roads to the States or the subdivisions thereof that might be willing to accept them provided they would agree to maintain them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. TARVER. Pardon me just a moment, I think I can make this clear. Neither the States nor the subdivisions are willing to accept the roads unless the roads are placed in a condition equal to roads forming a part of the same highway lying immediately adjacent to the Government owned and controlled portion. The Secretary of War, in accordance with a policy which, as I understand, is satisfactory to the President and approved by the Bureau of the Budget, desires to return these roads to the State of Georgia or the counties through which the roads run, and to provide this appropriation as a means of inducing the county or the State to accept the return of the roads. It costs, according to a letter which I received this morning, the Government some $6,000 per year to maintain this 12-mile stretch of road, or $500 per mile. It is a part of the Dixie Highway and the expense of maintaining it will be more considerable as the years go by. Therefore, it has been thought by the administration and by the Director of the Budget and by the Secretary of War that this legislation ought to be enacted. I hope the gentleman will not object, in view of the fact he did not object to a similar bill of the gentleman from Tennessee two weeks ago.

Mr. CRAMTON. This shows the bad mistake I made the last time. It is now coming up to haunt me. This also illustrates the undesirability of establishing these bad precedents. They come up afterwards to haunt you. Because we were perhaps a little lenient in one case two weeks ago. in approving an item of $20,000, later on there comes another proposition of $200,000. Let me ask the gentleman where this road is located?

Mr. TARVER. The road is located in the State of Georgia.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is it outside of the military reservation?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; but owned by the Government.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is outside of the military reservation?

Mr. TARVER (continuing). And therefore the Government desires to return it and get rid of it and avoid the expense of maintaining it.

Mr. CRAMTON. In the act that provides for the return of these roads, the Government made no promise that it would put them up to the condition of the Federal-aid roads standard?

Mr. TARVER. In the act providing for the return of these roads the Congress provides that they can not be returned except by the consent of the State or the subdivision thereof, as, of course, they could not even in the absence of such a provision.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are important highways?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. They connect commercial centers and are important tourist lines?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The communities using them will find it sometime very important to them that these roads be improved?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the Federal Government should establish the policy that it ought to establish and draw the line and say these roads are not within the military reservation and we will not any longer maintain them and we will not improve them, it seems to me that sometime the gentleman's constituents will be demanding that these roads be taken over and improved by the State and county.

Mr. TARVER. Let me suggest that the Federal Government accepted by act of Congress the roads in question, and they belong in absolute fee simple to the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States, as was recognized by Congress on March 3, 1925, has not the right to go to the counties in the State and say you must accept the roads unless conditions shall be agreed upon as satisfactory to both parties. The President himself, who has been consulted about the matter, and the Director of the Budget have agreed on this policy.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand the gentleman from Georgia feels that the State of Georgia will do the Federal Government a great favor if it will accept the road, which is not in Federal territory, is not on a Federal reservation—that the State will accept it if we spend $200,000. Has the gentleman any authority to say to the House that the State of Georgia will not come in and say that $200,000 is not enough and that they must have $100,000 bonus in order to induce us to accept the road within their own jurisdiction?

Mr. TARVER. The bill provides that the additional amount necessary to construct the road—twice the amount mentioned in the bill—shall be furnished by either the State or subdivision of the State. This must be a concrete highway, and the cost will be $30,000 a mile, and only $15,000 is provided by the appropriation here.

Mr. CRAMTON. How much Federal-owned land is there in the county where this road is situated?

Mr. TARVER. I do not know how much there is in Walker County, but in an adjoining county one-third of the county is owned by the Federal Government, upon which it pays no taxes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The land is not contiguous to this road?

Mr. TARVER. It is contiguous to the road.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are counties in the West where 89 per cent of the area is Federal-owned land and where we have refused to build Federal roads.

Mr. TARVER. That is a different question. This road is owned by the Federal Government and has been accepted by act of Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the gentleman like to have the bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. TARVER. If the gentleman is going to object to the bill, of course I should prefer to have it go over without prejudice. I think if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] was here in the room he might be able to explain the situation to the satisfaction of his colleague better than I have, he having been charged with the consideration for some time before the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. TARVER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair thinks there is not a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it was my intention to move to adjourn at 5 o'clock anyway, I shall not at this time move a call of the House. Otherwise I should do so.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

SENATE

TUESDAY, March 20, 1928

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who fillest all things with Thy presence, we beseech Thee of Thy great love to keep us near unto Thee this day. Thou hast shown us Thy ways, and we have forsaken Thee; Thou hast brought us to great honor, and we weary of Thy service. Yet spare us, good Lord, from all adversity, and restore unto us the vision lost in paths apart from Thee. Help us to advance the onward march of Thy kingdom of right and justice by the increase of chivalry and the growing reign of law and ordered life. Make us to forsake that love of party which may keep us from loving one another, that coming together in friendship we and all Thy people may find the overpowering love of God, which shall make of us a nation one in mind and heart and will, according to the mighty working whereby Thou art ready and willing to subdue us unto Thyself. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Birmingham News of Sunday, March 11, 1928, relating to Muscle Shoals, together with a news item appearing in the Washington Daily News of Saturday, March 17, 1928, relating to the expedition of legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial and news item are as follows:

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) News, Sunday, March 11, 1928]

AN ARROW AIMED STRAIGHT AT THE SOUTH'S ECONOMIC HEART

Debates in the United States Senate respecting the Muscle Shoals resolution introduced there by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, are not a little interesting. An inveterate opponent of all private bids for the property, Mr. NORRIS is wedded to the idea that Muscle Shoals should be operated by the Government for power or fertilizer purposes. Quite apart from the merits or demerits of his varying proposals at various times, the hour is now come when the underlying and unaltering purpose of Mr. NORRIS—governmental ownership and operation of business—needs to be seriously considered.

When the United States Government erected its nitrate plants, the action was taken as a war measure. Any such experiment of Federal authority engaging in the country's private business would have been unthought of in peace time. In its genesis, the action taken by the Government at Muscle Shoals was justified primarily, if not solely, on the ground that it was militarily necessary. Indeed, it was just as much an act of "military necessity" as Lincoln's proclamation of emancipation was. The Nation's life was at stake, the world's welfare was in the balance. Under such conditions, the law of usage, the wise policy of having the Federal Government keep its hands off the country's private business, was momentarily disregarded. But in no sense was it intended that what took place at Muscle Shoals should serve as a precedent—certainly not in times of peace.

The original intention back of the construction of Wilson Dam was to provide a permanent source of water power. This purpose was perhaps more than duly emphasized when the dam was built. But this feature did not mean that Congress had given its consent for the Government to engage in the operation of these plants in competition with private enterprise. The importance of this point can not be stressed too heavily by persons mindful of the needs of the Southern States in the power-creation and power-distribution field. Though great progress has already been made in the South, this section still lags in hydroelectric facilities. In public education, in health, in highway improvement, in various other phases of development, the South is backward, due to the havoc wrought by the War between the States, its blighting aftermath of reconstruction and Federal legislation hostile to the South's interests. But the South is striding forward. Its progress is due in great, if not sole, measure to the genius and industry of its own people, its unrivaled natural facilities, and its unwaning power of attracting foreign capital seeking investment within its frontiers. It is individual initiative—private enterprise—that is responsible for this progress. It is both these that will insure the South's leadership by means of hydroelectric power unless at this critical juncture in the country's development men of the South now in Congress are beguiled by fanatics or sophists to drift out upon the dead sea of that form of socialism heralded by governmental operation of business that should be controlled and directed either by individuals or by corporations.

It is known that a survey of the Tennessee River has recently been made. This survey was made by Government engineers to determine the water power available on that stream and what would be its cost of development. The estimated cost of this development, as reckoned by the Federal Government's engineers, exceeds $1,000,000,000 and may even reach the two billion mark. This amount will provide water-power plants only. Besides this $2,000,000,000 for water plants only, perhaps another two billion will be required to distribute this power to the consumer. Who is to provide this enormous amount of capital? Is it seriously proposed that the Federal Government is to provide it? If not the Federal Government, are the separate States to provide it? If either or both fail to provide this four billion amount of money, and if private enterprise is forbidden to provide it, what is to become of the progress and prosperity here in the South that private enterprise has already assured and, if permitted to do so, would vastly increase?

Mr. NORRIS is advocating a policy respecting the disposition of Muscle Shoals that would not only strip individuals of their opportunity to practice their ingenuity and their initiative, but would divest the States themselves of sovereign rights that this section's people have always been in the habit of jealously safeguarding. Yet, assuming for the sake of argument, that this mania for centralizing even greater power in the Federal Government is sound and that this doctrine of stripping the States of their sovereign rights is wise and that this passion for dampening individual initiative is defensible, what is likely to take place the moment this whole power business is grabbed by the Government and controlled and directed by bureaucratic despots in and out of Congress? In the light of the last 60 years at Washington, may the South reasonably expect that its needs will be as carefully ministered to by a Federal Congress and by Federal bureaus as those needs would be ministered to by representatives of her own people? In actual practice, would not the South suffer from scant appropriations respecting water-power distribution even as the South has suffered in the making of tariffs and in various other forms of Federal legislation?

It is no secret that the very natural resources of the South, agricultural and industrial, make of this section a shining mark for envious legislators from other sections to shoot at. It is by preferential legislation of this kind that the South's progress has for 60 years been retarded. Now that the winter has passed, and the spring has come, and the voice of the turtle dove, so to speak, is heard in the land, is the South, like the dog in the fable, to drop the mouthful of good, red meat from its jaws and plunge into the water in search merely of that good, red meat's reflection? Is the South to lose the substance that it now has by means of individual and corporate enterprise in a futile pursuit of the shadow known as "governmental ownership, control, and direction"?

At the moment when Mr. NORRIS is seeking to have the Government take over this water-power business, farmers of the West are in revolt against sectional abuses that discriminate against the West in favor of the East in more things than tariff making. In the competition between industrial New England and the industrial South, nothing but governmental favoritism of New England can wrest leadership from the South. In this race for industrial primacy, only governmental manipulation, practiced under Government ownership and control of water power, can arrest this section's steady progress along industrial and manufacturing and agricultural lines.

When this is said, there is no disposition to state that the South is more virtuous at Washington than is any other section. Perhaps self-interest might induce the South to discriminate against other sections in legislation, even as it has been legislated against by other sections. The point made by the Birmingham News is that, in light of known facts, it would be hardly less than suicidal for the South's people or their Representatives in Congress to favor a policy like the Norris plan—a policy that would let slip from the South's own fingers management of the South's own affairs, and lodge with the Federal Government, in which the South has relatively little power, control and direction of this indispensable essential to the South's industrial, agricultural, and commercial prosperity.

The South is tired of this increasing tendency toward concentrating all power in the Federal Government. This Norris resolution respecting Muscle Shoals is an arrow aimed straight at the South's heart. To support it is to aid in devitalizing the South's progress and prosperity. What happened in the lower Mississippi Valley in the recent floods when the Federal Government had ample and shining opportunity to do its plain duty, not only to the South but to the country and to humanity, depressingly attests the fact that the South may not expect just treatment even when its needs are undeniably tragic. In the light of that poignant miscarriage of social and economic justice, what reason has the South to believe that its superior water-power resources would receive fair consideration at the hands of a Federal administration—particularly in case that administration should be of a political party not dominant in the South?

Not in the spirit of sectionalism, but rather in a spirit that refuses to blink facts, the Birmingham News submits this highly serious question to the candid judgment of enlightened minds. If the South is resolved to commit economic hara-kiri, its Representatives in Congress should support the Norris resolution.

LEADERS IN CONGRESS ARE BREAKFASTED BY COOLIDGE—WHITE HOUSE GUESTS INCLUDE CONGRESSMEN WHO HAVE TO DO WITH SPEEDING LEGISLATION

Leaders of Congress who have to do with expediting legislation were breakfast guests of President Coolidge to-day.

They included Republican Floor Leader CURTIS, of the Senate; Democratic Floor Leader ROBINSON; Chairmen JONES and WATSON, of the Senate Commerce and Interstate Commerce Committees; Senators FESS and SHORTRIDGE, administration supporters; and Senator PITTMAN, Democratic power on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Speaker LONGWORTH headed the House group at the breakfast. Others were Representative TILSON, Republican floor leader; Representative GARNER, Democratic floor leader; Chairman MADDEN, of the Appropriations Committee; and Representatives HAWLEY (Republican, Oregon) and CRISP (Democrat, Georgia).

PARTY PURGING IN OIL SCANDAL

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I present an article from the Baltimore Sun of yesterday giving an interview with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] relative to party purging in the oil scandal, which I ask may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be published in the RECORD, as follows:

CAPPER URGES PARTY PURGING IN OIL SCANDAL—KANSAS SENATOR DEMANDS MERCILESS PUBLICITY ON GIFTS TO CAMPAIGNS—LAYS CORRUPTION TRAIL TO SINCLAIR—TEAPOT DOME ROTTENEST INCIDENT IN UNITED STATES HISTORY, HE SAYS IN PHILIPPIC

[Washington bureau of the Sun]

WASHINGTON, March 18.—In a scathing denunciation of the corruption uncovered in the Republican Party in connection with the Teapot Dome scandals, Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, Republican, Kansas, demanded to-night that the party indignantly repudiate "the men who participated in the rape of the Government oil lands."

"Republican leaders must realize that they must face the music or the party will pay the fiddler. The issue can not be evaded. The leaders may condone. The public will not forget," he warned.

REEKING WITH CORRUPTION

Senator CAPPER'S repudiation is not couched mildly, for he uses language fully as strong as that which has come from the Democrats. He does not merely lament the disclosures—the trail, he says, is "slimy, odorous, and reeking with corruption"—but, in effect, he sounds the Democratic slogan, "Turn the rascals out."

FINDS REACTION NOW

While Mr. CAPPER'S statement is directed at those high in the Republican Party who have been implicated in the oil scandals—a rather formidable list by now—he touches also on those who have had knowledge of what was going on, but did not speak out. Concealment of facts, he said, has so impaired public confidence that the reaction is just beginning to be felt.

The Republican party, he believes, will clean house, and when this is done Congress should revise the laws governing campaign funds, so the amounts to be expended in national campaigns shall be limited, he advises.

CORDELL HULL DEMANDS FACTS

At the same time that Senator CAPPER called for the purging of his party leadership Representative HULL, Tennessee, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, asked that President Coolidge demand that "every vestige of the facts relating to these infamous bond transactions shall be dragged out into the open sunlight of day," and he challenged the Republican candidates for the Presidency to assert themselves.

The two deliverances came as the Teapot Dome subcommittee of the Senate was returning to Washington with the announcement that testimony to be given this week in view of a lead obtained in Chicago is expected to "shock the Nation."

CAPPER'S STATEMENT

Senator CAPPER'S statement is as follows:

"For spectacular rottenness I doubt whether we have the equal of Teapot Dome in American history or ever will have.

WANTS "THOROUGH JOB"

"The Republican Party must purge itself from the oil smudge and by forceful action demonstrate that it repudiates all those who had to do with the Teapot Dome lease.

"The job must be thoroughly done. I believe it will be thoroughly done.

"The smudge of oil, being smeared blackly across the pages of history, is repulsive to the citizens of the entire country. The trail is slimy, odorous, reeking with corruption.

LIKENED TO FREEBOOTING

"For 'ways that are dark and tricks that are vain,' for intrigue and plot, for impudent daring, for melodramatic episodes, for duplicity, craft, and cunning—the conspiracy of Teapot Dome is the equal of any of the major crimes carried out by unscrupulous and infamous freebooters in the Middle Ages. It is more medieval than modern.

"As represented by its chief conspirator, Sinclair, Teapot Dome bought a Cabinet officer of the United States with Liberty bonds after he had been bought with a 'black satchel' by another oil conspirator.

"With $260,000 in Liberty bonds paid in 1923 to the former chairman of the Republican National Committee to wipe out a campaign deficit, the implication is plain Sinclair believed this would buy him immunity in his plot to loot the Wyoming naval oil reserves.

EXTENT OF CORRUPTION

"Men who had not given a cent to 'the cause' were induced to exchange their personal checks for packages of the Sinclair bonds and to become dummy contributors to the fund to wipe out the party's campaign deficit.

"This had the effect of reducing a large campaign gift to several smaller amounts, and to that extent concealed the Sinclair transaction.

"But such perfuming of tainted money is worse than futile, and has proved so.

"In a further career 'tainted with fraud and corruption' Teapot Dome spent money liberally to delay justice for years in the courts. It spent more of its money to hire a force of detectives to shadow a jury that was trying its leader, Sinclair, for criminal conspiracy, and, following this, is believed to have broken into offices in Washington at night to make way with or destroy damaging evidence.

WOULD HAVE STRONG LAW

"Our laws governing the use of campaign funds, in practice, are ineffective. They have no teeth. Campaign expenditures should be limited by law. The real source of every contribution should be a matter of public record. Merciless publicity as to the source of campaign funds is as necessary to prevent corrupt elections as a law placing a limit upon the amount of money that can be expended.

"Congress and the States must find more effective means of preventing lavish use of money in elections.

"Teapot Dome and its attendant disgraceful transactions are repugnant to the rank and file of the Republican Party, as to every other decent citizen. These condemn the party leaders who took part, who smeared and besmirched the party itself with oil. They have faith in the future of the party and of our Government.

DEMANDS HONEST LEADERS

"Concealment of facts already has impaired public confidence to an extent that is just beginning to be realized. To regain the confidence of the party, the leadership must free itself from the widening circle of suspicion that this leadership has tolerated too close alliance with oil and other exploiting interests. Those leaders who have their eyes on the money bags, when their thoughts should be of the public welfare, must cease to be represented in the leadership of the party.

"The leadership must be responsive and responsible to the rank and file of the Republican Party, not subservient to selfish business interests seeking special favor from the Government.

"I have every confidence in the patriotism, the loyalty, the honesty, and sound judgment of the Republicans of this country.

"These demand, and will get, honesty, ability, and public conscience in the leadership and management of the Republican Party."

EXPECTS CANDIDATES TO SPEAK

The issue of corruption is put by Mr. HULL squarely up to President Coolidge and all the Republican presidential candidates. Specifically, he calls on Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce; former Gov. Frank O. Lowden, Illinois; and Senator CHARLES CURTIS, Kansas, "who should have spoken out long since, to make their presence both known and felt in this combined movement."

So far these men have declined to comment on the revelations in the oil scandal. President Coolidge has been advised by party leaders to take an open stand for the cleaning of the party.

"The time is long past for paltering, dodging, and pleading stupidity and dense ignorance of facts known to those in high places or obtainable by the slightest diligence for four years," Mr. HULL said. "Party responsibility can not be longer shirked."

HOW HE WOULD REPAY

Mr. HULL did not think it proper that Republicans raise a fund to repay Sinclair, as Senator BORAH is doing, but that the money should be paid "either to those oil companies that were robbed by the Continental Trading Co. or to the Federal Treasury, in part payments of delinquent taxes of the Continental Trading Co." But the more vital question, he said, was whether the Republican National Committee would continue to "cling to or return stolen property it received and appropriated to its own use some four years ago."

"This is not an individual but a strictly party responsibility," he argued, "for the trail of corruption has penetrated to and into the Republican National Committee, which is the very Sanhedrin of the Republican Party. How much longer will this organization stand before the American public as a brazen beneficiary of these corrupt Sinclair bonds?"

CALLS FOR RESIGNATIONS

But declarations from the Coolidge administration and Republican candidates are not in themselves adequate, Mr. HULL insisted, hence:

"Every consideration of morals and patriotism requires that they be supplemented and climaxed and crowned with the resignations of each Republican in high official or political position who by affirmative act or conspiracy of silence or criminal inaction has contributed to the suppression of the awful facts of this unparalleled scandal for four years.

"Separation of these particular individuals from every high position they still occupy in either the Coolidge administration or the national committee is required according to every standard of political and official honor.

DODGED FOR FOUR YEARS

"When a party is in power its administration and its national committee function as one combined agency. Thus closely entertwined and interlocked, they jointly pursue their common purpose of keeping the party in control of the Government. What the dominant leaders of one know those of the other are obliged to know, unless both eyes and ears are shut.

"And yet for four years each has dodged responsibility for notorious conditions of corruption by pleading that neither knew nor had any reason to suspect what the other was doing."

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order, commencing with Calendar No. 355.

The bill (S. 1940) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases was announced as first in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. KING asked that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1266) to create in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor a division of safety was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF WASTE LANDS FOR GRAZING PURPOSES

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, during my absence from the Chamber, being engaged in committee work, the Senate agreed to begin the consideration of the calendar at Order of Business No. 355. Immediately preceding that number on the calendar is a bill introduced by me which when reached on the calendar heretofore I have consented should go over for the purpose of having amendments to it perfected. I ask unanimous consent that that bill, being the bill (S. 1131) to encourage and promote the production of livestock in connection with irrigated lands in the State of Wyoming, may be considered at this time. It is an important bill for the States interested in it, and I hope the Senate may proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to offer certain amendments which I send to the desk.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, how did this bill come before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is on the calendar, and it was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Wyoming certainly does not expect the bill to be passed with five minutes' debate?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why not?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, this measure has been passed over several times at my request in order to allow time to other Senators to confer with their people at home in reference to it. I do not believe there can be any objection to the bill, because other Senators who favor its application to their States have agreed with me as to the amendments which should be adopted to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire that the bill may be read by title. Perhaps I may have another bill in mind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1131) to encourage and promote the production of livestock in connection with irrigated lands in the State of Wyoming. It is proposed to amend the bill so as to include the States of Montana and New Mexico.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I may say to the senior Senator from Utah that the bill was originally made to apply only to Wyoming, but the Senators from Montana [Mr. WALSH and Mr. WHEELER] and the Senators from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON and Mr. CUTTING] have asked that the bill be so changed that it shall also apply to their States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the bill is going to pass, it seems to me it ought to apply to all of the Western States where irrigation projects are located. I do not think it ought to apply merely to one or two States.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, a year ago, when we were considering a leasing bill which was favored by some of the States, Wyoming asked especially to be omitted from the provisions of the bill. As I have stated, I had intended to have this bill apply to my State alone, but Senators from the other States to which I have referred asked to have it apply to their States. I have conferred with Senators from other Western States, and because of the fact that they did not have definite information from their constituents that they would like their States to be included in the bill they have not asked that the measure be amended to embrace their States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will not object to the consideration of the bill. The situation as it affects the bill is this: As I understand, the bill merely authorizes a person who owns land on reclamation projects to take other arid lands that can not be used for any purpose except grazing in an amount which will raise the total amount of his land to 640 acres. It does not apply to any lands that are used for any purpose except grazing, and then to only comparatively small areas of land.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. KING. This is a very important bill, and I think that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] ought to have more than five minutes in which to explain it, because in that event its consideration will probably take very little time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I suggest to my friend, the Senator from Utah, that in all probability the result of an arrangement of that kind will prevent the passage of the bill? Because of the congested condition respecting legislation and the pressure of matters admittedly of more general importance, about the only way in which measures of this character can be considered is in the way this bill is now being considered. I therefore hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I thought the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] might be allowed 10 minutes fully to explain the bill. I shall agree not to take any time at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should not object to that.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] may have 10 minutes in which to explain the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, the report on the bill and its title clearly indicate what the measure is intended to accomplish. It deals not with pasture lands, as has been suggested, but with what are more correctly described as waste or desert lands. It may be recalled that our reclamation law limits the acreage that may be filed upon by a settler to 160 acres or less. The majority of the tracts are from 40 to 80 acres and while such sized units are well adapted to a system of intensive farming under irrigation, they do not afford sufficient acreage for pasturing livestock. Anyone familiar with the facts will understand the vital importance and even necessity of keeping and producing livestock on a farm, for food and dairy purposes, and for the rejuvenation of the soil. On these small irrigated tracts it has been found that at certain seasons of the year there was no place whatsoever for holding and carrying the necessary livestock and this has proved one of the great obstacles to the successful settlement and development of our irrigation projects. It happens that contiguous to the majority of our reclamation projects in the arid land States there are tracts of land, many of them extensive, which, because of their rough topography and desert character can not be applied to any beneficial use save and excepting that of grazing. While it does not produce an excessive amount of forage, the land does produce strong, nutritious forage on which cattle, horses, and sheep may be carried during the summer months. It may be said that the land is of such desolate character that thousands of acres of it would not constitute in itself a satisfactory homestead unit. Under present conditions no matter how closely contiguous, the settlers on these projects are denied the use of this pasture, first because they have no title to it, and under the law they are prohibited from fencing it without some form of title. Furthermore, they would not dare turn their small numbers of cattle, horses, or sheep loose on such public domain because they would scatter to the four winds and some of them would probably never be found again. Under such conditions the only person who can use this unclaimed and unclaimable territory is the flock master or the grazer who has large numbers of stock which can be economically watched and cared for by men hired for that purpose. It happens, therefore, that the man who needs the pasture most and who is greatly handicapped by the lack of it, is unable to use it under any condition, in spite of the fact that the land lies near him and is unfitted for any use except grazing.

The bill provides that the settler on an irrigated tract may apply for and select such acreage of waste land as, taken together with his original unit, shall not exceed 640 acres. On this tract he is required to make final proof without residence within a period of five years' time. In submitting proof he must show good faith in the use of the land, and further that he has expended during the period of five years not less than 50 cents per acre in the development of stock water and in the erection of fences for the purpose of inclosing the land. In order to economize the settler may join with one or even a group of his neighbors both in building fences and providing stock water. Under this arrangement there would be cooperation among a number of the settlers to the extent that they could economize and profitably provide their improvements and even through joint arrangement pasture their stock in common.

In addition to the improvement of the pasture thus provided, the bill serves another purpose, making these lands within a period of five years subject to taxation, even though at a low value per acre. In our Western States, with their limited population and narrow basis of assessed values, this is a very important feature of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KENDRICK. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that this bill will make for large holdings in the hands of the large flock masters; that they will combine together?

Mr. KENDRICK. I am glad the Senator has asked that question. The bill contains a provision that will prevent the settler from alienating the title to the land selected from the original irrigated tract for a period of 20 years' time. It allows the selection to be made at any place within 20 miles of the irrigated holding, subject to the condition that the land selected must be the nearest available land to the original filing.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a further observation along that line?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. Section 6 (a) of the bill also provides—

> That any entryman may lease to another entryman for a period not to exceed one year—

Thus making it impossible for the land to be assigned to anyone except another entryman, and, consequently, it would be impossible for any one company or one individual to acquire a large quantity of the land to the exclusion of others.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I wish to say that the department in its report admits the necessity of some action along this line, but it recommends, in lieu of this character of legislation, a bill that would authorize the department to lease these lands to settlers. We of my State of Wyoming do not believe in a Federal leasing law. We believe these lands should pass to title in tracts of as limited acreage as will insure their economical use and that they should thus become subject to taxation and bear their share of the cost of administering the laws of the State.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if the amendment which has just been suggested adding two more States were adopted, there would be required about a half a dozen other amendments to the bill. I suppose that those amendments are to be presented.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, as already stated, the bill was made to apply solely and entirely to my own State.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that.

Mr. KENDRICK. But in considering the bill in the committee it was suggested that it be amended to include two other States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let me say to the Senator from Wyoming that the Senator from Utah wishes to know whether, if the amendment shall be agreed to, other amendments to make the bill as a whole conform to that amendment will have to be adopted. Of course, they will have to be.

Mr. SMOOT. Other amendments will have to be adopted to make the bill conform to the amendment including the two additional States.

Mr. KENDRICK. The amendments I have presented will meet that situation.

Mr. BRATTON. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that he tender all his amendments together in order that they may be considered by the Senate in a harmonious way.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that at least a half dozen amendments will be required.

Mr. KENDRICK. I offer the necessary amendments, and I ask that they may be read.

Mr. President, it is my conviction that legislation such as is proposed here will provide the best opportunity for the most highly economic use of these arid lands by the men whose needs for such lands are the greatest, and this bill, if enacted into law, will go a long way toward promoting the satisfactory settlement of the irrigation projects of the West.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The committee amendments will be first stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after the word "lands," to strike out "whether survey or unsurveyed"; and in the same line, after the word "within," to strike out "30" and insert "twenty," so as to make the section read:

SECTION 1. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed—

(a) To classify as pasture lands, and to designate as subject to entry under this act, all unreserved and unappropriated public lands within 20 miles of the boundaries of any Federal irrigation project in the State of Wyoming or any irrigation district legally organized under the laws of the State of Wyoming, if such lands do not contain merchantable timber, and if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, such lands (1) are not suitable or potentially suitable for any agricultural purpose other than the grazing of livestock, (2) are impossible of irrigation, either now or at any future time, from any known or available source of water supply, and (3) are not necessary for the development of mineral resources.

(b) To survey, as soon as practicable, all such pasture lands which are unsurveyed at the time of such classification.

(c) To withdraw from entry, except under this act, all the lands so classified and to restore to public entry any of the lands so withdrawn which are not required to carry out the purposes of this act; except that nothing in this act shall be held to defeat any vested right which has attached under any entry or location pending at the time of such withdrawal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 7, after the word "lands," to insert the words "applied for"; in line 8, before the word "miles," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty"; and in line 10, after the word "acres," to insert "and (2) each such entry shall be made on available pasture lands nearest to the lands owned by the person making the application for such entry," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. Any person who owns irrigated lands in a Federal irrigation project in the State of Wyoming or within an irrigation district legally organized under the laws of the State of Wyoming may, if he resides upon such irrigated lands or in the immediate vicinity thereof, make entry upon and receive patent to an amount of pasture lands under this act to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. Such determination shall be based upon the total amount of such lands available for entry in connection with each irrigation project or district and the number of settlers which each irrigation project or district will accommodate, except that (1) no entry shall be made under this act for an amount of pasture lands which, together with the irrigated lands and the lands applied for within 20 miles of the boundaries of the irrigation project or district owned by the person making the application for such entry, will exceed 640 acres, and (2) each such entry shall be made on available pasture lands nearest to the lands owned by the person making the application for such entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4, page 4, line 2, after the word "lands," to insert "thus entered"; and in line 8, after the word "pasture," to insert "upon lands entered under this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. Any entryman of pasture lands under the provisions of this act shall have the right, either alone or in cooperation with other owners of irrigated lands within the irrigation project or district, to construct and maintain fences and inclosures upon such pasture lands thus entered, to drill wells and/or to establish reservoirs thereon for the watering of livestock, and to erect and maintain such buildings thereon as may be necessary for the proper care of such livestock; and, in order to promote the more efficient and economical administration of such lands, two or more entrymen may maintain a community pasture upon lands entered under this act, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time prescribe. A right of way shall be reserved to the United States upon any such pasture lands to the extent that the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary for the establishment and maintenance of roads or passageways for livestock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 4, line 17, after the word "Within," to strike out "ten," and insert "five," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. Within five years from the date of entry of pasture lands under this act, proof shall be submitted by the entryman, or by the person legally in possession of such lands, that there has been expended for permanent improvements the sum of 50 cents for each acre of pasture land so entered and that such lands have been used in good faith for grazing purposes as provided in this act from the date of such entry. Such proof, if found regular and satisfactory, shall entitle the entryman, or the person legally in possession of such lands, to a patent subject to the limitations hereinafter provided. Actual residence upon such pasture lands shall not be required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 6, after the word "shall," to insert "within 20 years from the date of filing the application for entry of such pasture lands"; and, in line 13, after the name "United States," to insert ": Provided, That any entryman may lease to another entryman for a period not to exceed one year"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. (a) Neither the patentee of pasture lands under this act, nor his heirs or assigns, shall, within 20 years from the date of filing the application for entry of such pasture lands, sell or otherwise dispose of such lands separately from the irrigated lands owned by the entryman at the time of his entry under this act. Any such sale or other disposition shall be void and, in the event thereof, such lands with all their appurtenances shall revert to and become the absolute property of the United States: Provided, That any entryman may lease to another entryman for a period not to exceed one year. Each patent issued under this act shall contain an appropriate provision to such effect.

(b) If, between the date of entry and the issuance of patent for such pasture lands, any sale or other disposition of such lands is made, or attempted to be made, separately from the irrigated lands owned by the entryman at the time of his entry under this act, such entry shall be canceled; except that any such entryman may exchange his entry, at any time, for that of another such entryman, on a basis of acre for acre, but otherwise upon such terms and conditions as may be mutually agreed upon if the Secretary of the Interior approves such exchange as being to the mutual advantage and convenience of such entrymen.

(c) Upon a sale or other disposition by an entryman under this act, or by his heirs or assigns, of all or a part of the irrigated lands owned by such entryman at the time of his entry, the person acquiring such irrigated lands, if patent has been issued for such pasture lands, shall be entitled to receive a conveyance of such pasture lands in the same ratio that the irrigated lands so sold or disposed of bears to the total irrigated lands owned by such entryman at the time of his entry. In the case of a partial sale or other disposition of such irrigated lands, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, it shall be the duty of the entryman, his heirs or assigns, to specify the pasture lands to be so conveyed.

(d) If any such sale or other disposition of such irrigated lands is made prior to the submission of proof in respect of such pasture lands, the person acquiring such irrigated lands, without further act or deed, (1) shall succeed to the rights of the entryman, his heirs or assigns, in such pasture lands in the same ratio that the irrigated lands so sold or disposed of bears to the total irrigated lands owned by such entryman at the time of his entry, and (2) may submit proof and receive patent to such pasture lands as if he were the entryman thereof. In the case of a partial sale or other disposition of such irrigated lands, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, it shall be the duty of the entryman, his heirs or assigns, to specify the pasture lands to which such rights shall apply.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 7, line 24, after the word "coal," to insert "oil," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. All entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal, oil, and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, and, so far as practicable, the provisions of section 9 of the stock raising homestead act, approved December 29, 1916, as amended, shall be applicable to all such entries and patents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 8, line 19, after the word "within" to strike out "30" and insert "20," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. (a) The provisions of this act, except sections 1, 9, and 10, shall take effect as to any irrigation project or district upon the completion of the classification of the pasture lands within 20 miles of the boundaries of such irrigation project or district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Wyoming offers the following amendments:

First, on page 1, line 10, after "Wyoming," insert a comma and the words "Montana or New Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, strike out "the State of Wyoming" and insert in lieu thereof "any such State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 20, after "Wyoming," insert a comma and the words "Montana or New Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 22, strike out "the State of Wyoming" and insert in lieu thereof "any such State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 7, strike out beginning with the word "and" down to and including the word "district" in line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 9, after "Wyoming," insert a comma and the words "Montana or New Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 10, strike out "the State of Wyoming" and insert "any such State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 11, strike out "the State of Wyoming" and insert in lieu thereof "any such State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to encourage and promote the production of livestock in connection with irrigated lands in the States of Wyoming, Montana, and New Mexico."

HAWAII NATIONAL PARK

The bill (S. 3023) to revise the boundary of a portion of the Hawaii National Park, on the island of Hawaii, in the Territory of Hawaii, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will withdraw my objection for the purpose of letting the Senator make a statement, but I shall have to insist upon the objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that a duplicate bill was considered in the House yesterday, and at the request of the Delegate from Hawaii it was very considerably amended so as to correct the boundaries, and was put in perfected form; and I should like to have the House bill which came over this morning, H. R. 10418, substituted for this bill. Both bills were originally introduced at the request of the department in order to perfect the titles of the park near the great crater of Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii. The bill as originally presented was imperfect. It has now been perfected in the House, and I think that what the Senate should consider is the perfected bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I discussed this matter at some length with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who is the chairman of the committee reporting the bill, and he requested me to see that it should not be considered until he could be present. I do not know whether or not the amendments adopted in the House meet the objections which the Senator from North Dakota had in mind, but, under the circumstances, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN MONTANA

The bill (H. R. 445) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a cooperative agreement or agreements with the State of Montana and private owners of land within the State of Montana for grazing and range development, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "5 north of ranges," to strike out "45" and insert "49," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enter into a cooperative agreement or agreements with the State of Montana and private owners of such lands in townships 4 north of ranges 50 and 51 east; 5 north of ranges 49, 50, and 51 east; and 6 north of ranges 49, 50, and 51 east, Montana principal meridian, as lie between Mispah and Pumpkin Creeks, in the State of Montana, whereby such lands and lands within the same area belonging to the United States may be jointly leased for a period of not to exceed 10 years to stockmen owning lands within or adjacent to the said area, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and to enter into such an agreement and issue such a lease to a regularly organized association of such stockmen as will fulfill the purposes of this act: Provided, That the lands of the United States within the said area shall be withdrawn from all forms of homestead entry during the period of said lease but shall remain subject to the mineral land laws of the United States: And provided further, That any lease issued under the provisions of this act shall be for grazing and range development purposes only: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cooperate with any department of the Government in carrying out the purposes of this act with a view to securing the fullest possible benefit to the Government and the livestock industry of such studies as may be made of the operation and results of said cooperative agreements and leases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I observe that the unanimous-consent agreement states that the call of the calendar is to be started at No. 355. What became of the bills from 106 up to 355?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They remain in their original status on the calendar. The Chair will say to the Senator that those bills were called up on the last call of the calendar.

Mr. BLEASE. But what was done last night after the end of the discussion on the migratory bird bill? When we quit yesterday afternoon we were talking about the stealing that has been going on and as to who is going to be the next President; and the bill supposedly before the Senate was Order of Business 106, Senate bill 1271, the so-called migratory bird bill. How did we get to Order of Business 355?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because the migratory bird bill having been passed over from time to time on account of the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], when it was reached yesterday on the call of the calendar a motion was made to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BLEASE. I should like to know what becomes of Order of Business 325, Senate bill 1728. What record was made of that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed over. The Chair's recollection is that it was passed over upon the objection of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BLEASE. No, sir; I was not here if it was called yesterday. I want to know what was done with Order of Business 325. I want to know from the RECORD—not from what somebody thinks about it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That bill was not called this morning. It was called yesterday, as I remember, and the Senator from South Carolina objected to its consideration.

Mr. BLEASE. No, sir; it was not reached yesterday, and the RECORD so shows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the 14th of March, according to the Journal, that bill was reached and passed over.

Mr. BLEASE. That is when I objected; and it is still passed over? Is that right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. BLEASE. When we get to it, I want to move to change the title to "a bill to perpetuate Republicans in office."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1956) for the relief of Levi R. Whitted was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2292) providing for the employment of certain civilian assistants in the office of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands and fixing salaries of certain officials was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1831) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to class as secret certain material, apparatus, or equipment for military and naval use, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1838) to amend section 110 of the national defense act by repealing and striking therefrom certain provisions prescribing additional qualifications for National Guard State staff officers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The bill (S. 3092) to enable the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator from Utah withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. KING. I will withhold it; but may I say to the Senator that I am advised that a Senator who is not here desired that it go over in his absence?

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. KING. Oh, yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the first publication of the writings of Washington was made 90 years ago by Jared Sparks, who published an edition of 12 volumes, at that time thought to be complete, but far from complete, as was found when the examination was made. Thirty-eight years ago Worthington Ford undertook to publish a definitive edition in 15 volumes. There are thousands of letters of General Washington that have never seen print, according to the director of the manuscript division of the Library. The regents of the Mount Vernon Association had sought to publish the rest of these letters. They have found, as I have stated, thousands of them that have not yet been published. Guizot published in 1840 an edition in six volumes. I am told that there are no copies available of either the Sparks edition or the Ford edition except on the shelves of some of the larger libraries.

It would appear, from what I have learned, that the writings of Washington are sought more than those of any other American. That is the information I have from the acting chief of the manuscript division of the Library. I am very anxious that a definitive edition of Washington's letters and writings shall be published in accordance with the recent recommendation of the Bicentennial Commission. While I have not any concern about this Washington series, as to which there is some objection, I hope the bicentennial will see the complete publication of these writings of Washington—an effort that has been made before, but never completed—and in due time I want to ask the Senate to give it careful consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MARSHAL OF SUPREME COURT

The bill (H. R. 8725) to amend section 224 of the Judicial Code was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 224 of the Judicial Code be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 224. The marshal is entitled to receive a salary of not to exceed $5,000 per annum, payable monthly, the same to be fixed by the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let the bill go over. However, I should like the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] to explain the bill. What is the object of the bill? Does it increase the salaries of all the marshals and put them in the same category, or what is its object? I have objected to its consideration, but I shall be glad to hear the Senator's explanation.

Mr. BLAINE. For the information of the Senator from Utah and the Senate, I will suggest that the salary first fixed for the marshal——

Mr. KING. Does the bill relate to the marshal of the Supreme Court only?

Mr. BLAINE. The marshal of the Supreme Court only.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "court," to strike out "with the compensation allowed to officers of the House of Representatives of similar grade," so as to read:

He shall attend the court at its sessions; shall serve and execute all process and orders issuing from it, or made by the Chief Justice or an Associate Justice in pursuance of law; and shall take charge of all property of the United States used by the court or its members. With the approval of the Chief Justice he may appoint assistants and messengers to attend the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 759) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in common-law actions was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is reported adversely.

Mr. BAYARD. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the President to ascertain, adjust, and pay certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920, as per a certain contract authorized by the President was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CORN SUGAR

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article relative to corn sugar, which appeared in the New York Journal of Commerce on the 3d day of March.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DOCTOR WILEY OPPOSES SENATOR COPELAND—THE DOCTOR SETS THE SENATOR RIGHT ON SEVERAL POINTS ON CORN SUGAR

Because Doctor Wiley has so forcibly expressed himself in opposition to certain proposed legislation which has recently been introduced in both Houses of Congress, permitting the use of corn sugar as an ingredient in the manufacture of food products without the declaration on the label of its presence, as exclusively reported in the grocery section of the Journal of Commerce of Saturday, February 18, the grocery editor wrote to Doctor Wiley, asking him for his comments on an article entitled "Finds corn sugar cheaper and more wholesome," by Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, published in the grocery annual of the Journal of Commerce of January 28. Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, it will be remembered, was one of the most prominent leaders of the fight for the enactment of the pure food and drugs act more than 20 years ago. President Roosevelt appointed him the first Director of the Bureau of Foods and Drugs, and he is now directing the affairs of the bureau of foods, sanitation, and health of Good Housekeeping Magazine. Senator COPELAND advocates the use of corn sugar as a farm-relief measure and as best for canning purposes. Doctor Wiley's letter follows:

"I have your letter in which you send me a copy of Senator COPELAND'S letter published in the Journal of Commerce Saturday, January 28, 1928, and in which you ask me for some remarks on Senator COPELAND'S letter.

"Senator COPELAND has such an admirable record as an exponent of ethical doctrines relating to our food, and also by reason of his position as a Senator of the United States, as to command attention for all he says on this subject. Since you ask me, however, to make some comments on his letter, I reluctantly consent.

CHEMICAL CRITICISM OF SENATOR

"Senator COPELAND'S statement of the exigencies in farm life are not at all overdrawn, I think. Particularly do I approve of his statement: 'Unless the farmer sells at a profit he can not buy.' When the Senator comes to discuss the sugar question, however, he makes some statements which are subject to chemical criticism. He says, in speaking of sugar: 'In this connection when I speak of sugar I mean cane sugar or beet sugar, both varieties of which are known to the chemist as sucrose.' This is a true statement. Also every consumer in this country who buys and uses sugar agrees with Senator COPELAND'S definition of the term. The following quotation is also quite true: 'This form of sugar is found in trees, roots, and grasses—sugar cane, beets, and maple trees being its chief source.' This also is quite correct.

GRAPE SUGAR IS CANE SUGAR

"When the Senator leaves this part of the theme, in which his position is beyond criticism, he gets into trouble. He seems to forget that cane sugar is the only sugar that exists in plants. It either exists as cane sugar, as it does at first, or if it is found in acidulous plants, such as grapes, citrous fruits, and malic fruits, a part of it may be converted into equal portions of dextrose and levulose. He states that dextrose is commonly called grape sugar, because it is found abundantly in grapes. The grape sugar in grapes is no exception to the rule. It does not mean dextrose, as he says, but it means equal parts of dextrose and levulose derived from cane sugar.

"It is true, as Senator COPELAND says, that dextrose is predigested sugar, and adds:

"'The more we take of digested and converted sugar the better for us. On this account the ideal sweetening product is dextrose.'

"Careful estimates of the relative sweetness of dextrose as a predigested sugar and sucrose show that dextrose is a little less than half as sweet as cane sugar, and for this reason it can not be an 'ideal sweetener.'

DEXTROSE NOT CORN SUGAR

"The Senator also falls into the very common error of calling dextrose corn sugar. Dextrose is not corn sugar. All the sugar in corn of all kinds, and especially sweet corn, is cane sugar pure and simple. Dextrose, erroneously called corn sugar, is, in point of fact, starch sugar. It results from converting starch into dextrose through the influence of heating starch with acid. At the present time the acid employed is generally hydrochloric, the same acid which exists in the human stomach and without which the digestion of protein in the stomach is impossible.

OBJECTS TO SUCH FARM RELIEF

"Senator COPELAND'S plan of securing farm relief by permitting starch sugar made as above described to be added to all food products, except honey, and thus sold to the American consumer under the impression that he is buying sugar is highly objectionable. It might bring some little relief to the corn grower, but it would permit a fraud to be practiced on every consumer in the country. The consumers of sugar are far more numerous than the growers of corn and should not be taxed in this way even for the benefit of the corn grower. If, however, any substantial relief is to come to the corn grower by the Senator's plan it must be at the expense of the maple-sugar industry, the beet-sugar industry, and the cane-sugar industry. This method of taxing Peter to pay Paul is not likely to attract any very considerable farm support.

UNLESS LABELED IT IS MISBRANDED

"Senator COPELAND very truly sees the point when he says:

"'Under these circumstances many of the Federal and State food officers would construe fruit canned with "corn sugar" as being misbranded unless so labeled.'

"This is quite true. For this reason the pending measures in the Senate and the House legalizing the use of so-called 'corn sugar,' without notice to the consumer, in all food products except honey is a direct violation of the existing food law. The claim made that the pending bill is not a repeal of the food law is wholly untenable and indefensible.

"I feel certain that the Senator, when he examines this measure more carefully, will see the point I make.

"I am, yours sincerely,

"H. W. WILEY."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1377) for the relief of Lieut. Robert Stanley Robertson, jr., United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES R. SIES

The bill (S. 151) for the relief of Charles R. Sies was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, this bill for relief was very carefully considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs and the report sets out the reasons why the committee reported the bill favorably. May I invite the attention of the Senator to the paragraph on the first page of the report, the last paragraph on the page, which reads:

Section 25 of the act of March 4, 1925, provides that "Any officer of the regular Navy who has been retired since December 31, 1921, by reason of physical disability which originated in the line of duty at any time between April 6, 1917, and March 3, 1921, inclusive, while holding higher temporary rank, shall be advanced on the retired list to, or shall be placed on the retired list in, such higher grade or rank." While Mr. Sies's physical disability was incurred within the period above described, he was not eligible for the benefits and considerations of the terms of that section as he was retired prior to December 31, 1921—

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt my friend from California? In view of the fact that we passed a retirement bill the other day, I hope he will do me the kindness to let this bill be passed over to see whether this will fit into that provision; and if so, whether there would be a proper integration, or whether it needs additional legislation. I shall be under obligations if he will let it be passed over for the moment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; but for the RECORD, with the permission of the Senate, let me finish that sentence, to show why the committee felt it proper so to report:

i. e., Mr. Sies was retired on December 5, 1921, 26 days prior to the period stated by law, and the bill seeks to grant him the benefits to which he is entitled similar to other officers of the Navy who incurred disability while serving in a higher temporary commission.

In other words, he was retired 26 days prior to a date which would have entitled him to this relief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOSEPH CUNNINGHAM

The bill (S. 2733) to amend the military record of Joseph Cunningham was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, this bill relates to a very aged man. I saw him in Sacramento last year. He must be away up in the eighties. It is a meritorious bill, and it would give him mental relief far more than any monetary award. I hope the bill may pass without further delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah maintain his objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am advised that this is a case where a man deserted. If there is any excuse, if there are any extenuating circumstances, I shall be very glad to hear them.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator will have the goodness to look at the letter written by Mr. Cunningham, found in the report, he will find this:

When I got well I reported to the provost marshal at Raleigh, N. C., and he would not have anything to do with me, so I worked my way up to Columbus, Ohio.

In this case the soldier claims that he did not desert. He is now a very old man, he rendered faithful service to our Government, and I take a personal interest in him, having seen him and talked with him. However, if the Senator wishes to consider the matter further, I can not, of course, object to that.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I notice that the report of The Adjutant General does not give any extenuating circumstances at all. He states:

Upon this presentation of the case the application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge was denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that the soldier did not serve until May 1, 1865; that it does not appear that he was prevented from completing his term of enlistment by reason of a disability incurred in the line of duty, and because the case does not come within any of the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 869), which is the only law in force governing the subject of removal of charges against soldiers of the Civil War.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Having taken up so much time, may I read what the committee says? I read from the report:

In view of the fact that this soldier served until April 12, 1865, a few days prior to May 1, 1865, at which time he would have been eligible for honorable discharge, your committee does not feel that he willfully deserted, and is inclined to believe the statements contained in his affidavit and that the relief requested should be granted.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. How long had this man been in the service?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The report states that he entered in 1863, I believe.

Mr. KING. In December, 1863.

Mr. CARAWAY. And he stayed until the fighting was over?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. He left the colors on April 12, did he not? He was with his command until after the surrender?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Army" and the comma, to strike out the words "their widows, children, and dependent relatives"; and on page 2 to strike out section 2, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Joseph Cunningham shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company F, Forty-third Ohio Infantry, on April 12, 1865; but no pension, pay, nor bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Joseph Cunningham."

FLOOD CONTROL

The bill (S. 3434) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cairo, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RULES IN COMMON-LAW ACTIONS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what became of Calendar No. 457, Senate bill 759, to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in common-law actions?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It went over under objection.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that in connection with that bill a short letter from the American Bar Association be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION,
March 12, 1928.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Washington, D. C.

BILL S. 759—MODERNIZING THE COURTS

MY DEAR SENATOR: Upon the convening of Congress the undersigned committee, acting under the instruction of the American Bar Association, took the liberty of directing your attention to Senate bill No. 759, designed to modernize the detail, practice, and procedure of the courts.

The bill has now been reported. Senator SACKETT, the patron, and Senator DENEEN, who is preparing the report, have kindly informed us that in a short time it will be called up for a vote. Inasmuch as the minority report corrects several vital historic facts upon which the majority depend, a study of it is requested.

Conscious of the highly unsatisfactory condition of the detail mechanical operation of litigation, of which such universal complaint is being made as to impair faith in and respect for the courts, the lawyers surrendered all pride of opinion in the public interest and agreed upon a plan. We are directed to express the hope that this unanimity will appeal to you. Not a change will be required in a statute or law or permanent procedure regulating rights, attachment, evidence, limitations of actions, juries, and the like. The bill affects only the mechanical details of getting into court and the detail conduct of the case thereafter, which will thereafter be regulated by a few simple rules instead of statutes. Members of the Supreme Court so testified before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate February 2, 1924. The bill S. 759 will replace section 914, which supplanted section 17 of the original judiciary act of 1781, which gave absolute rule-making power to the courts. The rule-making power was exercised until 1873, when section 914, the conformity statute, was adopted.

The following organizations of lawyers participated: The American Bar Association; the National Conference of Appellate Judges, known as the judicial section of the American Bar Association; the several State bar associations; the Conference of Delegates from State, city, and county bar associations; the deans of the law schools; the law journals; and the Commercial Law League of America. The plan is approved by the National Civic Federation, the National Credit Men's Association, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and others, and is advocated by a majority of the press. Some of the States are already putting the plan into effect.

The lawyers respectfully ask for your indorsement of their unselfish effort, whatever may be your personal views.

Realizing the pressure upon you, it is requested that no reply be made.

We are, Senator, with great respect,

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS W. SHELTON, Chairman.

FRANCIS J. YOUNG

The bill (S. 2859) for the relief of Francis J. Young was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask if it has been the custom to allow salaries in cases of this kind? It is a bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN].

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, I have not the information which would enable me to answer that question. The gist of the report is contained in the last paragraph, on page 2. Mr. Young was in the Consular Service. I read:

His consular duties and responsibilities had been heavy, embracing as they did the entire period of the war at important posts, and his loss of health and resultant death were due to his service in hostile countries under adverse conditions.

It is recommended by the former Secretary of State that the amount carried in the bill be appropriated for his father, equivalent to a year's salary.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, if that has been the rule; but if we are to compensate the relatives of every person who dies in the Consular Service, I do not see why we should not compensate the estates of persons employed in the service in Alaska or in Mexico, or employed in any other activity of the Government. It is simply a question of policy. I ask that the bill go over until we can look into it.

Mr. DENEEN. Let it go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SECURITY NATIONAL BANK, LAWTON, OKLA.

The bill (S. 50) for the benefit of the Security National Bank, of Lawton, Okla., was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been reported adversely from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KING. I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANDARD OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

The bill (S. 2864) to establish the standard of weights and measures for the following wheat-mill, rye-mill, and corn-mill products, namely, flours, semolina, hominy, grits, and meals, and all commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. I received a letter from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TYSON] this morning saying he has some objection to this measure, and I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION OF ANIMALS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 3, 1891, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Oregon briefly explain how this would change existing law?

Mr. McNARY. A similar joint resolution, I may say to the Senator from Utah, has passed the House. It simply attempts to amend the act of 1891, which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to keep animals safely in transportation. The joint resolution is amended to include not only cattle and horses, but sheep, swine, and mules. It is a humanitarian measure. I ask that the House joint resolution be substituted for the Senate measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, House Joint Resolution 140 will be substituted for the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 140) to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 3, 1891.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the amendments proposed by the committee to Senate Joint Resolution 63 be made to House Joint Resolution 140, now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, after the word "horses" and the comma, to insert the words "mules, asses"; on page 1, line 11, after the word "horses" and the comma, to insert the words "mules, asses"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "horses" and the comma, to insert the words "mules, asses"; on line 8, after the word "horses" and the comma, to insert the words "mules, asses"; and on line 13, after the word "horses" and the comma, to insert the words "mules, asses," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L. 833), be amended by adding, after the word "cattle," as it occurs in lines 4 and 6 of section 1 and in lines 2 and 5 of section 2, a comma followed by the words "horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, or swine," so that said sections as hereby amended shall read as follows:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to examine all vessels which are to carry export cattle, horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, or swine from the ports of the United States to foreign countries, and to prescribe by rules and regulations or orders the accommodations which said vessels shall provide for export cattle, horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, or swine as to space, ventilation, fittings, food and water supply, and such other requirements as he may decide to be necessary for the safe and proper transportation and humane treatment of such animals.

"SEC. 2. That whenever the owner, owners, or master of any vessel carrying export cattle, horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, or swine shall willfully violate or cause or permit to be violated any rule, regulation, or order made pursuant to the foregoing section the vessel in respect of which such violation shall occur may be prohibited from again carrying cattle, horses, mules, asses, sheep, goats, or swine from any port of the United States for such length of time, not exceeding one year, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, and such vessel shall be refused clearance from any port of the United States accordingly."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 63 will be indefinitely postponed.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $517.64, being the amount of vouchers amounting to $404.31, received by her late husband, T. E. Roll, for services rendered the Government as carrier on the star mail route out of Ross, Ohio, and which were uncashed at the time of his death and $113.33 for the two months immediately preceding his death, during which he performed said services for which no vouchers were received by him.

ROADS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

The bill (S. 1145) to authorize appropriations for roads on Indian reservations was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That an appropriation of $250,000 is hereby authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available until expended, for the survey, improvement, construction, and maintenance of Indian reservation roads not eligible to Government aid under the Federal highway act and for which no other appropriation is available, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, possibly I may more succinctly and concisely explain the bill by reading from the report of the honorable Secretary of the Interior addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. I shall not read all of the report, but only the pertinent paragraphs, reading from page 2, beginning near the center of the page:

With the success of the five-year industrial program and the resultant increased acreage and crop production, each year the Indians have a larger surplus, which in many cases under present conditions must be taken to market, if at all, over some of the worst roads in the country, which are, in fact, practically impassable at times.

No one thing will contribute more to the industrial welfare and progress of the Indians than the construction of the improved local roads mentioned herein, the lack of which seriously handicaps them in many ways.

If an appropriation of $250,000 could be secured therefor, to remain available until expended, it would remove this handicap and give substantial impetus to our work among the Indians. The money would be spent only on reservations where the Indians have no available tribal funds that could be used for the purpose.

In other words, our program of road building, as Senators will remember, embraces the expenditure of some $75,000,000. It has proved to be a success, I think, but in many of the Western States there are vast areas of land within Indian reservations. The appropriations we make regularly for roads may not be spent on Indian reservations, referring now to the States of Arizona and New Mexico. I will take Arizona first. Thirty thousand square miles of that State are within reservations of some sort. I think 30,000 square miles alone are in an Indian reservation, and it seems but fair that the Government, whilst appropriating money for the construction of roads for its white population, should consider the justice and the advisability of making appropriations for roads on Indian reservations, where there are no tribal funds and no other appropriation is available. I ask Senators to consider the bill.

The amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause. The original bill, which I introduced, proposed an expenditure of two and a half million dollars, $500,000 to be available for the fiscal year ending in 1928, a million dollars to be available in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and an additional million in the year ending June 30, 1930. But to my great regret and to my most poignant disappointment the department found that an appropriation to exceed the sum of $250,000 would be in conflict with the economy program, but that an appropriation of $250,000 would not be in conflict with the program.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator think that small amount would be of any practical value?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; it would be of great value.

Mr. DILL. I am very much in favor of the Senator's bill, but I think the amount is too small to meet the needs of the situation.

Mr. ASHURST. My disappointment was very great. I had hoped that we might have about half a million dollars a year, but the Secretary of the Interior went as far as he could, I think, under the conditions, and we will be fortunate if we are able to have that much in the future.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill applies to all States having Indian reservations?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes. The State of New Mexico, which is a sister State, and the State of Utah, right north of us, are probably in need of such roads on reservations—I will not say more in need than Arizona, but equally in need.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will not exclude Montana. I had a most earnest appeal a few days ago for relief there.

Mr. ASHURST. This fund, although small, would be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. I would not think of such an ungracious thing as to urge the Secretary to begin with Arizona, and if he should call for my opinion I would say, because I have been over some of her roads, that the State of Montana is in need of such roads. The Senator said he hoped the Senator from the State of Montana will not be overlooked. As long as he and his colleague are here there is no danger of Montana being overlooked.

Mr. FLETCHER. Are there no tribal funds in any of these reservations?

Mr. ASHURST. No. There are many tribes that have funds, but there are many tribes that have no funds. This fund is proposed to be expended upon the reservations of Indians who have no money.

Mr. DILL. The reason why I mentioned the small amount is that bills introduced for the purpose of authorizing the expenditure of funds for roads across Indian reservations where the Indian tribes have no funds have been reported back as in conflict with the President's financial program because of the bill of the Senator from Arizona; that is, they have used the bill of the Senator from Arizona as a reason why they would not favorably report other bills that ordinarily would be favorably reported. That is why I spoke of the small amount covered in the Senator's bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, it would be almost a futile thing, almost nothing but a gesture, to pass this bill and remain silent in the future. I believe we shall be obliged to see to it in the future that an appropriation of this amount, or probably $500,000 annually, shall be made for like purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill to authorize an appropriation for roads on Indian reservations."

ARAPAHOE AND CHEYENNE INDIANS

The bill (S. 3343) for the relief of the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "two years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 667 of volume 44 of the Statutes at Large (44 Stat L. 764) be, and it hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That the time within which suit or suits may be filed under the terms of the act of Congress of June 3, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 738), is hereby extended for the term of one year from the date of the approval of this act for the purpose only of permitting the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Tribes of Indians residing in the States of Wyoming, Montana, and Oklahoma, to file a separate petition or suit in the Court of Claims for the determination of any claim or claims of said tribes of Indians to the whole or any part of the subject matter of any pending suit, or to file other suits hereafter under the terms of said act; and the court is hereby authorized to render final judgment in such suits: Provided, That unless such petition be filed in the suit or suits authorized by said act within the time herein stated all right of intervention by the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Tribes of Indians therein shall be forever barred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BORAH. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I move that the joint resolutiton be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order under the unanimous-consent agreement. On objection the joint resolution goes over.

Mr. HEFLIN. Was there objection to its present consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asked that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I objected to the consideration of it at this time for the reason that manifestly we can not dispose of it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. We are going to discuss it a good deal under the five-minute rule. I will have five minutes on every bill that is called, and I shall talk about this proposition and see if we can not get it considered by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement provided for the consideration of unobjected bills only. Therefore, a motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time is not in order. Objection is made to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was just saying that I have a right to discuss for five minutes any measure that is called, until I decide whether I shall object or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right.

Mr. HEFLIN. Under that provision I can speak for five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Present consideration of the joint resolution has been objected to, and it has gone over, so there is nothing before the Senate at the present time.

Mr. HEFLIN. But there will be something before the Senate in a moment.

DEMAND OF RETURN OF MARINES FROM NICARAGUA

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have on my desk a copy of the Washington Post of last Friday, I believe, stating that a thousand more American marines are going to Nicaragua. I do not know just how many marines or soldiers we have in Nicaragua. We must have some 10,000 or more. We have been in a state of war in Nicaragua for more than a year. I want to remind the Senate and the country that the Constitution has not been changed and that Congress is still charged with responsibility and is the only body that has authority to declare war and to conduct war. If Congress will not appropriate money to buy guns and ammunition and will not furnish the food supplies and uniforms for the soldiers, we can not legally have war. Yet the President of the United States is conducting a war in Nicaragua, and here sits the Congress supinely bowing submissively to this usurpation of the power of Congress.

I wonder if Congress has made up its mind to surrender the right that belongs to it under the Constitution and permit the President to continue these operations in Nicaragua against natives who are fighting each day to preserve the independence of their country free from foreign interference.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DILL. Has the Senator thought of the fact that if we keep on sending marines to Nicaragua we will have as many marines down there by election day as there will be votes at that time?

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. President, this performance in Nicaragua is enough to make our Nation hang its head in shame. It is rumored that the Liberal leaders were brought out; that they were corrupted; that American money from those who are interested in property which they are pillaging and plundering in Nicaragua furnished the money; and that certain leaders of the Liberals sold out and have consented to the arrangement suggested by Diaz, the Roman Catholic imposter and usurper. This Nation is a party to that awful crime. Sandino crying for liberty, begging for the deliverance of his country from the invader, sounds like the cries our fathers made in the days of the Revolution when they were asking that the British forces be withdrawn.

I have here an editorial from some paper entitled "Americans in '76 and Nicaraguans in '28," which reads in part, as follows:

"They will not surrender," said Benjamin Franklin to a member of the House of Commons in the American Revolution, "so long as they have their woods and their liberty."

"I shall never recognize a government imposed by a foreign power," said Sandino, head of the Nicaraguan revolutionists, in answer to Admiral Sellers's inquiry concerning what condition Sandino would accept to lay down his arms.

(At this point Mr. HEFLIN was reminded by the President pro tempore that he had spoken for five minutes on the pending bill.)

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to finish reading what Sandino said. They asked him upon what conditions he would surrender and turn over his government to the invader. Here is his reply:

I demand the immediate withdrawal of the [American] invading troops.

He had just said:

I shall never recognize a government imposed by a foreign power.

That is good American doctrine. That is the doctrine that we have inculcated in our children from Revolutionary days to this good time, and now we are in Nicaragua pursuing a patriot who is fighting for the same principle, and we are asking him upon what terms he will surrender. I wonder if the suggestion is thrown out to him that he might get some coin, too, like those who sold out under the Stimson agreement.

Continuing, this editorial reads:

It was Edmund Burke, in his speech on conciliation of the American Colonies, who quoted with commendation Franklin's words on the floor of the British House of Commons.

What American will now quote with commendation these words of Sandino's on the floor of the American Congress?

Franklin's countrymen were rebelling against the oppression of their mother country.

Sandino's countrymen are rebelling not against their mother country but rather against the authority imposed upon them by a foreign nation. Sandino's men are striving to rescue the sovereignty of Nicaragua from the grip of a foreign power into which that sovereignty has been betrayed by the weakling—the American puppet—Diaz.

If Franklin was justified in predicting that the American colonists would never lay down their arms so long as they had their woods and their liberty, what American nowadays may justly find fault with Sandino and Sandino's men because these Nicaraguan liberals dare to better the instruction provided for them by American revolutionists of 1776?

We are seeking this man out to kill him for fighting for principles that we fought for in 1776. Mr. President, is it going to be the mission of this Government to go into foreign lands and try to crush out the last remnant of liberty-loving patriots? Are we going out to police the nations of the earth? Have we entered upon a road of imperialism? Have we become the collection agents of the bondholders in Wall Street? Are our boys to be sacrificed in battle in Nicaragua for the investments of those men who have gone in there and made them recklessly, amid the hazardous conditions where insurrections and revolutions are springing up all around? Some day the American people are going to send to this body Senators who will take the American viewpoint and seek to preserve this Government and hold it true to its constitutional purpose and limitations.

The day is coming when the people of the Nation, all of them who feel that way, are going to get together behind some candidate for President who is going to put America first and keep uppermost in his mind and heart the welfare of the American citizen and the preservation of American ideals and institutions.

We have a farcical situation suggested in the Washington Post of this morning.

President "Coolidge is going to lead a movement to suppress war," and yet he is carrying on war without authority in a foreign land to-day. A thousand more troops have sailed to Nicaragua in the last two or three days. What do the newspapers tell us? Listen to this headline:

Buzzard wrecks airplane. Two marine aviators killed in——

(At this point Mr. HEFLIN was reminded by the President pro tempore that he had spoken for five minutes on the pending bill.)

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want the Senate and the people who sit in the galleries, who come from the sovereign States of this Union, to know what is going on in Nicaragua—just what is happening to our boys. The statement in this newspaper is:

Buzzard wrecks airplane. Two marine aviators killed.

They left Washington only three weeks ago, but they are dead now. What were they doing? They were not guarding property; they were miles away seeking Sandino in his mountain fastnesses, where he was hiding away from American guns in the hands of American marines. While these aviators were flying low and spying out the woodland hiding places a buzzard flies up and gets tangled in the machine and two brave American boys die in Nicaragua—killed by a buzzard.

O my God, what are we coming to? Have we reached the time when the purse of the millionaire has a stronger hold on this Congress than have the love of liberty, the lives of our boys, and the protection of this Government in its constitutional rights and prerogatives? Are we guarding Congress against these innovations and usurpations by the President of the United States? What are we coming to? A thousand more troops have just sailed, gone to Nicaragua to conduct this awful war in a foreign land. To protect property? No; to hold an election in a foreign land. Rome died on that trail; her armies were scattered around the world fighting battles in foreign countries, and finally, when they returned, the government had died at heart; there was nothing left to fight for. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said, at the Republican National Convention in 1920, they sold the emperorship on the auction block for a million and a half dollars.

Senators, we can not have and hold the love of patriotic, liberty-loving people when they see the machinery of their Government being used by the money bunds of the Nation for such a purpose; we can not hold their respect and their affectionate regard when they see their Government commanding its sons to go out and fight and die in such an inexcusable undertaking as this.

I want the Senate to vote on my resolution; I want a roll call on it. Let the people back home know who here want to continue on this dangerous road of imperialism. Former President Woodrow Wilson did not do it. He would not send the troops into Tampico and Vera Cruz, Mexico, without asking the consent of Congress, and he did ask that consent; but Mr. Coolidge, through our marines, is still in Nicaragua, and he has never yet asked Congress to authorize their employment there, and Congress by official action has never requested him to send them there. I put the responsibility where it belongs—on the Republican side in both branches of Congress. I propose to keep on discussing this question until the people, through their Representatives, shall answer in this body, and perhaps in the other, as to whether or not the President may declare and conduct war without the consent of the Congress of the United States. I protest against the murder of American boys in such an indefensible, unholy, and cruel war.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, in view of the various statements made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] criticizing the foreign policy of the Government, particularly as it relates to the present Nicaraguan situation, I desire to say that I agree with him that the subject should be debated. I have intended discussing the question for some time, but have preferred to follow a Senator who had a different viewpoint from my own. However, in view of the statements of the Senator from Alabama, I wish to give notice to the Senate—because it is obviously impossible satisfactorily to discuss an important matter like this under the five-minute rule and is rather unfair to those who desire to go through the calendar—that immediately after the morning business shall be disposed of to-morrow I desire, and I hope I may be recognized, to speak upon this subject.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I do not wish to be unfair to any Senator who has a particular interest in a bill on the calendar, but I am trying to be fair to the boys who are losing their lives in Nicaragua. I am more for those boys, and I care more for them as a Senator than I do for any of these measures, because I have the authority to vote for war or to vote against it, and I have the authority to summon those boys to the battle field. I want them to know that I am not going to do it unless fundamental principles of government are involved, and the cause is just. Then only will I call them to battle. I wish to be entirely fair to them and to the homes from which they come. I want also to be fair to the Constitution and fair to my sense of duty as a Senator. I owe something to all these. That is why I am protesting against this unholy program in Nicaragua.

Mr. EDGE subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day I made an announcement that I would desire to speak on certain phases of foreign relations to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business. In deference to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], who is intensely interested in the unfinished business and the desire to take a recess in order to proceed with it in the morning hour to-morrow, I wish now to make the further announcement that I shall defer until a later date my observations on the subject referred to.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 10, after the words "any of the," to strike out "five" and insert "four"; and on page 3, line 3, after the word "as," to strike out "may hereafter be provided by legislative act of the State of New Mexico" and insert "are provided in the said act of June 20, 1910," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of New Mexico 400,000 acres of the surveyed nonmineral unappropriated and unreserved public lands of the United States within said State, in trust, for the reimbursement of Grant, Luna, and Hidalgo Counties for interest paid by said counties on the bonds of Grant County, and for the reimbursement of Santa Fe County for interest paid by said county on the bonds of Santa Fe County, all of which said bonds were validated, approved, and confirmed by act of Congress of January 16, 1897 (29 Stat. 487); and also for the payment of the principal of the bonds issued by the town of Silver City and likewise validated by said act of January 16, 1897, and to reimburse said town of Silver City for interest paid by said town on said bonds: Provided, That if there shall remain any of the 400,000 acres of land so granted, or of the proceeds of the sale or lease thereof, or rents, issues, or profits therefrom, after the payment of said items and debt, such remainder of lands and the proceeds of sales thereof shall be added to and become a part of the permanent school fund of said State.

SEC. 2. That the said lands shall be selected in the same manner as provided for the selection of lands granted to the State of New Mexico by an act of the Congress of the United States approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," and such lands shall be leased and sold in such manner and under such limitations and restrictions as are provided in the said act of June 20, 1910.

SEC. 3. Said State of New Mexico through its State board of finance shall determine the interest paid by said counties on said indebtedness, and the manner of liquidating the same, and likewise the amount of the principal due on the bonds issued by the town of Silver City, and the interest paid by said town and the manner of liquidating the same.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is there a favorable report from the department on this bill?

Mr. BRATTON. The department itself did not report either way. It stated the facts surrounding the legislation, and simply concluded with the statement that the Bureau of the Budget had advised that it was in conflict with the President's program of economy.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over to-day.

Mr. BRATTON. Will the Senator withhold his objection until I explain the situation

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the Senator may explain the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. This bill was considered by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and was reported unanimously after thorough consideration. It is to reimburse three counties and the town for moneys paid out on bonds similar to bonds arising in the State of Arizona that were declared to be illegal by the Supreme Court of the United States. Congress granted land to reimburse the holders of the outstanding bonds, but overlooked the sum that had been paid by the counties and the town. This bill is simply to reimburse those counties and the town, with a provision that the balance of the grant, if any, after they have been reimbursed, shall be covered into the common-school fund of the State.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of April 12, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 239–240), entitled "An act to amend section 9 of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat. L. 312), and for putting in force, in reference to suits involving Indian titles, the statutes of limitations of the State of Oklahoma, and providing for the United States to join in certain actions, and for making judgments binding on all parties, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Any one or more of the parties to a suit in the United States courts in the State of Oklahoma or in the State courts of Oklahoma to which a restricted member of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, or the restricted heirs or grantees of such Indians are parties, as plaintiff, defendant, or intervenor, and claiming or entitled to claim title to or an interest in lands allotted to a citizen of the Five Civilized Tribes or the proceeds, issues, rent, and profits derived from the same, may serve written notice of the pendency of such suit upon the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, and the United States may appear in said cause within 40 days thereafter, or within such extended time as the trial court in its discretion may permit, and after such appearance or the expiration of said 40 days, or any extension thereof, the proceedings and judgment in said cause shall bind the United States and the parties thereto to the same extent as though no Indian land or question were involved. Duplicate original of the notice shall be filed with the clerk of the court in which the action is pending and the notice shall be served on the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, or, in case of his absence from his principal office, upon one of his assistants, and shall be served within 10 days after the general appearance in the case of the party who causes the notice to be issued. The notice shall be accompanied by a certified copy of all pleadings on file in the suit at the time of the filing of the duplicate original notice with the clerk and shall be signed by the party to the action or his or her counsel of record and shall be served by the United States marshal and due return of service made thereon, showing date of receipt and service of notice. If notice is not served within the time herein specified, or if return of service thereof be not made within the time allowed by law for the return of service of summons, alias notices may be given until service and return of notice is had, and in no event shall the United States be bound unless written notice is had as herein specified: Provided, That within 40 days after the service of such notice on the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, or within such extended time as the trial court in its discretion may permit, the United States may be, and hereby is, given the right to remove any such suit pending in a State court to the United States district court by filing in such suit in the State court a petition for the removal of such suit into the said United States district court, to be held in the district where such suit is pending, together with the certified copy of the pleadings in such suit served on the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes as hereinbefore provided. It shall then be the duty of the State court to accept such petition and proceed no further in said suit. The said copy shall be entered in the said district court of the United States within 20 days after the filing of the petition for removal, and the defendants and intervenors in said suit shall within 20 days thereafter plead, answer, or demur to the declaration or complaint in said cause, and the cause shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had been originally commenced in said district court; and such court is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit, and its judgment may be reviewed by certiorari, appeal, or writ of error in like manner as if the suit had been originally brought in said district court."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8831) to provide for the collection of fees from royalties on production of minerals from leased Indian lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he regards 3 per cent as a royalty adequate? It seems to me rather insignificant, if I understand the bill, that the Indians should receive but 3 per cent royalty upon the minerals produced.

Mr. SMOOT. This bill was not referred to the department.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is a House bill that passed there with one amendment. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator whether he regards this bill as fair to the Indians. It provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to collect a reasonable fee, not exceeding 3 per cent, from Indian lessors for moneys collected as royalties—

And so forth. I am not quite clear as to the purpose of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. It was considered fair, and the department recommended it, and no objection at all was made to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose this is the charge made for the collection of the royalties.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have found that so many injustices have been done to the Indians that while this may be a very just bill I shall ask that it be temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

A. S. GUFFEY

The bill (H. R. 4203) for the relief of A. S. Guffey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

ARTHUR C. LUEDER

The bill (S. 2706) for the relief of Arthur C. Lueder was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, the House passed a similar bill that came to us yesterday. It is Order of Business No. 582, H. R. 8499. I move that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8499) for the relief of Arthur C. Lueder.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the cause of this misfortune? It does seem to me, on a hasty glance, that there may have been some negligence on the part of the postmaster.

Mr. DENEEN. No; the explanation is made on page 1 of the report.

Counterfeit war-savings stamps to the amount of $50,210 were passed upon the postmaster. They collected back all but $19,468.50. A great many of these counterfeit stamps were passed on the Treasury Department itself. That is the first item.

The second item is on page 2, a $100 money order. A duplicate was out.

The third item was $52.50, arising from the cashing of a check of the Veterans' Bureau in favor of Nannie Thornton Worthy.

The fourth item was embezzlement by a subordinate in a substation, amounting to $853.92.

There was no negligence on the part of the postmaster. It was unavoidable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois wish to propose amendments to the House bill?

Mr. DENEEN. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Illinois proposes the following amendment:

On page 2, line 1, strike out the initials "J. H." and insert "Mrs. J. J."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On the same line it is proposed to strike out the words "and paid."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2706 will be indefinitely postponed.

Bluestein, Savannah, Ga., which sum represents the loss sustained by the said R. Bluestein on the bail bond of Frank Holmes, who was afterwards captured and returned to the United States officers by the said R. Bluestein; record of said estreatment of bond is shown in report of clerk of the United States court, L. M. Erwin, at Macon, Ga., January 20, 1925.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2319) for the relief of John W. Stockett was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, just a moment, please. Who was it that objected?

Mr. SMOOT. I objected.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would the Senator object if he had time to examine the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I want to do.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I explain it to the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather have it go over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 362) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Lloyd Lafot was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

FRANK DIXON

The bill (S. 1848) for the relief of Frank Dixon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 12, after the word "duty," to insert: "Provided, That the said Frank Dixon establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that he was actually dependent upon his son, the said Floyd Dixon, at the time of the latter's death," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frank Dixon, of Dunkirk, Ind., dependent father of Floyd Dixon, late electrician's mate, third class, United States Navy, the sum of $360, as six months' gratuity pay, which amount would have been paid by act of Congress approved June 4, 1920, but for the omission, through ignorance or error, of his son to designate a proper beneficiary before he was killed in the performance of service duty: Provided, That the said Frank Dixon establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that he was actually dependent upon his son, the said Floyd Dixon, at the time of the latter's death.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like a brief explanation of this bill.

Mr. HALE. This is simply a case of a death gratuity going to this man's father, provided dependency is established. It is recommended by the department. No qualified dependent was named.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that usual?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WYMAN HENRY BECKSTEAD

The bill (S. 2008) for the relief of the parents of Wyman Henry Beckstead was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "death," to insert: "Provided, That said patents establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that they were actually dependent upon the said Wyman Henry Beckstead at the time of his death," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Paymaster General of the Navy is authorized and directed to pay, out of funds appropriated for the pay of the Navy, to the parents of Wyman Henry Beckstead, late radio man, second class, United States Navy, an amount equal to six months' pay, at the rate received by said Wyman Henry Beckstead at the time of his death: Provided, That said parents establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that they were actually dependent upon the said Wyman Henry Beckstead at the time of his death.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like a brief explanation of that bill.

Mr. HALE. That is the same as the other one.

Mr. JONES. The same sort of bill?

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator, if death occurs to any person in the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps, is it the rule to pay the dependents?

Mr. HALE. Under the law the dependents are allowed a death gratuity of one-half the annual pay of the man who has died in the line of duty.

Mr. KING. Would that be true of every person in the Army?

Mr. HALE. I am talking about the Navy.

Mr. KING. Would it be true of every person in the Navy—a captain, for instance?

Mr. HALE. Anyone who dies from some accident that occurs or in the line of duty.

Mr. KING. If a captain were to die in the line of duty, or a lieutenant or a private, what would be the obligation under the practice to the family?

Mr. HALE. I think they get the same thing.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is six months' gratuity.

Mr. HALE. Six months' gratuity—six months' pay.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire, then: Suppose some captain or major or general in the Army now, while in the discharge of some duty, should meet with an accident?

Mr. HALE. I think he would get the same amount.

Mr. KING. Or suppose he should become ill. Would payment be made?

Mr. HALE. This is a case of death.

Mr. KING. But, I say, if he should become ill and die, would the Government be responsible?

Mr. HALE. If the illness results from something that occurred in the line of duty.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator must be in error.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CARAWAY subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. There being no objection, the bill was read twice by its title, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill (S. 2905) to authorize the transfer of a portion of the hospital reservation of the United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78, North Little Rock, Ark., to the Big Rock Stone & Material Co., and the transfer of certain land from the Big Rock Stone & Material Co. to the United States, was ordered to a third reading and passed may be reconsidered and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report on this bill may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 2905:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2905) to authorize the transfer of a portion of the hospital reservation of the United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78, North Little Rock, Ark., to the Big Rock Stone & Material Co., and the transfer of certain land from the Big Rock Stone & Material Co. to the United States, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the Senate without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

Following is a letter from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau containing the facts and history of this case. The present bill (S. 2905) is a substitute proposed by the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, to which he refers in the last paragraph of his letter, for a former bill (S. 698) to which his report is directed:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Washington, January 4, 1928.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: I have the honor to refer to your letter of December 12, 1927, transmitting copy of S. 698, a bill to convey to the Big Rock Stone Co. a portion of the hospital reservation of the United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78 (Fort Logan H. Roots), in the State of Arkansas, requesting a report as to the merits thereof.

The bill proposes to authorize the director of this bureau, upon payment by the Big Rock Stone Co. of such sum as he may determine to be reasonable—but not less than $150 per acre—to convey to the Big Rock Stone Co. a part of the hospital reservation at the United States Veterans' Hospital No. 78, North Little Rock, Ark., as described in detail therein. In this connection the attention of the committee is invited to the attached copy of letter, dated February 10, 1927, addressed to the chairman Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, House of Representatives, relative to H. R. 11205, the purpose of which was identical with that of S. 698. It will be noted that I advised the committee that I would agree to the transfer of the 12.24 acres described in the bill to the Big Rock Stone Co., provided that company would agree to abandon its blasting operations on land now owned by it which is situated closer to the hospital buildings than the land which they are now anxious to acquire—the specific territory to be designated by the bureau—and provided further that the purchase price be based upon the amount of rock available for quarrying instead of by an arbitrary price of $150 per acre, as contemplated by the bill. It is estimated that there could be quarried and sold on this land approximately 400,000 tons of rock per acre, a total of 5,000,000 tons for the 12.24-acre plot which the Big Rock Stone Co. wishes to acquire. A reasonable price for this rock was fixed at one-half cent per ton, or a price for the whole plot of $25,000.

Subsequent to the advancement of this proposal by the bureau the Big Rock Stone Co. addressed a letter to me in which they offered to transfer to the bureau two tracts of land containing together approximately 6.82 acres, contiguous to the hospital reservation, in exchange for a 5.5-acre strip of land, specifically described in their letter and within the original 12.24 acres they desired to purchase, and with this exchange enter into an agreement to discontinue all blasting operations on property now owned by them situated considerably nearer to the hospital buildings than the land to be acquired by them from the Government.

There is inclosed photostat of a plat showing the present holdings of the United States and the Big Rock Stone Co., respectively, and the tracts which they propose to exchange. Subsequent to the receipt of this offer from the Big Rock Stone Co., I referred the matter to the Federal Board of Hospitalization for their consideration, and on March 7, 1927, that board recommended that the offer of the Big Rock Stone Co. be accepted, the agreement to discontinue further blasting operations on land nearer to the hospital and the removing of said operations to a point north of the most southerly point of the land to be conveyed to them, which is approximately 50 per cent farther away from the hospital than the territory now being quarried, being a consideration of sufficient value.

I therefore recommend to the committee the advisability of making this exchange of property rather than the outright sale of the land described in S. 698, inasmuch as I believe that this transfer would be much more advantageous to the Government than the mere sale of the 12.24 acres.

There is inclosed for the use of the committee draft of a bill, which, if enacted into law, would authorize the exchange described herein.

A copy of this letter is inclosed for your use.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION

The bill (S. 1297) to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Alice E. Moore was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Alice E. Moore, formerly employed as a dietitian and temporary nurse in the medical department at large, War Department, at

General Hospital No. 6, Fort McPherson, Ga., the provision of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BATTLE OF THE BEAR'S PAW

The bill (S. 1796) for the creation of a national monument in Montana, to be known as Battle of the Bear's Paw, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the Battle of the Bear's Paw, at which Gen. Nelson Miles captured Chief Joseph, an Indian, the northwest quarter of section 12, in township 30 north, of range 19 east, Montana meridian, in Montana, the site of such battle, be and is withdrawn from entry and is hereby set aside as and created a national monument, known and designated as Battle of the Bear's Paw; and citizens or any citizen of Montana may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, by his permission and under his direction, erect thereon a suitable monument, without cost to the United States Government, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, commemorative of such battle.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA

The bill (S. 3500) for the relief of the city of Philadelphia was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the city of Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $535,716.22, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in settlement in full of the claims of the said city against the United States for internal-revenue taxes collected under the act of June 30, 1864, and other acts, on dividends upon railroad stocks and interest upon railroad bonds owned by said city and for other internal-revenue taxes wrongfully collected from the said city.

Mr. KING. I ask for an explanation of that bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, a bill similar to this has passed the Senate twice before, once in the Sixty-eighth and once in the Sixty-ninth Congress. The amount of the claim is based on taxes collected from the city of Philadelphia on dividends on sales of gas supplied by the city of Philadelphia to itself.

The city put in a claim for about $2,000,000, which included the taxes required to be paid on gas furnished to private consumers. The committee disallowed that in the Sixty-eighth Congress and reduced the amount to the figures stated in this bill, $535,000.

The claim is based on two items, as I have said. One is the tax on dividends declared by the Philadelphia Gas Works on stock belonging to the city. The other is the tax on sales of gas made by the city to itself. Those taxes were imposed more than 50 years ago. This amount does not include any interest. The case was tried out by the Court of Claims, and this is the amount adjudicated by that court.

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator state why the House has not passed the bill? I know it passed the Senate twice before.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can not understand, unless it has not been sufficiently pushed in the House. I am hoping that by passing it fairly early in this Congress we can get action in the House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "LARCHGROVE"

The bill (S. 3506) for the relief of the owners of the British steamship Larchgrove was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the British steamship Larchgrove against the United States for damages and loss alleged to have been caused by a collision between the said steamship Larchgrove and the American steamship Hawaiian off Tarifa Point, Spain, on October 27, 1918, may be determined in a suit to be brought by the said owners against the United States in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court in admiralty cases; and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages, without interest, sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability, and with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by the order of the said court, and upon the receipt of such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in the district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the approval of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EAGLE TRANSPORT CO.

The bill (S. 3507) for the relief of the Eagle Transport Co. (Ltd.) and the West of England Steamship Owners' Protection & Indemnity Association (Ltd.) was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the Eagle Transport Co. (Ltd.) and the West of England Steamship Owners' Protection & Indemnity Association (Ltd.) against the United States for damages and loss alleged to have been sustained by them as a result of the collision between the British steamship San Tirso and the U. S. transport Pocahontas, which occurred in Gravesend Bay, N. Y., on or about December 14, 1917, may be determined in a suit to be brought by the said claimants against the United States in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court in admiralty cases, and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages, without interest, sustained by reason of said collision, if any such be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability and with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by the order of the said court and upon the receipt of such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in the district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the approval of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROADS, BRIDGES, AND TRAILS IN ALASKA

The bill (S. 2369) to increase the effectiveness of expenditures for roads, bridges, and trails in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the president of the Board of Road Commissioners for Alaska, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, to prescribe such regulations governing the type of vehicle, weight of load, and speed of travel, as in his best judgment the public necessity may require for the protection of life and property, or properly to safeguard and protect roads, bridges, and related structures constructed or maintained, in whole or in part, from funds appropriated out of money in the Treasury of the United States. Such regulations shall be posted in conspicuous and appropriate places for the information of the public, and every person and every corporation which shall violate such regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof, in any district court of the United States within whose territorial jurisdiction such offense will have been committed, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS IN ALASKA

The bill (S. 2532) to provide for the designation of clerks or employees of the Department of the Interior to serve as registers and receivers in the land offices in Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

NATIONAL ORIGINS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to amend subdivisions (b) and (e) of section 11 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let that go over.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Alabama if he will not withhold his objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I withhold the objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is imperative that we act without delay upon this measure, if we are to act at all. The proclamation of the President must be made by the 1st day of April, if it is to be made at all. It is a fact that it is uncontroverted that the computations that have been made upon the national-origins proposition are uncertain and inaccurate, and those computations have to be gone over again, and must again be checked. The experts who made them desire this year in which to accomplish the job. This simply postpones for one year the national-origins proposition. I trust the Senator from Alabama will not object.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is correct, is it not, that the joint resolution was reported out by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Immigration?

Mr. JOHNSON. It was reported out by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Immigration, and not only that, but the committee is divided upon the policy. It realized, however, the absolute necessity that this should be done, under the circumstances.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend from Alabama that I have heretofore opposed the national-origins provision, but I think this legislation is imperative, because if that is finally to become a law further information must be obtained, and the expert who testified before the committee insisted that additional information was required. This does not change the status; it does not permit any more immigrants to come into the United States. There is no danger in it to those who believe in restricted immigration, and I think the Senator ought to permit it to pass.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Alabama will withdraw his objection, in view of the fact that it is admitted on all hands that the figures upon which this information will be based are in need of revision. Personally, I am opposed to the national-origins clause, but that question is not involved in this situation, as I see it. It is admitted by those who have had charge of making up these figures that they are inaccurate, that they are in need of further revision, and certainly the Senator from Alabama would not want a proclamation to be issued upon figures which the very people who made them up admit are in need of further revision and checking before they are made final.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. I do not think there is any question about my position on immigration. I think everybody pretty well understands that if I had my way every man who was not an American citizen, within the limits allowed by law, would be sent out of this country, and I would not allow any more to come in here for some time to come. That is my position on immigration. But I am a member of the committee, and the chairman has well stated that it is almost impossible to act intelligently on certain bills now before the committee until the department can furnish further information, and that is why the unanimous consent was given to report the chairman's resolution and ask for its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama maintain his objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this in no way changes the immigration law, I shall not insist on my objection at this time. I have worked for 20 years in the two Houses to strengthen the immigration law, to restrict immigration, and I do not want any loopholes made in the law by any separate enactments from time to time. Since I am assured that the committee, composed of Democrats and Republicans and Progressives, all agree that this measure should pass at this time, I will not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subdivisions (b) and (e) of section 11 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, are amended by striking out the figures "1928" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "1929."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The bill (S. 755) providing for the biennial appointment of a board of visitors to inspect and report upon the government and conditions in the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, when this bill was reported from the committee, it should have been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I ask that that order be made at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be entered.

RELIEF OF THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT

The bill (S. 3117) for the relief of the State of Connecticut was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill. It relates to the year 1812.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, this is the same type of relief exactly which has already been given to the State of New York and to the State of Maryland, and by a vote of the Senate a few days ago to the State of North Carolina.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have asked for information in regard to this matter, and I would like to have all these bills go over until I get the information. There are some other measures of the same nature.

Mr. BINGHAM. The only other bill was one relating to North Carolina, which the Senator permitted to pass.

Mr. SMOOT. I was not here, and that is the reason why it passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. It seems to me this is exactly the same kind of relief that was given to three or four other States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah maintain his objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I insist on my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 8126) to repeal the sixty-first proviso of section 6 and the last proviso of section 7 of "An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park in the Territory of Alaska," approved February 26, 1917, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. It relates to the construction of roads in the McKinley National Park in the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. JONES. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that the first part of the measure removes the $10,000 limitation which now runs against the McKinley Park.

Mr. BINGHAM. I was about to explain the object of the removal of that limitation. It is due to the fact that, owing to the peculiar climatic conditions in Alaska, when a road is to be built, it is impossible to build the road within less than three years, because the first year the moss must be removed, the next year the ice under the moss must be given a chance to melt, and the third year we get the road built. That is the reason of the necessity for removing the limitation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With that explanation, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, that has nothing to do with the second section. Will not the Senator explain that?

Mr. BINGHAM. The second section is in order to permit prospectors and miners engaged in prospecting and mining, who need game for their actual necessities when short of food, to kill game or birds in the park. In no case are birds or animals killed in the park to be removed therefrom or sold, nor are they to be killed wantonly. It is only to permit prospectors and miners, when in need of the actual necessities of life, to kill game in the park. It seems to us a very reasonable provision.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But the effect of this is to repeal the law which permits them to kill the animals and birds.

Mr. BINGHAM. This bill was reported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], and in his absence I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there are only two or three more pages of the calendar, and many of the measures are bridge bills, and I ask unanimous consent that we continue for 15 minutes on the calendar, if necessary, to complete consideration of unobjected bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COMMANDER ALBERT CUSHING READ

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) tendering the thanks of Congress to Commander Albert Cushing Read, United States Navy, for his achievement in completing the first trans-Atlantic airplane flight, and providing for his advancement on the list of commanders of the Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress are hereby tendered to Commander Albert Cushing Read, United States Navy, for his success in accomplishing the first trans-Atlantic airplane flight.

SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized to advance Commander Albert Cushing Read, United States Navy, 10 numbers on the list of commanders of the Navy, to rank next after Commander Aubrey Wray Fitch. Said Albert Cushing Read shall be an additional number in the grade of commander, and in any grade to which he may hereafter be promoted.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF WYMAN HENRY BECKSTEAD

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 2008, for the relief of the parents of Wyman Henry Beckstead. This is the death gratuity case which was reached a few moments ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "death," to strike out the period and insert a colon and the words "Provided, That said parents establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that they were actually dependent upon the said Wyman Henry Beckstead at the time of his death," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Paymaster General of the Navy is authorized and directed to pay, out of funds appropriated for the pay of the Navy, to the parents of Wyman Henry Beckstead, late radio man, second class, United States Navy, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by said Wyman Henry Beckstead at the time of his death: Provided, That said parents establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that they were actually dependent upon the said Wyman Henry Beckstead at the time of his death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NINA MACDONALD AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 2336) for the relief of Nina MacDonald, Zenas V. Johnston, Margaret E. Thompson, Arthur L. Beaman, May Fee, Willis E. Young, Daniel E. Turbeville, Clarence C. Spears, and Ina Mae Elkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$166.46" and to insert in lieu thereof "$40.46"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out "$468.46" and insert "$351.35."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no report on the bill in my file. The Senator from New York, who introduced the bill, is absent, and therefore I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ALFRED O. HUESTIS

The bill (S. 1207) for the relief of Alfred O. Huestis was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill was reported adversely, and without objection, it will be indefinitely postponed.

JACOB F. WEBB

The bill (H. R. 5255) for the relief of Jacob F. Webb was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

The bill (H. R. 7944) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to inquire, in view of the fact that we appropriated a short time ago a considerable amount for military construction, what is the necessity for this further appropriation?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. This is to complete the construction already authorized and commenced at Fort Humphreys. In the Sixty-ninth Congress $500,000 was appropriated. The appropriation bill which went to the President last week carried $160,000 more, and this authorization is all that is necessary to complete all of the construction at Fort Humphreys. It will round out and complete the work already begun.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is merely an authorization. The department merely wants to know that the money will be ready when needed.

Mr. SMOOT. This has nothing to do with the $4,000,000 authorized the other day.

BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (H. R. 3049) for the relief of Alexander Ashbaugh was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported adversely, and without objection it will be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (H. R. 4280) to correct the military record of John W. Cleavenger, deceased, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported adversely, and without objection it will be indefinitely postponed.

ST. VINCENT'S ORPHAN ASYLUM

The bill (S. 2511) to change the name of St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum and amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, in the District of Columbia,' approved February 25, 1831," was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress amending the act incorporating St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, approved on the 22d day of June, 1910, be, and it hereby is, amended as follows:

"The name of said corporation shall be St. Vincent's Home and School.

"SEC. 2. The purpose of said corporation shall be to care for and educate orphan, indigent, and other female children under 18 years of age under such rules and regulations as it may adopt.

"SEC. 3. All property now vested in St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum as incorporated as aforesaid is hereby vested in and confirmed to St. Vincent's Home and School as reincorporated by this act. Said corporation shall have power to acquire, hold, and convey such real estate as it may deem proper for its said purposes and to hold such personal property as it may use, or use the income from, for said purposes, and to take and hold real estate and personal property by grant, devise, or bequest: Provided, That any real estate granted or devised to it and not used for its corporate purposes shall be sold and conveyed away within five years after the date of such devise.

"SEC. 4. Cornelius F. Thomas, Michael J. Riordan, Samuel Joseph Henry, Paul E. Johnson, O. H. Perry Johnson, Peter A. Drury, Michael F. Calnan, William P. Normoyle, E. Francis Riggs, Joseph E. Ransdell, B. Francis Saul, James F. Shea, and William H. De Lacy are hereby constituted and confirmed as the said corporation and as trustees to manage the said corporation. When a vacancy occurs in their number they may fill such vacancy, and they may increase or diminish their number from time to time as they may deem expedient. They shall elect a president, a secretary, and a treasurer from their number, adopt a corporate seal, and make all needful by-laws and rules and regulations for the institution to be conducted by said corporation.

"SEC. 5. That the proviso in section 1 of said act of Congress approved on the 22d day of June, 1910, and all parts of said act inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 6. The right is reserved to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3116) providing for half holidays for certain Government employees was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS

The bill (H. R. 232) to amend the act of June 7, 1924, prescribing the persons entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and the method of their admission thereto was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 7, 1924, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The following persons shall be entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and may be admitted thereto upon the order of a member of the Board of Managers, namely: Honorably discharged officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines, including women commissioned or enlisted, and Army and Navy nurses under commission, enlistment, appointment, assignment, or contract since April 21, 1898, who served in the regular, volunteer, or other forces of the United States, or in the Organized Militia or National Guard when called into Federal service, and who are disabled by disease or wounds and who have no adequate means of support, and by reason of such disability are either temporarily or permanently incapacitated from earning a living."

Mr. SMOOT. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The only effect of the bill is to carry out the intention, which the Congress had in its last revision of the law, to take care of nurses of the Civil and Spanish Wars. At present there are about 30 of these old ladies in the home now, and it was believed by everybody that they had a right to be there, but the Comptroller General recently ruled that a strict construction of the law would not permit them to be there.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked for an explanation was because I thought it had reference to certain veterans. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERMANENT CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

The bill (H. R. 6094) to amend section 7 of Public Act No. 45, Sixty-ninth Congress, entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso of section 7 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes" (44 U. S. Stat. 203), approved March 12, 1926, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the State of Louisiana a period of six years for the purpose of exercising the State's option in the purchase of Jackson Barracks.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] may make an explanation of the bill just passed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I shall be glad to do so if it does not encroach upon the rights of the Senator who has charge of the bill. He may wish to explain it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the bill has been passed, but I have no objection to making a brief explanation. It merely extends the time for the National Guard of Louisiana under an agreement to buy this old fort. The Government does not want it and has agreed with the National Guard to sell it to them at a certain price. They have not quite got the money, but will have it within the extended time.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The reason of the committee for authorizing the extension of the time and reporting the bill favorably is that the State of Louisiana at present is under such heavy expense because of the flood that it seemed to justify an exception.

COMMISSIONS FOR BANDMASTERS

The bill (S. 750) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, is amended by adding to the end thereof the following:

"In addition there shall be created a new rank of bandmaster in the United States Army in lieu of the present warrant-officer band leaders, who shall be appointed and commissioned bandmasters by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 6a. Chief bandmaster: A chief bandmaster shall be selected from among experienced Army bandmasters of the service by the Secretary of War, to serve until relieved by the Secretary of War, and shall have the assimilated rank, pay, and allowances of a major, fourth pay period, while so serving. He is charged with the duty for the uniform administration of the Army Music School and all authorized Army bands, and shall advise The Adjutant General on all matters relating to the musical organizations in the Army.

"SEC. 6b. Bandmasters: Bandmasters hereafter commissioned under the above section shall be entitled to the same benefits in respect to pay, allowances, and retirements as are applicable to commissioned officers of the various grades to which they are assimilated with, as follows: Less than 3 years, first pay period, to rank with second lieutenants; 3 to 10 years, second pay period, to rank with first lieutenants; over 10 years, third pay period, to rank with captains. All prior active band-leader service, commissioned and enlisted, shall be credited toward computing the pay period present band leaders shall receive on first appointment. There shall be one bandmaster for each authorized band of the Army, and eight additional bandmasters for duty with the Army Music School as instructors. Appointment as bandmasters shall be made, first, from band leaders now in the service who are found to be physically qualified; second, subject to such examination as the President may prescribe from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians who have had at least 10 years' service in Army bands, with preference to such appointments to qualified graduates of the Army Music School."

SEC. 2. The limitations now prescribed by law upon the number of commissioned officers of the Army, and the number of commissioned officers in the various grades, are hereby increased to, and only to, the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act. The number of warrant officers authorized by law shall be decreased by the number of warrant officers receiving commissions in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of the third month next following its enactment.

SEC. 4. This act may be cited as the "Army bands act."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Connecticut explain the bill briefly?

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill is similar to one in regard to Army bandmasters which passed the Senate at the last session in May, 1926. It does for the bandmasters what the Congress has done for chaplains in the Army. Instead of giving the bandmaster the title of lieutenant or captain, as he has in the military bands in other countries of the world, it gives him the title of bandmaster, but with the rank of first lieutenant or second lieutenant according to the length of time he has been in the service. A very distinguished bandmaster, John Philip Sousa, appeared before the committee and stated to us that in his opinion it was extremely important to increase the morale of the service by permitting bandmasters in the Army to have a commissioned rank. Our attention was brought to the fact that when the Canadian bands came to Washington last summer with other parts of the Canadian forces, the bandmasters were entertained by the bandmasters of the American Army. When they were invited to attend a luncheon at the Army and Navy Club, the Canadian bandmasters, having the rank of commissioned officers, were permitted to go into the club for lunch, but their hosts, the bandmasters of the American Army, had to leave them at the threshold of the club.

The only objections to the bill are the objections that have been made to giving commissions to chaplains of the Army. The committee, having given the matter full consideration and had hearings, has unanimously recommended that the bill should pass.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think the Army and Navy Club should modify its rules in a democratic country like this? I can not understand why a man who is a musician and leads the band, simply because he does not have a rank, may not go in and sit down with the others in that club, whether they be second lieutenants or generals. I think it is not to the credit of any club or of our institutions to permit such discrimination.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. BLEASE. Does the Senator know that there are certain clubs in this city which handle whisky to suit themselves, while others can not even get a look at it?

Mr. KING. That is not germane to the question I was discussing.

Mr. BLEASE. It is the same proposition. It is merely a matter of partiality.

Mr. KING. If the reason suggested by the Senator from Connecticut is the only one that is offered, I am not satisfied with the explanation.

Mr. BINGHAM. I shall be very glad to explain still further. The committee went into the question quite fully, and is of the opinion that one of the difficulties with the music situation in the Army is that we can not get the high standard of musicians to go into the service and be bandmasters because they are never permitted to secure commissions, as they could do in the band of any other army in the world.

Mr. CARAWAY. And that is about the only branch of the service where they can not get a commission, is it not?

Mr. BINGHAM. I believe it is.

Mr. CARAWAY. And it does not cost the Government a cent more?

Mr. BINGHAM. Very little more.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if there are any other organizations in the Army or Navy that are going to come here and ask that they be advanced one grade in this way? My experience in the Senate has been that they start somewhere down the line and get advanced a grade, and then, because they have been advanced one grade, everybody in the line above them in the Army and the Navy have to be advanced one grade, too. That seems to have been the policy.

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill does not do for the bandmasters as much as we have done for chaplains, veterinarians, and dentists.

Mr. SMOOT. But they will be back to get more, and in the meantime if we take the chaplains and others and increase them again as we seem to do at nearly every session of Congress, the bandmasters will be back again in due time and ask to be advanced again.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am not going to object, because the evil has been done and there is apparently no hope of curing it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF AERONAUTICAL EQUIPMENT AND MATERIAL

The bill (S. 2611) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan aeronautical equipment and material for purposes of research and experimentation was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the word "him" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the President"; and in line 6, after the word "available," insert the words "and as are not obtainable as commercial articles in the open market"; and on page 2, line 4, after the word "thereof," to insert the words "in good order," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, under regulations to be prescribed by the President and without cost to the United States, such articles of aeronautical equipment or material as may be available and as are not obtainable as commercial articles in the open market, to American manufacturers or designers of aircraft or others engaged in research work in connection with aeronautics for the purpose of assisting in the development of aeronautics, and the Secretary of War shall require in each case from every manufacturer, institution, or person a bond in the value of the property issued for the care, safe-keeping, and return thereof in good order to the United States when required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 2256) authorizing the President to order Clifton E. High, late first lieutenant, Medical Corps, United States Army, before a retiring board for a hearing of his case, and upon the findings of such board determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his resignation, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported adversely, and without objection it will be indefinitely postponed.

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS, HAWAII

The bill (H. R. 7932) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $65,000, to be expended for the construction and installation at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, of nurses' quarters and utilities and appurtenances thereto.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania why we have these bills for particular stations and buildings when we had a general bill the other day carrying millions of dollars for such purposes? Why was not this included in the general bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It ought to have been included, but it was not sent to us by the War Department in time. The need for this item arises from the fact that while the hospital at Schofield Barracks in Hawaii has been finished, no adequate provision exists within several miles for the housing of the nurses. The bill authorizes $65,000 for the completion of nurses' quarters there at the hospital. It carries no other item.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLIFFORD D. HAM

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 541, the bill (S. 1899) for the relief of Clifford D. Ham, collector general of customs, administrator of Corinto Wharf, Republic of Nicaragua.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$7,715.85" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,300," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $5,300 to Clifford D. Ham, collector general of customs, administrator of Corinto Wharf, Republic of Nicaragua, for damages to the wharf at Corinto, Nicaragua, caused by the U. S. S. Quail.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2823) amending the Statutes of the United States with respect to reissue of defective patents was announced as next in order.

The bill (S. 716) to exempt American Indians born in Canada and American Indians born in Mexico of tribes formerly settled in the United States from the operation of the immigration act of 1924 was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Canada," to strike out the words "or of American Indians born in Mexico of tribes formerly settled in the United States"; and on page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," to add the words "Provided, That this right shall not extend to persons whose membership in Indian tribes or families is created by adoption," so as to make the bill read:

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1271, being what is known as the migratory bird bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. KING. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To make the migratory bird bill the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. DILL. What became of the bill yesterday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to proceed to its consideration died with the adjournment last night. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McNary	Shipstead

Edwards	McMaster	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I do not intend to make a speech at this time against the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Kansas, but I do want to call attention to the fact that this bill, in my judgment, holds within itself the most dangerous proposal to the freedom of the ordinary citizen in enjoying a little sport of any legislation that has ever been before the Senate. It would require, if it became a law, every man who goes out to hunt, regardless of what his real intention may be, to have a license in order to be safe from the Federal game warden taking his gun. It would permit the Federal game wardens not merely to supervise the reserves belonging to the Federal Government, but to go out in any part of any State and interfere with hunters anywhere. In the third place, it would permit the Secretary of Agriculture to make regulations about hunting not only in the Federal game reserves but all over the United States.

I do not believe that the Members of the Senate realize how serious this bill may become if it shall be enacted into law and its provisions shall be carried out as they probably will be carried out. I repeat, I am not going to discuss the bill at length on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, but I do want Senators to realize that, unless the bill shall be amended so that it will be a migratory bird reserve bill and not a Federal license hunting bill, it is a bill that ought to be killed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I presume the Senator from Washington will later discuss the bill, and I, therefore, shall not now ask him the question that I was going to ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory-bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I do not want any misunderstanding about this measure. There have been many reports circulated concerning it which are misleading. First, let it be understood that this bill does not in any way regulate or circumscribe the game limit; that is left just where it has been. There may be room for difference of opinion as to whether or not it should be further reduced; but the point is that the subject is not dealt with in this bill.

I repeat what I said yesterday, that this is primarily a bill to secure bird preserves in order that the migratory birds may have some nesting places. We entered into an agreement with Canada in connection with migratory birds. That country has established some forty-odd bird sanctuaries besides other preserves. Thousands of square miles have gone into those preserves. On the other hand, the situation is most acute in this country.

I wish to say that the Senator from Washington and I have talked over some of the objections which he has raised, and in order to clear up any misunderstanding I am perfectly willing to agree to an amendment as to one matter. After all, there is no important difference between us. The question is, Shall the law be better enforced than it is now or shall it not be? That is one question. Another one is, Shall we establish bird preserves; and if so, where will we get the money? The bill proposes to get it from Federal licenses. If I knew of any other way to get it it would suit me better.

The Senator complains of provisions under which regulations may be prescribed by the Department of Agriculture. He and I in the past have supported bills carrying the same kind of power as to the promulgation of regulations.

Mr. DILL. Can the Senator refer to any law under which the Secretary of Agriculture or any other Secretary has a right to make regulations affecting the entire United States under which men may be arrested and fined and jailed without their knowing anything about those regulations?

Mr. NORBECK. There have been other bills here relating to bird preserves that have carried the same right of regulation.

Mr. DILL. But this bill refers to the territory outside of the preserves as well as in them.

Mr. NORBECK. Let me ask, if that is the Senator's objection, suppose we change that provison, will the Senator then agree to suport the bill?

Mr. DILL. Oh, that is only one of my objections.

Mr. NORBECK. Oh, yes.

Mr. DILL. If this bill shall be properly amended, I will support it.

Mr. NORBECK. We can understand each other.

Mr. DILL. The Senator knows that I am in favor of migratory bird preserves. The only reason the Senator continually talks about migratory bird preserves is because he knows that is popular; but when it comes to talking about objections to this bill, the Senator wants to waive them aside. If the objectionable provisions shall be taken out of the bill, I will be glad to vote for it.

Mr. NORBECK. I am asking the Senator whether, if particular objections are removed, the Senator's support of the bill will be enlisted?

Mr. DILL. My first objection to this bill is that it requires a Federal license for hunters outside the preserves.

Mr. NORBECK. That is merely to provide the money, and unless we can get the money to administer the bill we had just as well strike out its enacting clause.

Mr. DILL. I believe that these preserves can be provided for out of the Treasury of the United States just as the bill which was passed in relation to a bird preserve in the State of Utah provided.

Mr. NORBECK. It passed the Senate twice, but never got through the House.

Mr. DILL. There is no assurance that this bill will get through the House, either.

Mr. NORBECK. This bill passed the House once at a previous session.

Mr. DILL. It passed the House once before, but then it was not so objectionable as it is now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Washington to say that under this bill the Secretary of Agriculture is given the power to make rules and regulations, the violation of which will constitute a crime?

Mr. DILL. This bill provides two kinds of regulations, the violation of which would constitute a crime. One set of regulations affects the bird preserve, for violation of which the offender may be punished by a $500 fine and six months in jail. The other regulations affect territory outside the preserves. For violation of those regulations the offender may be fined for the first offense $10, for the second offense $25, and for the third offense $50. There is no provision that requires these regulations to be published for any particular length of time. There is no provision that makes it possible for the ordinary citizen to know what they are. I submit there is no law on the statute books of this country that gives an administrative officer the power to make regulations affecting the whole country, as this bill provides, a violation of which constitutes a crime.

The Senator from South Dakota yesterday started in to explain his bill, and I thought probably he would want to do that before we discussed it in detail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATERMAN in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 13, before the word "for," it is proposed to strike out "device" and insert "devise."

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 18, after the word "or," it is proposed to insert "occupy or use any part thereof, or."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from South Dakota would explain his reason for that amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator will refer to the committee report, he will find the explanation in that.

Mr. DILL. I should be very glad if the Senator from South Dakota would make the explanation.

Mr. NORBECK. I will read it for the Senator.

One of the amendments pending makes inviolate for all time 60 per cent of the area acquired. The bills presented in the past have provided that with a surplus of game there might be shooting privileges. This bill provides that at least 60 per cent of the area shall be inviolate against any shooting privilege.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this provision says "That no person shall * * * occupy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. DILL. This amendment says that nobody "shall * * * occupy." What does the word "occupy" mean—that he shall not set his foot upon the reservation?

Mr. NORBECK. We talked that over very thoroughly when the other bill was up. It was a question of how much trespass might be allowed. There the provision was that trespass might be forbidden by the order of the Secretary. It was felt that no more than a certain amount of running over these grounds could be allowed if they were to be truly bird preserves. Does the Senator find objection to that part of it?

Mr. DILL. I wanted to know how broad the Senator from South Dakota thought that provision was. I have no objection to any legislation in regard to these migratory-bird preserves that will protect the bird preserves and will protect the use of the bird preserves, but I do not like to see legislation here, under the guise of protecting these bird preserves, that interferes with everything else that people may want to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED of Missouri addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time—

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The action proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury has my approval. I recommend that the Congress enact the legislation necessary to enable the United States to join with the other relief creditors in permitting Austria to obtain the additional capital urgently needed for continuing its economic reconstruction, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to conclude an agreement for the settlement of Austria's debt to the United States.

ANDREW W. MELLON, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Mr. COUZENS. I offer a resolution and ask to have it read and lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received and the clerk will read it.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 173), as follows:

Whereas the Senate of the United States has since October 23, 1923, been investigating the disposition of our naval oil reserves; and

Whereas for nearly all of this time there have been new developments until up to the present time there has been disclosed the worst trail of fraud and corruption in public life that has existed in our history; and

Whereas for considerably over four years Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, has been familiar with the relationship of Harry F. Sinclair to the Republican National Committee of that period, and which relationship disclosed that the said committee received at least $160,000 of Liberty bonds from Harry F. Sinclair to pay the committee's indebtedness for the 1920 campaign; and

Whereas in November, 1923, Andrew W. Mellon was informed of the source of these bonds and received from the chairman of said committee $50,000 of the bonds; and

Whereas it is true that he returned these bonds, yet he at no time revealed this information until it was indicated from another source; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate have been holding hearings on Resolution 105, to investigate the conditions in certain bituminous-coal fields; and

Whereas in the course of this investigation the Pittsburgh Coal Co., a Mellon enterprise, it has been disclosed, has done everything it could to defeat obtaining accurate findings as to its mines by the issuance of the following order:

"To all mine superintendents:

"The United States Senate investigating committee is now visiting the Pittsburgh district. Clean up all unsightly conditions. Keep our police in the background. Avoid all arrests. Instruct our men to keep out of trouble. If the committee desires to question any of our employees, see to it that you present men you can trust and who can be depended upon to give the right kind of answers. If you are examined by the committee, do not answer any questions you think might be harmful to our interests. The company will protect you. The company has mailed a spirited letter to each individual employee. If you know of any unsatisfactory condition in company camps or barracks, see that it is eliminated at once.

"(Signed) THE PITTSBURGH COAL CO."

And

Whereas the Senate of the United States has condemned the expense of $786,934 in behalf of WILLIAM S. VARE in a recent election contest in Pennsylvania, and yet in the same contest $1,804,979 was expended in behalf of another candidate; and

Whereas Andrew W. Mellon was a large contributor to this campaign, was a participant as a speaker, and defended contributions to this campaign on the ground that they were like unto contributions to a church; and

Whereas section 243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States makes it a criminal offense for "any person appointed to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury" to be "directly or indirectly concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce"; and

Whereas Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, is a stockholder and therefore is "directly and indirectly interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce" in corporations such as Gulf Oil Corporation, Gulf Refining Corporation, Gulf Production Co., Gulf Pipeline Co., Gulf Refining Co. of Louisiana, Gypsy Oil Co., Gulf Pipeline Co. of Oklahoma, Mexican Gulf Oil Co., Southern American Gulf Oil Co., Panama Gulf Oil Co., Aluminum Co. of America, and other corporations named by former Senator Ernst in a speech prepared in the Treasury Department and as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 14, 1925; and

Whereas the Senate of the United States in the only analogous case of record declared that the Secretary of the Treasury could not be financially interested in trade or commerce; and

Whereas the Government of the United States was defrauded out of $91,000 in the tax case of the Mellon National Bank, the Union Trust Co., and the Union Savings Bank while Andrew W. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury; and

Whereas Andrew W. Mellon, as Secretary of the Treasury, benefited through indefensible decisions in the tax case of the Gulf Oil Co., as disclosed by the select committee of the Senate appointed to investigate the Bureau of Internal Revenue; and

Whereas there was much evidence of corruption, favoritism, violation of the law, and illegal settlements with certain large taxpayers reported by the select committee of the Senate appointed to investigate the Internal Revenue Bureau; and

Whereas Andrew W. Mellon was responsible for this condition; and

Whereas throughout all of the administration of said Andrew W. Mellon there runs an indifference to the law, a contempt for the law, a defiance of law; and

Whereas an indifference to law, a defiance of law, and contempt for law upon the part of those sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States breeds and encourages indifference and disrespect for law upon the part of other employees of the Government and upon the part of citizens and thereby contributes to and does undermine and eventually will destroy the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the Senate of the United States has confirmed the appointment of Andrew W. Mellon as Secretary of the Treasury, and to that extent has assumed responsibility for him: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Andrew W. Mellon should resign as Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I take it that we may assume that Mr. Mellon is otherwise all right?

Mr. COUZENS. I would not admit that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds, and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED of Missouri continued his speech, which is as follows, from the beginning:

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee seems to be averse to explaining his bill, or giving the Members of the Senate any light whatever in regard to it except such as they may get from the bill itself. I am not at this moment prepared as well as I should like to be prepared to discuss the bill; but the bill as drawn, in my opinion, is a mere monstrosity.

In the first place, I want it understood that I am in favor of reasonable protection of the game and fish of the country. I helped to put through, at one session, a bill creating a fish preserve. I do not believe this to be the business of the Federal Government, and have never so believed; and I have the temerity to maintain that opinion in the face of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Notwithstanding that opinion, I still say that the Federal Government has no proper jurisdiction in this sort of case.

From time immemorial wild game has been known as feræ naturæ, and the property was in the State. When the Constitution was framed, the States retained all the powers of sovereignty except as those powers had been modified by direct grants to the Federal Government. One of the powers granted to the Federal Government was the right to regulate interstate commerce, and it is under that power that this pretended authority is held to exist.

Every one familiar with the interstate-commerce clause knows that it was intended to regulate the shipment of goods from one State to another and to foreign parts. It was not originally contemplated that the law should go beyond that; and the provision sprang into existence because certain of the States had undertaken to place embargoes upon commerce with other States.

Early in our history we began to employ powers granted for one specific purpose in order to accomplish an entirely different end. It was, in its inception, a usurpation and a breaking down of the Constitution itself.

One of the early instances was the tax levied upon the issuing of money by State banks. However desirable it may have been to stop State banks issuing money, the power did not exist in the Federal Government. Congress undertook to employ a power granted for the purpose of raising revenue so as to destroy these banks, over which it had no direct authority. There was the right to levy a tax for the purpose of raising revenue, not for the purpose of destruction; and a law existed taxing the issuance of money by State banks. Congress then conceived the idea that it did not want to raise revenue, that it wanted to destroy the banks, and destroy the source of the revenue by destroying the banks; and so Congress levied a 10 per cent tax upon all moneys issued by State banks. It was admitted in the argument of the case that the effect of the law was not to raise revenue but was to destroy the source of revenue. Nevertheless the Supreme Court said that so long as Congress had the power to levy a tax it would not look into the objects and purpose for which it was levied, and sustained the act of Congress. It said that it would not look into the motive, although that motive was on the face apparent. It was, in my opinion, the most mistaken doctrine ever established by that great court.

Following that decision, Congress conceived the idea that it could employ many other powers of government to accomplish powers not within the grants of power and authority contained in the Constitution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will ask him if the action of Congress in imposing a tax upon colored oleomargarine is not just as good an illustration as the one of the imposition of a tax upon the money issued by State banks?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Absolutely. Congress had the power to levy a tax on goods imported into the United States for the purpose of revenue. Congress never was granted power to levy a tax for the purpose of increasing the price of goods to the American people and enriching certain classes of manufacturers; and if any such proposal had been made at the time the Constitution was before the States for approval it is safe to say that it would have been incontinently rejected. But with the precedent theretofore established, Congress said to itself, "It does not make any difference whether we have been granted the power to take the property or money of the people of the United States from them by force of law, by creating a condition which compels them to pay under the law and under the combinations back of the law; we will, nevertheless, levy this tax upon imports, not for the purpose of creating revenue but for the purpose of creating profits for favored gentlemen and institutions."

One great judge, in speaking of that decision, said that to lay the hand of power upon the property of one citizen and transfer it to another was none the less robbery though done under the forms of law. Nevertheless, the power granted for one purpose was again employed to accomplish a different purpose and a wholly foreign purpose.

Then came the oleomargarine case. Then we proceeded further in the matter of using the powers to regulate interstate commerce. We declared that the power to regulate the shipment of goods from one State to another could be employed to regulate the instrumentalities of commerce. Then we declared that the labor employed was an instrumentality of commerce. So we proceeded to regulate the hours of labor and the wages of the men engaged in running the railroad trains throughout the land.

It is a far cry from the regulation of the wages of men to a regulation providing that commerce may flow freely from one State to another. That law has been popular. It has been popular because the wages were regulated up and the hours of labor down. But it should be remembered by those who are willing to confer powers of this character upon the Federal Government that the power to do a thing in a popular way is the power to do it in an unpopular way; the power to do a thing right is always the power to do it wrong, and the day may come when conditions in this country will be such that a Congress can be found that will be regulating the wages of men down and the hours of labor up.

The point I am making is that we were using a power granted for a particular purpose to coerce and compel action that never was within the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution. Always Congress fell back upon the theory that if Congress exercised a power, the courts could not inquire into the reason for that exercise. So in case after case this mistaken theory of construction was adhered to.

It was carried to such an extent that it was finally conceived that these powers could be used to accomplish any purpose or any end. It was almost analogous to the case of giving a police force the right to carry guns for the protection of life and property, and then directing them that they could use their weapons for the destruction of life and property. It was an entirely different use of power than was contemplated.

Then came the child labor law, where Congress sought to exercise the power to regulate commerce so that it could regulate the hours of labor in the factories in the States. It was urged that it was a humane measure. It was urged that the States had not properly protected children, and that therefore Congress, in its superior wisdom, ought to take over that regulation. But the question arose, Where is the power to be found? for we are not a body with general jurisdiction, but only with limited jurisdiction. That power must be found in the Constitution of the United States, and not elsewhere, and if it is not there ordained, the power does not exist.

Congress passed a law providing that goods that were manufactured under certain conditions of labor could not be shipped in interstate commerce. Then the question was put squarely to the Supreme Court: If this power to regulate interstate commerce can be extended to regulate the hours and conditions of labor in factories, it can be employed to regulate the wages, and if it can be employed in factories, it can be employed on farms, and if it can be thus employed, it can be so used as to carry over to Congress the right to regulate all of the affairs and all of the business of the people of the United States.

I regret that I have not the opinion of the Supreme Court before me, but it finally was compelled in that great case to repudiate in substance and effect the doctrine to which it had adhered for nearly a century of time.

The Supreme Court then said that no matter though a power exists it can not be employed to accomplish objects and purposes which are not within the jurisdiction of the Congress, and if the mere right to regulate interstate commerce can be extended to regulate the habits and lives of a people and their conditions of industry, then indeed under that one single power the Federal Government becomes omnipotent and the rights reserved to the States are nullified. That is in substance and effect the decision.

Then it was conceived that the taxing power could be used as it had been used in the oleomargarine case and in the tariff bills and in the earlier case of State banks of issue taxation. So a law was passed fixing a tax on goods. The Supreme Court again said that while the power to tax existed it could not be employed for the purpose of destroying or regulating the business of people within the States.

There went up another case, known as the Nebraska language suit. That was a case where the Legislature of Nebraska during or immediately succeeding the war passed a law making it a crime for a parent to teach his child under 8 years of age any other language than the English language. It was, of course, aimed at the population of that State who were of German extraction and who still taught their children the mother tongue of Germany. When a citizen of that State was brought to the bar to answer to the heinous charge of teaching his child some other language than English the power of the State to make such a regulation was brought in question, and the court answered that it was a police regulation, and that it was put there for the protection of the child, and that a State had the right to protect a child of tender years. But the Supreme Court said that notwithstanding the fact that the State had the right to protect a child of tender years it could not exercise that right for the purpose of destroying the natural right of the parent, and in a decision that will long be read and remembered the court went back to the old, fundamental thought that a power granted by the Constitution must be exercised for the purposes within the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution.

So we seem to have arrived at a ground where that great court proposed to keep every department of Government within the spirit of the Constitution itself, and to hold to the doctrine that a power granted for a particular purpose could not be extended beyond the objects for which the power had been granted in the Constitution.

Then came the remarkable decision in a prohibition case, in which it was held that, although the Constitution gave Congress for the first time the power to regulate and prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, it could be employed to prevent their sale and manufacture for any purpose whatsoever. So we went back in that decision to a doctrine which has been repudiated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. KING. I might observe that in the decision last adverted to they held in effect that the beverage need not be intoxicating.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. That it might be one-half of 1 per cent or one-tenth of 1 per cent for that matter; that it was a legislative fiat that anything was denominated intoxicating; that it was a legislative lie, because Congress said it was intoxicating.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes, and we could write, according to the doctrine of some of those cases, across the face of the act, "The real purpose of this act is not to accomplish an end laid down in the Constitution, but to usurp a power not granted." I think that could be said to be a fair interpretation.

As I read the decisions first holding to the doctrine that the power must be exercised for the purposes granted—I am referring to the later class of decisions—and then this sudden reversal, I was compelled to think of Hennessy's remark to Dooley. Dooley said, "Hennessy, do the Constitution follow the flag?" Hennessy said, "I don't know, but I am mighty sure the Supreme Court follows the election returns." I say that with some hesitancy because no man holds in higher respect and regard than I do the great tribunal, which in so many instances has proven itself a beacon of light for our guidance through difficult questions.

The observations I have made are in point in this case. I began my remarks by saying that in my opinion, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court, the power to regulate and control migratory birds and to punish people for interfering with them never was granted to Congress and has been wrongfully assumed. I start with the proposition that the migratory-bird case was dissented from by two of the great justices, Mr. Justice Van Devanter and Mr. Justice Pitney. When there is a division of opinion between the judges on that bench I have the right to join the minority as well as to join the majority. I want to read just one line from that decision. Mr. Justice Holmes, who delivered the opinion, after discussing the case, said in the concluding paragraph:

> We see nothing in the Constitution that compels the Government to sit by while a food supply is cut off and the protectors of our forests and our crops are destroyed. It is not sufficient to rely upon the States. The reliance is vain, and were it otherwise the question is whether the United States is forbidden to act.

"The question is whether the United States is forbidden to act!" Is that the question when a constitutional power is challenged? What becomes of the tenth amendment? "All powers not herein granted are reserved to the States and the peoples thereof." From the first it has been known that the Federal Government was a Government of granted powers. It had no power except the powers given to it. Every power not given to it was by the tenth amendment reserved to the States and the peoples thereof. Yet we find this heresy written in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. When did it become a doctrine in the United States that whenever Congress thinks the States are not properly exercising a power thereupon we must assume it? Admit that doctrine, sirs, and Congress becomes supreme, and the Constitution and constitutional limitations vanish. The will of this body can be exercised; and, having been exercised, the courts refuse to interfere as long as it is within the general powers; and if the powers are assumed to be of the character here indicated—that is, when the States have not exercised the powers in a manner suitable to Congress—the Congress thereupon takes over the power. If this be the rule of construction, the Constitution is as dead as the decrees of Julius Cæsar. That is the kind of law upon which we are now proceeding to act. I confidently believe, since the Supreme Court wrote the child-labor decision and the Nebraska decision, notwithstanding its lapse in the prohibition case, that if the question were presented anew we would very likely get a different decision.

Interstate commerce is the basis now of this claimed right—that and a treaty made with Canada. Again, if we undertake to base this power upon the fact that we made a treaty, then to what end are we driven? Assume now that the power was not granted by the Constitution of the United States; then assume we get it by virtue of a treaty made with a foreign government and that the treaty supersedes the Constitution adopted by the people of the United States. Then we have a situation where a foreign government and the Senate of the United States can assume a jurisdiction and a power which can not be assumed by both branches of the Congress of the United States in the enactment of a law, and where the act of a foreign government plus the ratification by the Senate of the United States supersedes the Constitution of the United States. A more monstrous doctrine could not be conceived.

The concept that all powers are reserved to the States and the people thereof except as expressly granted becomes this sort of doctrine: "All powers are reserved to the Senate and a foreign government except as herein granted."

So, Mr. President, believing that such a bill as this, if enacted into law, would be unconstitutional, I am opposed to it upon that ground. The theory seems to be under the interstate commerce act that if a blue jay in Kansas gets a grain of corn in its bill and flies across the State line into Missouri, it is engaged in interstate commerce in corn. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. KING. I desired to suggest to the Senator, when he was discussing the question of a treaty plus the act of Congress, that California, in the exercise of a right which belongs to a sovereign State, has restricted orientals so that they may not acquire and hold real estate in that State. Under the new-fangled rule under which we are asked now to support the bill, we could make a treaty with China or Japan under the terms of which orientals might acquire and hold property in California notwithstanding the law of that State, and because a treaty had been negotiated, then the Congress could pass a law nullifying absolutely the law of California. So that we have reduced the States in all their police and domestic affairs to mere appendages of the Senate and the Executive; and in whatever the Senate and the Executive do, if there is a treaty back of it, the Congress would override the States and State rights and State obligations and duties.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator's illustration is apt, impressive, and true, but we are discussing the Constitution this afternoon a little while and we do not expect anybody to be interested in it.

The spirit which has prevailed in Congress for at least 10 or 12 years has been that the Constitution is a chain upon the right of the people, through their representatives here, to enact such laws as they desire; that it is a repugnant thing; that it limits our liberties and, therefore, the question most frequently asked is not what is the spirit of the Constitution, or is the thing we are about to do clearly within the grant of power contained in the Constitution; but the question most frequently asked is,

"Can we do it despite the Constitution? Is there some way we can get around the miserable Constitution, some means by which we can circumvent it, some device by which we can escape its restrictions, for is it not a limitation upon the legislative wisdom?" That has been the spirit manifested here a dozen times since I have sat in this body.

An argument for the Constitution of the United States is generally met with curling lips by the gentleman who thinks he has devised a scheme to defeat the purpose of that Constitution. The difficulty is increased by a rule established in the courts that, whereas the Congress is the natural guardian of the Constitution, the courts will presume that the statutes here enacted are in accordance with the Constitution until and unless a plain violation is shown. So between the spirit of Congress, which is exactly the converse in recent years of the spirit ascribed to it, and the rule of law giving to acts of Congress the presumption to which I have adverted, the Constitution has been ground as between the upper and nether millstones. Going along with this has been the pernicious doctrine frequently taught in the forum and the press and elsewhere that the Constitution has been a citadel of privilege and hence a thing to be despised of all men.

Mr. President, when our fathers established this Government they knew that no government could be intrusted with absolute power. They realized that elementally man is a natural-born autocrat and despot; that believing a certain course of conduct is the best for him, he likewise would impose that course of conduct upon others; that frequently the more sincere he is in his judgments the more determined he is to fasten his will and course of conduct upon the other people; that some of the worst monsters that have cursed the world and saturated it in blood and wet it with the tears of innumerable people were those creatures who believed they were right in some particular theory, and therefore undertook with fire and sword to make everybody else conform to their views; and in doing so many of them thought they were serving God.

As a Frenchman expressed it, they conceived liberty to consist in making everbody else think as they thought. But wise men know that that is not liberty; that is tyranny; that is despotism; that is the liberty of one man and the enslavement of all others; that is the grant of privilege and power to one individual to forge chains for the brains and shackles for the souls of all the living.

So when the Government was set up the fathers did not intend to create any omnipotent power. They intended to grant limited power, and then always to provide a means by which the abuse of that power could be punished by the people themselves. They did not trust one branch of government, but set up three coordinate branches, each to be a check upon the other. They did not trust the courts of the land to make laws; they only intrusted them with the right to construe and enforce laws made by the legislative department of the Government. They did not trust the judges themselves but reserved to Congress the power of impeachment and removal from office. They did not trust a single branch of the legislature, no matter how representative or how numerous, to enact laws, but they required that the laws should be passed also by another branch of the legislature, chosen by a different constituency and for a different term. They did not trust both branches of the legislature finally to enact laws, but provided that all laws must be signed by the Executive, elected by still a different constituency and for still a different term; and that laws could be passed over his veto only by a two-thirds concurring vote in both Houses. They did not trust the Executive entirely, for the right was reserved to Congress to impeach even the President of the United States for high crimes and misdemeanors; and finally, that the power might be in the last analysis reserved in the people themselves, they provided that the Members of the House of Representatives should be elected every 24 months, so that every 24 months the people could impeach the Members of the House of Representatives by refusing to reelect them.

Thus the circle of power of authority proceeded from the people, and was in the end returned to the people. But having done all these things, they ordained the Constitution. They granted to the Federal Government a few specific powers, very simple in their nature, very limited in their purpose: The right to establish an Army and Navy to protect the land; the right to establish post offices and post roads to carry the mails and information to the people; the right to establish a banking and currency system; the right to regulate interstate commerce, which was intended only to facilitate and keep open the highways of trade; the right to establish courts to enforce these laws.

However, we have witnessed the illustration of the truth of the maxim, "Misers there be, but not of power." So the Federal Government was scarcely set up until it sought to extend its power, to extend its jurisdiction; and in order to do that, to employ a power granted for one purpose so as to accomplish an entirely different end.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, would the Senator from Missouri like to have a quorum called?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, I do not think so. Nobody is interested in the Constitution but three or four of us. They are interested in a bird bill, and blue jays are more important than the bill of rights. The question of whether somebody is going to get a game preserve in his State is of more interest than is the question of whether the liberties of the American people are to be preserved. So I am not interested in a quorum, and a quorum would not be interested in me.

Mr. DILL. But if the Senator will yield, I desire to suggest he is making such a fine exposition of constitutional government that I thought it would be wise to have Senators here to listen to him.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thank the Senator; but I am making this speech for my own satisfaction. [Laughter.]

We forget when we consider the Constitution that the most important part of it is the first 10 amendments—the bill of rights. Having granted certain specific and limited powers to the Federal Government, the wise men of that day feared that those powers would be abused, and, accordingly, it was stipulated and understood when the original Constitution was adopted that the bill of rights would immediately follow and be made a part of it. That compact was met and complied with. If the bill of rights had not been written, it is my opinion that years ago the Federal Government would have usurped every power it saw fit to take over and that the rights which constitute the soul of human liberty would long ago have been destroyed.

Occasionally I read where some one attacks these old and sacred things. The right of trial by jury is subject to constant heckling and attack. If a jury makes, peradventure, a mistake or if it renders a decision which is for the moment unpopular that fact is blazoned to the public, and we are told that we ought only to rely upon the decisions of men learned in the law and that we should trust our liberties to judicial determination.

Mr. President, there has never been a free people on this earth after it surrendered the right of trial by jury. Fundamentally the thought is that if a government becomes oppressive, despotic, cruel, inhuman, 12 men, summoned from the vicinage where the defendant resides, will not impose the cruel penalties of an unjust and unrighteous law upon him. That is the fundamental thought back of trial by jury. More than that, there was the legal wisdom which pointed out the truth that when 12 people, coming from all walks of life, pass upon a question of fact and all agree unanimously, they are much more likely to be correct in their judgment than one man, who has been trained in a single profession. Still the great thought was the preservation of the liberties of the people.

There is another right reserved to the people in the bill of rights to which I wish to refer. We do not hear it spoken of very often; but Article II of the bill of rights provides:

> The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

Why? Because the fathers who wrote this sacred instrument knew that the choice device of tyrants was to disarm the people and then a small standing army could overrun them and impose upon them the will of the dictator. So they provided that every man should have the right to keep and maintain arms against the day when tyranny might raise its bloody hands and free men could respond with arms in their possession.

Attacks on the Constitution! Stretch it to the utmost limit! Distort it as far as possible! Malign it! Spit upon it! What difference does the Constitution make when we have the great question of whether a duck lighting on a pond on the first day of a particular month shall be sacrosanct, or whether a rule promulgated by some politician who happens to be elevated temporarily to a position in the Cabinet has been violated, inadvertently or otherwise?

What we want in this country is more law, more legal chains, more "be it enacted" by legislative bodies, so that no man born of woman will have a single right left except to do something somebody else tells him he must do. We have gone mad on the question of law and of regulation. There are 20,000 Federal statutes and 600,000 State statutes, or something like that number—I think that is about right. On top of that we have all the rules and regulations of all the common councils of all of the States and towns and villages of the United States. On top of that we have innumerable boards and bureaus in cities, towns, villages, and States authorized to make regulations, the violation of any one of which is either a misdemeanor or a felony.

And here in Washington we create boards and bureaus just about as recklessly as a boy in the springtime buys marbles and plays "keeps" with them.

We give power to these boards and bureaus to make rules, and then we provide that anybody who violates a rule made by one of these board or bureaus may be sent to jail, and that gives to their mandates all the force of law.

I have said elsewhere, and I repeat now, that if Methusaleh were to be born, and, as soon as he was weaned, started to read the laws, rules, and regulations governing a human being in the free United States of America, by the time he was gathered to his fathers he would not be halfway through with the job of reading the regulations, and before he got that far along half of them would have been repealed, altered, or otherwise changed.

There has been sheer madness in the matter of regulation until it is not to be wondered that law has come into contempt, and when law comes into contempt it ceases to be law in the sense that a law ought to be a law. When a law comes into general contempt disobedience becomes so universal that the law serves only the purpose of an occasional venting of spite or the levying of some kind of illegal tribute.

Let no one say that I am advocating the breach of law. I am trying to advocate a condition which will bring respect for law, and it is only by respect for law that you ever obtain from the law any useful purpose or any satisfactory end.

I undertake to affirm, sir, that there is not a person in this Chamber—that there is not one in these galleries—who has not at some time in his life violated some one of the laws of the land; not one; not a minister of the gospel. If a minister owns an automobile, it is an eternal verity that at some time he has violated the speed law or parked on the wrong side of the road. If he did not own one, he has been guilty of jaywalking and violated the regulations of his city. Of course, if the minister has done it, everybody else has.

So that the spirit does not exist any longer that we ought to obey a law because it is a sacred thing, but we want to get past it, get around it, and escape it; and we look both ways to see whether there is a policeman in sight, and if he is there, we do not do the thing, and if he is not there, we do it.

The whole theory is based upon an absolutely false conception of life. No people were ever made good by any law that any man ever wrote. All the laws ever passed by all the legislative bodies of the earth have never made one man good. They may have stopped the man who was a criminal at heart from doing a particular act, and thus protected another individual, but they did not remove from the criminal's heart the evil purpose that was there.

All the laws ever passed never planted a noble impulse in a human soul. All the laws ever passed never gave the sweetness of love to a mother's kiss, never made the soul of a wife true, never made a child love the woman who had cradled it in her arms. You can not make people good by law. You can prevent them interfering with others to some extent. The great thing that sustains this civilization of ours is not the legislative acts that you gentlemen get together, not the thing called law, but it is something that was planted in our hearts by nature and nature's God, something that was cultivated at the mother's knee, that was learned by the father's side, that was enlarged in the school, that was enobled by the great examples of history, and that has been sanctified by the prayers of the church. In nine hundred out of nine hundred and ninety-nine acts of our lives we would have done them if there had never been statute law because the other laws control.

There is no law to compel you to defend a woman if she is attacked, but if one were attacked, every man on the street would go to her rescue. He goes in response to a voice within. No law would compel you to seize a murderer and prevent his crime, yet if one were to be attempted, even the soft hands of women would be outstretched and their tender bodies would be risked in the attempt to protect one assailed.

There was no law that ever compelled a man to write a great poem, to paint a magnificent picture, to carve the dream of his soul in imperisable marble. Those laws come from within.

This attempt to regulate everything people do is based upon the idea that nobody has sense enough or decency enough to live a decent life unless some little legislator, no better than the rest of the people, writes a rule by which human beings shall live. Laws and rules and regulations are the order of the day. The world has just about gone crazy along that line, and we get so many that after a while nobody pays any attention to any of them except those which are scarcely necessary to exist, the great, common, general rules of human conduct and decency which are only necessary to protect us against the criminal element in society.

I wonder why when God Almighty made men and women He did not make them and force them into a straightjacket which compelled them to do things, why He left any volition or any liberty. If He had been of the temper and mind of the modern legislator He would have made us so that we had to do everything in a certain way. But, of course, His work can be easily supplemented by any legislative tinkerer who gets into office for 90 days.

So we have now proposed some more rules and regulations, and I want to call attention to some of them, and as I am now going to discuss a part of this bill which may be of interest, because we are down to the blue jay and the jack rabbit, I will be obliged to my friend from Washington if he will call the Senate in to listen.

(At this point Mr. DILL suggested the absence of a quorum and the roll was called, after which other business intervened.)

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the reassembled Senate to some of the provisions of the proposed bill. The first proposition is that it is proposed that the Federal Government shall assume the business of protecting the game which belongs in the various States. I still am old-fashioned enough to think that the States are capable of attending to that business for themselves.

But the provisions of the bill are, some of them, to my mind absolutely shocking. I would like to direct the serious attention of the Senate to the provisions of the bill. I know that in advance every effort has been made to pledge Senators, even before they have read the text of the bill now before us. It is another one of those bills which is being attempted to be carried through by propaganda by people who have a particular hobby in which they are interested or who have a particular ax to grind.

This bill provides, first, that every man or boy who undertakes to hunt upon any ground except the particular ground on which he resides permanently must have a license. The language is exceedingly broad. It is not required that he shall hunt and kill, but if he shall pursue or attempt to pursue any of these numerous birds, named not in this bill but in another bill, and does not have his license upon his person he is subject to the penalties of this proposed act. Such a law could easily be employed to arrest every man found with a shotgun or rifle on his shoulder walking along the highways of the country, for Federal courts are not at all adverse to extending their power as far as it will go, and the hired sneaks and snoopers that the Government employs are always willing to exercise their power for the purpose of the enforcement of the law or blackmail because of the provisions of the law. Wherever they have power, almost without exception, we find that to be the case.

Under this bill, if it shall be enacted into law, every boy in the country and every man who has a gun and pursues any of these sacred birds—and the schedule embraces practically the entire feathered tribe—may be fined and imprisoned. He may not be within a thousand miles of a game preserve; there may not be a game preserve within his State or within any reasonable traveling distance; he may be trying to hunt in strict accordance with the laws of his own State; and yet he may be arrested, first, because he has not a license, and, second, because he has violated a rule and regulation prescribed by one man out of 120,000,000 people of the United States.

So far as I am concerned, I never intend to vote for another law that will make it a crime for a citizen of the United States to violate the ipse dixit laid down by a single individual who is possessed of no legislative authority. It is contrary to every principle of Anglo-Saxon liberty and is violative of the fundamental principles of our law.

The laws of the land ought to be enacted in the legislative bodies of the land. The people are authorized to elect men for the express purpose of enacting laws. They have provided for two houses in all the legislative bodies, I believe, of the United States, to the end that there may be deliberation, that there may be counsel. Then, before any law is enacted, it must be further sanctioned by the executive authority. That is the way we pass laws, and that is the way we ought to pass every kind of rule or regulation which affects the liberty of the citizen but this bill proposes to confer upon a single individual—it may be upon an Albert B. Fall; it may be upon a Will Hays; it may be upon a Denby; it may be upon a Daugherty—who happens to have been appointed to the position of Secretary of Agriculture, the right to lay down rules and regulations, apparently without any regard to limitation, just to make any kind of a rule or regulation he wants to, and anybody who violates that rule and regulation may be fined and imprisoned, or both. That kind of thing does not belong beneath the American flag. It is, in substance and effect, an abdication of the legislative authority by transferring it from the legislative body to a single individual.

The rules promulgated may be unreasonable; they may be of such character as would never be adopted by the Congress; they may be utterly obnoxious to our judgment, but we turn over to him the right to make any rule he wants to make.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me there merely for a suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. BLACK. In reference to the matter of rules and regulations, it is so apropos that I desire to call the Senator's attention to this instance. During the World War we had a food administration and a sugar administrator. Certain regulations were prescribed by the sugar administrator. There was a lawsuit down in Alabama, and I sent to Washington to obtain the regulations that I might know what was the law. We tried the case in the lower court on the regulations which were sent to me, which, as we supposed, constituted the law. We took the case up to the Supreme Court of Alabama, and I won the case on the regulations which had been sent me from the department. After the case had been won, however, the attorney for the other side came to Washington, searched through the records here, went to New York and searched through the records there, and he found another regulation prescribed by the sugar administrator. He brought that regulation back. It went to the Supreme Court of Alabama, and the court held that the second regulation was really the regulation which should have been utilized all the time, and not as yet have we ever been able to find all the regulations that were issued by the sugar administrator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. They used to change the sugar regulations according to the fluctuations of the market. What the Senator from Alabama has stated affords an illustration of how these powers may be used and how they may be abused. We never authorized anybody to fix the maximum price of wheat in this country, but we authorized the fixing of a minimum price, which the Government guaranteed. We did give a certain distinguished gentleman from abroad the right to license grain dealers, and he thereupon licensed them and told them if they paid a penny more than that minimum price he would cancel their licenses and destroy their business. So he fixed the price of wheat for all the farmers of the United States. He simply used the power of license granted for one purpose in order to fix the maximum price of wheat, which he never was authorized to fix.

The same thing was done with reference to many other farm products. When we grant these powers, understand, they not only will be used, but in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of every thousand they will be abused.

Who will be Secretary of Agriculture nobody knows. Some of us know who happens to occupy that office just now. He is not a bad man at all. I do not know, though, whether he could tell the technical difference between a blue jay and a crow, or whether he knows anything about the habits of migratory birds. I do not know that he has the slightest knowledge with reference to the subject matter that is to be consigned to his keeping; but if he does, if he knows every note from the song of a lark to the call of a black crow, we do not know what the next man will know who will become Secretary of Agriculture. Judging from the kind of thing our Presidents have been doing lately, we are likely to get almost any kind of a man there, and not only there but in any other Cabinet position. Such positions are transitory. Those who hold them are not only liable to be removed by death, by the act of God, but they are liable to be removed by an indignant public opinion expressed through the Senate. We propose to turn over to this unknown man of the future, with unknown leanings, with unknown environment, with unknown knowledge, the liberties of our people; the right to make rules and regulations which, if violated by any one of the free people of the United States, may subject that individual to a term in jail. The next individual may be as wise as Solomon, or his ignorance may be as abysmal as the vast spaces of the universe.

We call ourselves constitutional legislators; and after a while the Senators who have pledged their votes in advance will come in and vote on this bill without knowing anything about it. We have been passing a law against lobbyists down here. We ought to pass a law to send a Senator to jail who will pledge his support to a bill until after he has studied it, and knows what is in it, and has maturely made up his mind.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Suppose a farmer's boy is hunting birds on his own land, and he pursues those birds over his neighbor's land, which is agreeable to his neighbor, and this boy has not got this license. Would he be subject to arrest and fine?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Unquestionably; and not only that, but if he attempts to do it, if he attempts to pursue it, whatever that may mean. If he chases the bird to the line fence, it might be construed that he was attempting to pursue it after it had reached, in its flight, a position over the adjoining farm. I am serious about that. I can readily see why at least he could be haled to court and told that he would be punished if he did not compromise and pay in some money, as this bill contemplates—a sort of a blackmailing proposition contained in the bill itself.

Mr. HEFLIN. And I understand that the bill provides that they can take his gun, too.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, yes; they take everything. That is the reason why so many of these gentlemen are supplied with automobiles and firearms to-day.

Mr. President, I should like to continue my remarks to-morrow. I am a little bit tired.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an executive session?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes, sir.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 21, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, March 20, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, our lives are composed of just every days, and we need the presence of Him who lights dull eyes and makes tired hands strong. We pause, we listen: Be still and know that I am God. Awaken in us a desire to return to this art of silent meditation, quietly seeking the imprint of Thy hand in life. Thy hand is seen in the story of the world's development, in the rise and fall of empires, and is a very real presence in human experience. O give us counsel that we may be men who fear God and keep His commandments. Deepen our respect for truth, for honor, for our neighbor's good name, and for all agencies that transform earth's dishonor into heaven's glory. Set our wills upon a firm throne, so that we may go forward with a fixed purpose. Then nothing shall be done by impulse, but all things shall be done according to the best rule of wisdom. In the name of Jesus our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Upon what subject?

Mr. HOLADAY. On the agricultural situation and certain matters bearing on that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. On what subject?

Mr. GRIFFIN. On the subject of the S–4.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DENISON rose.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Illinois proceeds, the Chair desires to know if he expects to take up very much time. The Chair is loath to recognize anybody, even for a unanimous-consent request, on Calendar Wednesday, if the matter is apt to consume any time.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to ask that certain bridge bills sent over from the House, with Senate amendments thereon, be sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER, MARION COUNTY, TENN.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9147) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River on the Jasper-Chattanooga road in Marion County, Tenn., with Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "cost of the bridge and its" and insert "cost of the bonds authorized under the law of the State of Tennessee for the construction of this and other bridges and their."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. PARKER, Mr. DENISON, and Mr. RAYBURN.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS] be substituted in my place as one of the conferees. He is on the bridge subcommittee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS] be substituted for him as a conferee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I notice the gentleman from Illinois has several bills which he wishes acted upon in this manner. May we not have them reported one at a time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that we ought to act on each bill separately.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not the gentleman's committee going to function to-day, Calendar Wednesday, and could they not call them up as a matter of right?

Mr. DENISON. These are bills that have been messaged over from the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER, KNOX COUNTY, TENN.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9197) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River on the Knoxville-Marysville road, in Knox County, Tenn., with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk reported the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out "cost of the bridge and its" and insert "cost of the bonds authorized under the law of the State of Tennessee for the construction of this bridge and other bridges and their."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to obtain some information as to why the Senate amendments are not proper?

Mr. DENISON. Because we think they are not proper. We think the phraseology should not be so changed.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is it not a fact that with the Senate amendments incorporated it would reduce the amount of bonds which could be issued?

Mr. DENISON. No; that is not the fact.

Mr. SCHAFER. What is the fact?

Mr. DENISON. The fact is that the Senate amendments are not in the exact form necessary to make it harmonize with the laws of the State of Tennessee. It is merely a change in the phraseology that is being used.

Mr. SCHAFER. It is just a mere change of phraseology and it does not have any effect on the provisions of the bill?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee, to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PARKER, Mr. DENISON, and Mr. PARKS.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE RIVER, TENN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9198, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9198) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River on the Paris-Dover road in Henry and Stewart Counties, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PARKER, Mr. DENISON, and Mr. PARKS.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CUMBERLAND RIVER, TENN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois also asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9199, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9199) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River on the Dover-Clarksville road in Stewart County, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PARKER, Mr. DENISON, and Mr. PARKS.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE RIVER, TENN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois also asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9197, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

CALL OF COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

RETIRED COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE COAST GUARD

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee, I call up bill H. R. 10540.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10540) to credit retired commissioned officers of the Coast Guard with active duty during the World War performed since retirement.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. What is this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk, without objection, will again report the bill by title.

The title was again read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10540, with Mr. HOOPER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10540, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all retired commissioned officers of the Coast Guard who served on active duty in the United States Navy or in the Coast Guard during the World War shall be credited with all active duty performed since retirement during the period from April 6, 1917, to March 3, 1921, in the computation of their longevity pay and pay periods; but no person shall be entitled to receive any back pay or allowances by reason of the enactment of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] will be recognized for one hour, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] will be recognized for one hour.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield as much time as he desires to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I do not believe it is necessary to take more than a few moments upon this bill, which is fully explained in the report. I think I can state in a very few words all that is involved in this measure.

Under the law, in case of war the Coast Guard Service, as you know, passes over and becomes a part of the Navy. That was true during the World War. Owing to the need of officers there were many retired officers who were called back into the service during the period of the World War. Among these were 15 retired officers of the Coast Guard Service who were called back into active duty. Under a ruling of the Comptroller General it is impossible for these retired officers of the Coast Guard to figure, in determining the amount of their pay as retired officers, the period of time which they served on active duty during the World War. The only purpose of this measure is to permit the time when these retired officers served in active duty during the World War to be figured in determining their retired pay .

I may say there are only four retired officers who will be affected by this legislation. Under the law, retired officers of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, under like circumstances, are permitted to figure the time that they served during the war in determining their retired pay. Obviously it is illogical to figure the time which a man serves in peace times in determining his retired pay and refuse to permit him to figure the time when he served in active service during war in determining his retired pay.

So far as I know there has been no argument advanced against this legislation. It is earnestly indorsed by the department, has the recommendation of the Budget Bureau, involves a very small item of expense, and unless some one desires to ask some question about it I do not think it is necessary for me to use any more time.

Mr. THATCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. How many officers are involved?

Mr. HOCH. There are just four officers involved in this legislation. There were 15 retired officers of the Coast Guard who were called back into service, but only 4 of them will be involved. The others did not serve a period of time which under the method of accounting would mean anything to them as far as this legislation is concerned.

Mr. THATCHER. Of what rank are these officers?

Mr. HOCH. I will give the gentleman the exact information, if he desires it, with reference to the four officers involved. The four officers involved are Lieut. Commander C. W. Cairnes, Lieut. W. L. Maxwell, Lieut. H. O. Slayton, and Lieut. B. A. Minor.

Mr. THATCHER. I will say that I am thoroughly in sympathy with the legislation

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I notice from the report that in one of the communications from the Secretary of the Treasury it is stated there will be five officers affected by this legislation and then later four.

Mr. HOCH. When this legislation was first proposed, something over a year ago, there were five officers involved, but one of them has since died.

Mr. HUDSON. And if we delay it further we may get rid of all of them.

Mr. HOCH. Yes. Delay means simply continuing the injustice.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not claim the time on account of being opposed to the bill, and if any member of the committee who is opposed to the bill desires time, I shall be glad to yield it to him. If not, I wish to say a few words about the bill.

I do not oppose this bill, but I am in favor of it. The officers who are to be taken care of in this legislation are to be put on the same footing as retired officers of the Navy and of the Marine Corps who were called into active duty during the World War. It is an oversight and it should be looked after at this time. This bill does that.

Let me say this: These men in the Coast Guard who were retired before the World War began were in all probability members of either of those grand old services, the Life Saving Service or the Revenue Cutter Service. As Members of the House will remember, the Life Saving Service and the Revenue Cutter Service were done away with and they were brought together in the Coast Guard Service. The Coast Guard is an arm of the Navy during war. The Navy is called into active duty only during hostilities, and at other times they have only perfunctory duties to perform, but during every storm, every freeze, every shipwreck, and every disaster on any coast of the country the Coast Guard is called into active service. It is one service in the Government which stands out as being a clean, upright service which should command the respect and the support of every American citizen. [Applause.]

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10540, had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PARKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11022) to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter retired officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard shall be entitled to medical treatment at marine hospitals and out-patient offices of the Public Health Service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PARKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHICAGO & WESTERN INDIANA RAILROAD CO.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7191) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to convey certain land in Cook County, Ill., to the Chicago & Western Indiana Railroad Co., its successors or assigns, under certain conditions.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by the usual quitclaim deed to the Chicago & Western Indiana Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors or assigns, the present site of the master-track scale and test-car depot of the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce, in the clearing yard of the Belt Railway Co., of Chicago, more particularly described as follows:

"A tract of land in the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20, township 38 north, range 13 east of the third principal meridian, Cook County, Ill., bounded and described as follows:

the Belt Railway Co., of Chicago, become necessary for its own purposes, in which event the said Belt Railway Co., of Chicago, shall furnish to the United States of America, Department of Commerce, in lieu thereof, a suitable site elsewhere, the location thereof to be mutually agreed upon by the said Belt Railway Co., of Chicago, and the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce; and the Belt Railway Co., of Chicago, shall then, at its own sole cost and expense, erect upon the site so chosen a building and a foundation for the master-track scale equivalent to the master-track scale and test-car depot and foundation for the said master-track scale erected upon the above-described property, and shall move to said new building and install therein the master-track scale and all machinery appurtenant thereto, and shall deliver or cause to be delivered a deed conveying such land and building in fee simple to the United States of America, Department of Commerce, without cost to the United States, together with evidence of title to said land satisfactory to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PARKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8141) authorizing additional employees for the Federal Power Commission, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman withhold that until I may make a statement of about two minutes?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the question of consideration is going to be raised on this bill, and before it is raised, inasmuch as the question is not debatable, I have made this unanimous-consent request to make a short statement as to why the question of consideration is going to be raised.

This is a bill of very great importance. It is a measure that affects the functions and the duties of the Power Commission. The question of whether or not Congress had the power to delegate the authority that it did in the Power Commission act has been a mooted question ever since the law was enacted. It has never gotten up to a court of competent jurisdiction to pass upon it. This is one question involved, and is one reason we should be allowed to take some time to study the question.

This bill was a controversial bill in the committee. Many of us oppose its passage. In the first place, this bill was reported——

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am speaking under unanimous consent.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman said he was going to proceed under unanimous consent, but no request was submitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated he desired to proceed for two or three minutes by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAPES. Has the Chair put the question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, of course, is speaking by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am now speaking under a unanimous-consent request of the House and the gentleman from Michigan is out of order.

Mr. MAPES. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman from Michigan was paying very strict attention, and the gentleman from Texas rose and said he was going to proceed to talk by unanimous consent, and started in to talk without having the request put.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Texas proceeding for two minutes under unanimous consent?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman from Texas proceeding if the unanimous-consent request is put; but I think those who are in favor of the legislation should be allowed to make a statement of equal length, if the gentleman is going to raise the question of consideration of the legislation.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to find out the number of the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. H. R. 8141.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to couple with the request that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] be allowed to proceed for five minutes at the expiration of the time of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that following the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when interrupted, this bill was reported from the committee only Saturday. The report accompanying the bill was not available until after the House went into session to-day. This bill was reported without a hearing, except Mr. Merrill came up in executive session and made a short statement with reference to the bill. Therefore we have no record with reference to it.

This question of water power and the power and authority that Congress is justified in granting under the Constitution has never been settled. This bill ought not to come up to-day. It is hardly just to the Members of the House for a bill that has in it as far-reaching consequences as this to be taken up on such short notice. If the bill is brought to the floor of the House to-day, we are going to have an opportunity to test whether we believe what we have been saying. On both sides of this Chamber every week of the year gentlemen get up and talk about bureaus and commissions in Washington. They are opposed to bureaus and commissions in Washington as they are in favor of State rights, neither one of which is usually given any apparent consideration when the time comes for the creation of a new commission extending the power of existing conditions or the subject has in it the old doctrine of State rights.

This bill provides not that this commission shall draw its help, clerical and otherwise, from the three departments—War, Interior, and Agriculture—but it provides in the very body of the bill that this commission shall go outside of the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture and bring into the service of the Government whatever help it deems to be necessary to carry on the work.

Gentlemen who are in favor of the bill say that the Appropriations Committee will always have the power to limit the number of experts, engineers, and clerical help that will be brought in. But suppose they are allowed to go on and build up an organization and then come before the Committee on Appropriations and plead, as this report from the department does, for more men, that he has applications running into millions and millions of dollars piled up on his desk, seeking an outlet through the building of power plants, dams, and aids to navigation. You can see how easy it is under the very terms of this bill to build up a bureau as big as the Federal Trade Commission, as big as the Tariff Commission, yes, even as big as the powerful Interstate Commerce Commission itself.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Did I understand the gentleman correctly to say that the committee had held no hearings on this bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. No public hearings. They had Mr. Merrill before them in executive session. He made a short statement which to me was very unsatisfactory.

Mr. PARKER. If the gentleman will permit, I have in my hand the printed hearings on the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. When did they take place?

Mr. PARKER. Last Saturday.

Mr. RAYBURN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, there was a stenographer in the room, but that does not change the case. It was on last Friday and the bill was reported Saturday. The report did not come in here until the House met this morning and the membership has had no opportunity to acquaint themselves with the provisions of the bill. The bill is of far-reaching importance and the Members of the House ought not to be called upon to consider this bill to-day.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Texas has stated the matter absolutely correctly. The committee met on Friday and we had hearings on the bill, which are printed. A stenographer was present, and the bill was reported out on a roll call on Saturday. As far as the merits of the bill are concerned, we can discuss those when the bill is before the House.

Mr. McDUFFIE. When were the hearings printed, and when were they available?

Mr. PARKER. This morning.

Mr. McDUFFIE. We could not get a copy of the bill nor the report until this morning after the House met. We have had no opportunity to examine the provisions of the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does this bill do anything more than to assign employees to the Power Commission?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; a part of the money obtained from licenses that now goes into a separate fund will, under this bill or an amendment we will offer, go into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. According to my calendar this is Tuesday, but according to the gentleman's calendar it is Wednesday. How did this bill come up?

Mr. PARKER. By unanimous consent on yesterday.

Mr. ABERNETHY. At what time?

Mr. PARKER. Immediately after the reading of the Journal at the request of the majority leader, Mr. TILSON.

Mr. ABERNETHY. So to-day is Calendar Wednesday, legislatively speaking?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, there has been no undue haste in this matter. This matter has been before Congress for two or three years. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in the fore part of the session. It passed the Senate in the last Congress in the identical language in which Mr. BURTON introduced it in this Congress. So far as I can recall there was no substantial objection made against it.

What does it do? It makes possible the bringing to the Federal Power Commission, a great governmental agency, the transfer of men from other departments of the Government, instead of their mere temporary detail. The comptroller has prevented that. In addition to that, it also makes possible when necessary the employment of additional employees, subject, of course, to the appropriation that is available for that purpose. Those are the principal purposes and objects of the legislation.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Under the present law can not these additional experts or help needed by this commission be now detailed from the three departments connected with this commission?

Mr. NEWTON. As a practical matter, no. They can not transfer from the departments. They can only temporarily be detailed. The only employee that the Federal Power Commission has to-day is the executive secretary of the commission. Under those circumstances the commission is working under a handicap.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But he has been getting this assistance from those departments, has he not?

Mr. NEWTON. He has been getting it, to a limited extent, and in such a way that he is handicapped in carrying on the regulatory provisions of the Federal water power act.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman explain to us wherein he is so handicapped?

Mr. NEWTON. I have tried to explain that. In order to get help he must get it by temporary detail or assignment from the Departments of War, Agriculture, and the Interior. It comes out of the help that is there, and, of course, out of their appropriations. Under those circumstances, as a practical matter, the gentleman can appreciate how difficult it is for the Federal Power Commission to operate when, instead of going directly to the Budget, it must get its help from these departments. These men come on temporary detail. They are paid from departmental appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman can not raise that question in the House on Calendar Wednesday. Under the rule, in the consideration of a bill on the Union Calendar, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the question of consideration can be raised on Calendar Wednesday only in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Very well; I shall raise it in committee.

The SPEAKER. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8141) authorizing additional employees for the Federal Power Commission, and for other purposes, with Mr. HOOPER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Federal Power Commission may request the President of the United States to detail an officer or officers from the Corps of Engineers, or other branches of the United States Army, to serve the commission as engineer officer or officers, or in any other capacity, their duties to be prescribed by the commission; and such detail is hereby authorized, as well as the detail, assignment, or transfer to the commission of any other persons in or under the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture who are engaged in duties which are conferred upon the commission by the Federal water power act. In the performance of the duties imposed upon it by the Federal water power act, as hereby or hereafter amended, the commission shall utilize, in so far as practicable, the facilities and personnel of the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, and said departments are hereby authorized to utilize their facilities and personnel, civil and military, for said purposes, and to employ, subject to the civil service laws, additional personnel therefor when necessary. The commission is also authorized to employ, subject to the civil service laws, for such purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere such expert, technical, clerical, and other personnel as may, in addition to the personnel detailed or transferred from or employed in the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, as aforesaid, be necessary for the performance of said duties and to make other expenditures requisite and incident thereto. All such expenditures, including rent in the District of Columbia, payment for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, reimbursement of other Government departments or agencies for salaries or expenses incurred in the performance of work for the commission, necessary printing and binding, purchase of equipment, supplies, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and directories, all necessary expenditures for transportation and subsistence, including, in the discretion of the commission, a per diem of not exceeding $6 in lieu of subsistence incurred by its employees under its orders, in making any investigations or conducting field work, or upon official business outside of the District of Columbia, and away from their designated points of duty, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by a member or officer of the commission duly authorized for that purpose. In order to defray the expenses made necessary in the performance of the duties placed upon the commission and upon other Government departments or agencies under the Federal water power act, as hereby or hereafter amended, all charges collected from licenses under said act on and after January 1, 1928, for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of administration of said act and for recompensing it for the use of Government dams and structures and lands pertaining thereto, are hereby reserved as a special fund in the Treasury to be appropriated from time to time for the purposes specified herein; and the commission is hereby authorized, to the extent that moneys are so appropriated from said fund, to cause to be transferred on the books of the Treasury from such special fund to "Miscellaneous receipts," or to permanent and indefinite or other departmental appropriations or funds, such amounts as may be required to defray salaries or expenses hereafter paid or incurred by other Government departments or agencies in the performance of work for the commission.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk reports the committee amendments, I raise the question of consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee raises the question of consideration. The question is, Shall the committee consider the bill.

The question was taken; and the Chair having announced that he was in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 49, noes 68.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. PARKER and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 95.

The CHAIRMAN. So the committee decides to consider the bill. Under the rule the gentleman from New York is recognized for one hour and the gentleman from Texas for one hour.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that the action of the Committee of the Whole House must first be reported back to the House.

Mr. SNELL. Why should we do that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Where the question of consideration is raised in Committee of the Whole, I think the precedent is that the action of the committee, whether it be one of rejection or determination to consider, shall be reported back to the House.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not that automatic, and does not the committee automatically rise and report the matter to the House?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the point that I make, if I remember the precedent correctly.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee call the Chair's attention to the precedent? This is a matter that has not occurred since Speaker Clark's time, the Chair is informed.

Mr. MAPES rose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I am inclined to think, on glancing at the precedent, that it is against me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] is recognized for one hour and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] for one hour.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he begins?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, after having conceded that the precedent is against me it is with hesitation that I again raise the question of whether or not the committee should report back to the House. It is important that we have a correct ruling here. My attention has been directed to the language of the rule.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to protect my rights in the matter. I presume the gentleman is rising to a parliamentary inquiry. I yield for that purpose. I presume that I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The rights of the gentleman will be protected.

Mr. SNELL. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is a question of order. I read:

> The question of consideration may be raised on a bill on the House Calendar on Calendar Wednesday——

Mr. MAPES. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. From paragraph 875, page 398, of the Manual, which I hold in my hand. I read:

> The question of consideration may be raised on a bill on the House Calendar on Calendar Wednesday, even after one Wednesday has been devoted to its consideration, and the question of consideration may be raised in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union after the House has automatically resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a bill on the Union Calendar, but it is for the House to approve or reject the recommendation of the committee.

In this case that recommendation is that the bill be considered. Therefore, I respectfully submit that this matter should be automatically reported back to the House, and then the House has to pass upon the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order that it is too late for the gentleman to raise the question now; and if there is any doubt in the mind of the Chair about the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] has been recognized and has the floor. He yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] only to ask a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Minnesota can not be taken off his feet except with his own consent, and he does not consent to be taken off for any other purpose than that stated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think under the conditions that exist here that the gentleman's point of order is well taken, because, if my construction of this matter is correct, the Committee of the Whole is illegally considering the bill until the House ratifies the action of the committee in determining to consider it. The mere question of time is not involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, has the Chair read the ruling of Mr. Speaker Clark?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] desire to be heard?

Mr. MAPES. If the Chair has the ruling of Mr. Speaker Clark before him, I have no desire to be heard; but I desire to submit to the Chair that under the Calendar Wednesday rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar, and unless the committee decides not to consider the bill before it there is nothing for it to report back to the committee. There would not be any sense in the committee rising and reporting back to the House if it decides to go ahead and consider legislation as instructed under the rule by the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us see where that leads to under the Calendar Wednesday rule. The Speaker while in the chair, when I endeavored to raise the question of consideration in the House, held, and I think correctly held, that I could not raise it in the House, but it had to be raised in the Committee of the Whole, and in Committee of the Whole I did raise it. Now, the Committee of the Whole, not the House, voted that it would consider the bill. That being the situation, and if the reasoning for which the gentleman from Michigan is contending is correct, the House itself has absolutely no control over the Committee of the Whole, which can proceed independently of what the House might do.

Mr. SNELL. What control would the House have?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The control under the rule. But the gentleman must bear in mind that in the case of an ordinary bill, not coming up on Calendar Wednesday, the opportunity exists of raising the question of consideration in the House, and the House can act upon it. But on Calendar Wednesday under the automatic rule the Speaker holds, and holds correctly, that the question of consideration can not be first raised in the House, but must be raised in the Committee of the Whole. Now, the point is that if you hold it can be raised in the Committee of the Whole and the committee is not required to report its action back to the House in case of its determination to consider it, then you deprive the House of the opportunity to act upon the question of consideration.

Mr. SNELL. Are we not in the same situation as when in the Committee of the Whole a point of no quorum is raised? Then there is a call of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The cases are different. The question of a quorum is a mechanical thing. This is a question going to the very deeps of the rights of the House. It is a question of whether the House can have its will in the consideration of a bill or whether it is in control of the Committee of the Whole, which may be only 100 Members.

Mr. DENISON. In that case one Member can compel the committee to rise and report back to the House merely by raising the question of consideration.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That may be; but that is the trouble of the rule. It is important to preserve that right, even though it may be abused at times. It is the right of the House itself to say what it will have the Committee of the Whole consider.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, there is no provision in the rule which provides that the committee rise automatically, and, as the gentleman from Illinois has just pointed out, there is never an opportunity to have a vote in the House on a proposition coming up in the Committee of the Whole unless the committee by a majority vote takes affirmative action; that is, unless it adopts an amendment, not when it rejects one. Amendments, as the Chair well knows, introduced in the Committee of the Whole which are voted down never come before the House; the House never has an opportunity to express itself on those amendments. As the gentleman from Illinois has well stated, one man might in the Committee of the Whole, for dilatory purposes or for any purpose, raise the question of consideration on bills and have a vote in the House on the question if the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee should prevail. It would be ridiculous to have the committee automatically rise and require the House to vote upon the question of consideration under such circumstances. There is nothing in the rule to that effect. It is contrary to all common sense and it is contrary to the procedure of the House. When the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole it instructs the committee to consider the bill and when the committee decided to go ahead and to carry out that instruction, it seems to me it is perfectly ridiculous for it to arise until it has completed the consideration of the bill. It has nothing to recommend to the House except that the bill be considered, which the House has already instructed it to do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, let us see just what this is going to lead us into if the contention of the gentleman is sustained by the Chair. Fewer than a quorum of the Whole House have determined this question of consideration up to date. This question of consideration, under the rules of the House, is one of the well-recognized processes of legislation and one of the recognized steps toward the culmination of legislation. It is an ancient rule. The rule permitting the raising of the question of consideration began, I believe the Manual says, as far back as 1808. It has been a part of the rules of the House ever since that time and it is a part of the rules of practically every parliamentary body I know anything about.

Now, what have you? It is for the House to determine whether or not it will have consideration and not the Committee of the Whole.

As I say, I admit that under the wording of the Calendar Wednesday rule and following the precedents, the Speaker held correctly when he held I could not raise this question in the House in the first instance and sent it to the Committee of the Whole automatically to be raised there. But it having gone there and the Committee of the Whole having taken action, it must go back to the House if the House is to be regarded as the whole House, because, as I say, it was less than a quorum of the whole House, according to the vote in the Committee of the Whole of 96 and 95, that determined this question of consideration, and if the Chair sustains the contention of the gentleman from Michigan, you are depriving the House of its opportunity of action.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, whenever a proposition or motion comes before the House the question "Will the House now consider it?" may be raised by any Member, and thereupon action must be taken upon that question. (Rule XVI, clause 3, House Rules and Manual.)

That rule applies to Calendar Wednesday (House Manual, sec. 875). If a bill comes up on Calendar Wednesday which is on the House Calendar, the question of consideration may be immediately raised and it is determined in the House. It happens that if a bill is on the Union Calendar on Calendar Wednesday, the House automatically goes into the Committee of the Whole and then the question of consideration may be raised there, but it seems to me we should not change the general rule that the House should determine the matter of consideration eventually and finally.

It is not a good argument to say that any Member may raise that question in the Committee of the Whole. Certainly; and any Member may raise it in the House at any time on every bill that comes up for consideration in the House.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, the purpose of the Calendar Wednesday rule, when it was first adopted, was to enable committees that had legislation which they thought was important and which they could not bring up on regular legislative days because steering committees or some other organization might not think it desirable legislation. If the time on Calendar Wednesday can be frittered away in any such way as the Chair is asked to interpret this procedure now, it would destroy the original purpose of Calendar Wednesday and make it entirely ineffective.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In reply to that, I will say that if a majority of the House is not willing to take up a bill for consideration you are not frittering away the time of the committee that has the call, because the important thing to determine first is whether the House is willing to consider the legislation. If it is not, you will not have frittered away the whole day in considering the bill.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman. I want to suggest, along the line of the argument that has been made in reference to Calendar Wednesday, that every Member of this House knows that if a committee gets two Calendar Wednesdays in a Congress it is lucky. Now, under those circumstances, it seems to me there is a real reason for the rule that the House automatically goes into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of a bill on the Union Calendar, and that by reason of the Calendar Wednesday rule the right to pass on the question of consideration begins in the committee and ends in the committee, otherwise one whole day will be given up to a discussion of consideration and that would do away with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It may be said in reply that the only time that is lost is the time of taking the vote in committee. If the bill is on the House Calendar on Calendar Wednesday, the question of consideration may be raised and it is then determined in the House. The only time lost here is the necessary time for taking a vote in the committee and going back into the House for the purpose of reporting to the House what the action of the committee has been. There is no debate on the question of consideration and there is no time lost except that lost in taking the vote, and the question of consideration must be raised before the debate has begun on the merits of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOOPER). The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair realizes this is a somewhat novel question and the Chair has had no opportunity, except a very brief one, with precedents being placed in his hands that he has not had time thoroughly to digest, to consider the merits of the question. However, it seems to the Chair that the decision of Speaker Clark, found in the second volume of Cannon's Precedents, section 8084, ought to be controlling. Speaker Clark said:

> Secondly, the Chair thinks that in this case the motion ought to be put to the House, which is the greater body and the controlling body, as it takes 217 to make a quorum in the House, just as the House votes on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the committee reports back a bill with the recommendation that it lie on the table, or with the recommendation that the bill do not pass, or with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out or that everything after the enacting clause be stricken out. The committee has the right to report any one of these recommendations.

This may be coupled with the following, found in notes to the House rules, at page 398, section 875:

> The question of consideration may be raised on a bill on the House Calendar on Calendar Wednesday, even after one Wednesday has been devoted to its consideration (Speaker Cannon, 61st Cong., 3d sess., p. 294), and the question of consideration may be raised in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, after the House has automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider a bill on the Union Calendar, but it is for the House to approve or reject the recommendation of the committee. (Speaker Clark, April 22, 1914, p. 7100; Speaker GILLETT, October 1, 1919, p. 6212.)

The question seems to be a close one and the precedents are few in number, but the Chair realizing that a precedent is being made rules that the committee should rise and report back to the House the action of the committee agreeing to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, there were two points raised, and one of them was the question of the timeliness of the point of order that was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may appeal from the ruling of the Chair if he sees fit.

Mr. NEWTON. The Chair has not ruled on that point and that is the reason I am calling it to the Chair's attention.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINNOTT. What was the recommendation in the ruling from which the Chair quoted? Was not the decision in that case that the House do not consider?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I understand so, and that would present an entirely different question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels his ruling is clear on the point, and unless an appeal is taken the committee will automatically rise and report its action back to the House.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had before it the bill H. R. 8141, the question of consideration having been raised in the committee, the committee decided to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the action of the committee stand as the action of the House?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I will ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 155, not voting 105, as follows:

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the House listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. I do not think I was here when my name was called, but I came directly from my office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote "aye," but I was not in the House.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The House automatically resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HOOPER in the chair.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WELLER. Will the gentleman from Minnesota point out what differences there are between the existing law and this proposed measure?

Mr. NEWTON. I shall be glad to.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing unusual about this bill, whose consideration has been questioned in a rather unusual way. It is merely a measure that has been recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of War, who constitute the Federal Power Commission.

The bill was recommended by them in the last Congress. It passed the Senate in the last Congress and came over here so late that it failed to receive consideration in the House. The bill is merely in effect to permit the commission to add to its personnel in two ways. First, it gives them additional power in acquiring personnel from the Department of Agriculture, Department of the Interior, and the War Department. They have that power at the present time, but this adds to the power in that the details are not only temporary details and assignments but are transfers. Under the ruling of the Comptroller General made shortly after the water power bill became a law, no transfer was permissible. At the present time there is only one employee of the Federal Power Commission, and that is the secretary, Mr. Merrill. All the rest of the help that are acquired have to be temporarily detailed from the three executive departments.

When the water power act was passed Congress contemplated a development of the water-power resources of the country. That was the purpose and object of the legislation; that was the reason the joint committee spent months in considering it—and the result was the Federal Power Commission act.

Not only that, but they wanted to make possible a more rapid development of the use of the water-power resources; they wanted the development to go along so the rights of the public and the public interests would be promoted.

In order to do that they created the Federal Power Commission consisting of the three heads of the departments, the only employee being the executive secretary, and the other employees being obtained from the three departments. They have been doing their work, but as the work has progressed they have issued licenses for power sites, but it became perfectly apparent that they needed additional help; and they needed help that could function more effectively. The regulatory features of the water power act have been those that have received the least consideration, and that is what has led me to interest myself in the bringing to the consideration of this House the bill that is now before us. They have issued 290 licenses. There has not been any considerable delay in the issuance of licenses for power sites, but there has been very little work done in the regulating of rates and charges, the fixing of values, and the use of the regulatory power that the Federal Power Commission has in that respect.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. In fixing the amount of capital invested does the commission undertake to do that in cases where the State authorities do it?

Mr. NEWTON. Unless there is no State regulatory body and unless it is an interstate transaction.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is it not a fact that nearly every State in the Union has a regulatory body that is doing the very thing that the gentleman is seeking additional power to do?

Mr. NEWTON. I do not know as to every State. I know that there are States that do not have regulatory commissions so far as electric power is concerned, and I do know that three Cabinet officers have told this Congress in a report to this committee that they need this additional legislation in order to carry on these regulatory powers as Congress expected them to do.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Can the gentleman name any State which has not a regulatory body?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes; the State of Minnesota is one of them.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That does not go into the question of rates charged by an electric company?

Mr. NEWTON. They have no State regulatory commission so far as water power or electric energy is concerned.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman know of any other?

Mr. NEWTON. I know there are others.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. WELLER. Is it not the purpose of this bill merely to increase or give additional personnel to the Federal Power Commission rather than to change the policy of the existing law?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. WELLER. In other words, there is no change of existing law or of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. NEWTON. Absolutely none. There is no change in the regulatory duties of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. ARENTZ. Is it not necessary for the Federal Power Commission to determine the net cost of plants, to determine the method under which dams are constructed and plants erected, and have that information in the files of the commission so that at the end of a 50-year period, for instance, if the Government wishes to step in and recapture the plant, there would be some definite information to be had by the Government or by Congress or anyone who wanted to look into the matter?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes. The gentleman is correct in that, and in other instances that information should be available long before the expiration of the 50-year period.

Mr. ARENTZ. Surely.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell what means they have of getting help now to conduct this business?

Mr. NEWTON. Under the basic law they get all of their help from the War Department, the Interior Department, and the Agricultural Department, and they get that help by borrowing it from those departments. Of course, it was expected that those officers or employees would be assigned there, but as a matter of fact they are assigned only temporarily; there can not be what the comptroller calls a transfer.

Mr. CROSSER. And this is done with reluctance.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes. There is nothing permanent about it, and, as the gentleman has well said, it is done with a great deal of reluctance, because these employees are rated as employees of the respective departments. Of course, that being the case, and the work all being done for the Federal Power Commission, gentlemen can readily see the handicap that the commission is under all of the time in order to get a proper number of efficient personnel. The salaries of these detailed officers and employees comes out of the departmental appropriations.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. And it is getting new permanent officers rather than a transfer of personnel from the departments, is it not?

Mr. NEWTON. The bill authorizes new permanent employees.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. And that is where your problem is, is it not?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes. But it is expected that there will be transfers from these departments and that most of these employees will still be transferred; that they will acquire them by transfers from the departments on a more or less permanent status rather than on a temporary detail.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell us how many additional new employees will be required?

Mr. NEWTON. There are 33 borrowed employees in the employ of the Federal Power Commission to-day, and the executive secretary, appearing for the commission, said that in his judgment the work would require an increase in the force of from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. That would mean from 16 to 20 or 21 additional employees.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. To my mind it is not so much a matter of the number of employees as it is a matter of the right kind of employees in this sort of valuation, and whether these men will be able to analyze the figures of the expert accountants and these appraisers of plants under the supervision of the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. NEWTON. Any new employee would be selected, of course, under the terms of the civil service, just the way other employees are selected, say, for the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, or the other executive branches of the Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And they will have to know how to juggle figures if they are going to correctly interpret the appraisals that will be submitted.

Mr. NEWTON. The field work of the Federal Power Commission is now conducted just like the work here in Washington, entirely by the service of men from other departments. It is expected they will continue to make use of a temporary detail of employees from other departments in order to carry on the field work.

That can be done at less expense from out there on the field, and more conveniently, and those men can carry on that work, investigative work and otherwise. There is no thought and no intention whatever of changing from that. This is merely for the purpose of adding to the help that the commission should have if they are going to continue their work right here in Washington.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Why is it, or how is it, that the departments have on hand a lot of idle men available for this Federal Power Commission?

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman assumes that the departments have a lot of idle men that are available for the work of the commission. Personally I do not agree with the gentleman on that. I know of no idle men who can go on the commission and perform the kind of work that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says should be performed.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Then, if these additional men are not idle and are needed by the commission, why not also allocate to the Tariff Commission men from the departments to do the Tariff Commission's work?

Mr. NEWTON. That is what we expect to do.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I understood the gentleman said he would continue to borrow from the other departments.

Mr. NEWTON. No. We can now borrow on detail, but we propose to transfer some of them permanently. But that can not be done under the present law.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Are these employees found to be adverse to the commission's policy?

Mr. NEWTON. Oh, not at all.

Mr. ARENTZ. For instance, there is a fall on a certain river that can be used for power purposes. There may be need of that water also for irrigation purposes. We know that at times power and irrigation do not match up, because the water must be drawn out of the reservoir for irrigation, but you must have water for power at all times. The departments look into the facts and get the whole picture before them and present the facts to the Federal Power Commission. These men are there for that purpose, and without them the Power Commission could not function.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes. Here is the case. They are making use of them to-day, on temporary detail or in the field, in temporary exigencies for three or four or five or six days. That has to be continued. There is no thought of doing away with that or making these field men permanent. The idea is to have in Washington men to correlate this work, and where there is need of a permanent force to have that permanent force. That is the purpose of the legislation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If that is the purpose of the legislation, why not write it in the bill?

Mr. NEWTON. We have done that.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Have you not left it indefinite, and under this bill could not the commission employ as many field agents as they might wish? The purpose, in fact, as Mr. Merrill states, is to relieve their shortage in personnel, which relates to the work in Washington, and, as you have just stated that to be your understanding, why not limit the number they can employ to the number to be employed in Washington?

Mr. NEWTON. Well, the gentleman knows as the result of his very distinguished service here, both on the floor of this House and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations—the gentleman knows the difficulties of drawing up legislation in advance to meet contingencies that happen over a period of years. Legislation is generally drawn in general terms. It should be. Some discretion must be vested in the executive officers. Some discretion can be vested in them, and then as a check upon them we have the Budget, and then we have the Appropriations Committee of the House, and then we have Congress itself in control over the appropriations. Now, it seems to me that with a provision of this kind and with checks of that character it would be unwise to attempt to go to work and confine this strictly to Washington.

We have a very technical Comptroller General. Every Member of this House knows something of the very technical way in which he construes provisions of law from time to time. There is no use in running up against that. We have competent men on the commission, and we have a competent Budget Director, and a competent Committee on Appropriations, and a watchful Congress.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Can the gentleman tell us what the field work consists of?

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ] referred to it a moment ago. He is so much more familiar with it than I am that I will ask him to answer the question.

Mr. ARENTZ. An individual or a corporation comes to Washington and applies for a license to the Federal Power Commission. He must present to the Federal Power Commission a statement as to the kind of dam he is going to construct, whether or not he has had soundings made on that site, how long and how high the dam is to be, what is to be the cost, where the power plants are to be erected, and how much they will cost, where he is going to run his transmission lines, and how much it will cost, and approximately what the rates will be; and the men in the field must go over these matters item by item, and the men in the office must correlate these facts, and then, on the basis of that, a license is given to the individual or corporation and issued by the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. McDUFFIE. So I understand, but is not all of that field work done through the Corps of Engineers?

Mr. ARENTZ. Up to this time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And it is through the Corps of Engineers that the data is secured to which the gentleman has just referred?

Mr. ARENTZ. Up to this time I must admit that they pick from the Geological Survey an expert on geology and things of that sort; they pick a man from the War Department who knows something about the figures in connection with the construction of dams, and they pick a man from the Interior Department who knows something about water rights to determine whether or not the State has given a permit to this man or this corporation to construct a dam or for the use of that water within the State, because the Federal Power Commission is subordinate to the rights of a State in every case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Before the gentleman leaves the remarks of the gentleman from Nevada, will he permit a question?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Is it true that the procedure outlined by the gentleman from Nevada is that taken where the stream is a navigable stream? My understanding is that the surveys and all of this detailed work are carried on by the Corps of Engineers, and that after the facts are found a report is made to the Federal Power Commission, and that that commission simply reviews the facts upon the data that has been gathered by the scientific and trained technical men in the Corps of Engineers. Is that correct?

Mr. ARENTZ. I will say that the Colorado River is supposed to be navigable and it is considered a navigable stream; yet there can not be any rights established upon the Colorado River without first going to the State of Utah, if it is within the borders of that State, and without going to the State of Colorado, if it is within Colorado, or to Arizona or Nevada, and obtaining a permit from the State, and then the Federal Power Commission will issue a permit under the Federal power act.

Mr. NEWTON. Congress gave very important and very extensive powers to the Federal Power Commission. There was some criticism and objection raised to the granting of these powers in the first instance, and the Federal power act was the outcome of many years of deliberation and discussion on the floors of both Houses of Congress and throughout the country. However, Congress finally determined upon the policy, and that policy was the development of the water-power resources of the country through the supervision of this commission, through investigative work, licensing, and so on. In order to protect the public interest this commission was clothed with certain powers. It was given supervisory power over accounting, the valuing of the properties, and in certain instances, where there was no rate-regulating power or where interstate commerce in electrical energy was involved, they were given rate-regulatory power.

Now, three members of the Cabinet, the three members constituting this commission, have told Congress of the necessity of having these permanent employees. Their letter appears in the report, and in that letter they comment upon the granting of 290 licenses. They discuss the value of those licenses. They state that cases involving more than $100,000,000 are still pending. Ninety-two other projects have been constructed or placed under construction since the act was passed. These constructed projects involve costs of not less than $675,000,000. Projects under license and not yet under construction involve not less than $300,000,000 more. They say that out of this huge total the commission has reached settlement of values or costs aggregating $21,000,000, and has wholly or partially examined claims aggregating $100,000,000 more. This is the result of seven years' work of the commission's accountants. I quote:

> It is manifestly impossible to make any real headway or to give reasonable protection to the public interest under limitations now existing.

They then ask to have the limitations removed in reference to the personnel, which we have done in this bill, and that is all there is to this proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Minnesota says the commission has issued 290 licenses. Within how long a time?

Mr. NEWTON. Well, since some time in 1920, when the Federal power act became a law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman know how many within the last year?

Mr. NEWTON. I am sorry I can not answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. When the act was originally passed, Congress provided the means whereby the personnel could be provided by the three departments, to wit, the War, Interior, and Agriculture, the heads of which constitute the commission, and since the secretary, Mr. Merrill, stated that it is important to depart from that only to the extent of creating an additional force in the city of Washington, and only this force to the extent of adding 50 per cent more, why should we not place some limitation as to number of employees to be employed hereunder without leaving that indefinite?

Mr. NEWTON. Well, we can not look into the future and tell anything about just how many employees will be needed. The gentleman has far less confidence in the Budget and in his own committee than I have. I am willing to trust it to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I suggest this to the gentleman: Mr. BECK, a constitutional lawyer, suggested to the committee that the constitutionality of this act has been questioned on many occasions and yet it has never found its way into any court where that question could be passed on, and it seems to me, in view of that situation, we should be slow to make so broad an amendment to the original act and leave it indefinite as to the additional number of personnel they may have, both in the field and in Washington. The original act undertook, in a wise way I think, to curb that.

Mr. NEWTON. Well, of course, that goes to a mere detail of the bill. I have been trying to direct my remarks to the general principles of the bill. However, it seems to me there is no occasion for making an exception in this case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the consideration of this bill. I am absolutely opposed to its provisions. It is another establishment or enlargement of a subdivision of the Government against which we almost universally rail and which we almost generally, inconsistently, vote for when they come up. I am reminded of a debate which took place seven or eight years ago, or perhaps longer, when the Children's Bureau bill was under consideration and an appropriation was made for that subdivision of $12,000, and it was written into the bill that the personnel should be so many and the appropriation should never exceed this amount. The last time I had occasion to look up the appropriation for the Children's Bureau I believe it was about $1,500,000.

If we are going to stop these bureaus, we can not do it by adding to the personnel. We have got to make a start somewhere, and I have failed to see any indications, at least for the last five or six years, where we have tried to stop establishing or restricting bureaus.

We are just as inconsistent as the gentleman from Minnesota, for about two or three weeks ago he stood on this floor and expressed his dissatisfaction, his disbelief, and his distrust of certain bureaus or of certain divisions of the Government in opposition to one bill, and then to-day he reverses himself and advocates that very thing.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would advise the gentleman that if the State of Minnesota does not at the present time have a public utility board or commission, he should bend his energies toward having one established in that State, and let Minnesota take care of its own water power rather than placing the control of such power here in the city of Washington.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he did not introduce this bill. He is merely——

Mr. UNDERHILL. An advocate of it.

Mr. NEWTON (continuing). He is merely one member of the committee that has reported the bill, and he mentioned his State in answer to an inquiry. His State has not asked for this legislation, but his State wants adequate legislation for the benefit of the entire country, as the gentleman's State should want it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I simply drew attention to the inconsistency of the gentleman's position of a short time ago and his position to-day.

Let me point out one thing in this bill, and then I am through. This ought to be enough to defeat it if nothing else.

On page 2 of the bill, beginning at line 19, it provides:

> All such expenditures, including rent in the District of Columbia, payment for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, reimbursement of other Government departments or agencies for salaries or expenses incurred in the performance of work for the commission, necessary printing and binding, purchase of equipment, supplies, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and directories, all necessary expenditures for transportation and subsistence, including, in the discretion of the commission, a per diem of not exceeding $6 in lieu of subsistence incurred by its employees under its orders, in making any investigations or conducting field work, or upon official business outside of the District of Columbia, and away from their designated points of duty, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by a member or officer of the commission duly authorized for that purpose.

I do not know but what this is subject to a point of order. It surely is an appropriation by indirection, and this committee has no power to make appropriations.

I also question the constitutionality of the whole act establishing this board, and if I had the money and were engaged in hydroelectric work as a private individual, I would carry this case to the Supreme Court. It is a direct interference of private initiative, with private endeavor, and with the development of hydroelectric power throughout this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, if there is really a valid objection to the Federal Power Commission, we ought to have the frankness and the courage to abolish it at once. If it has justified its existence, as I think it has, then let us give it adequate personnel to do the business that has been assigned to it by law. One of the two things ought to be done. [Applause.]

For my part I think the best thing we could do would be to repeal that part of the law providing for the taking of men from the War Department, from the Department of Agriculture, and from the Interior Department and require the commission to employ its own force, so there will be no doubt as to what is the actual cost of the operation of the Water Power Commission. Moreover, what is far more important to me, it would do away with the excuse which the present plan of furnishing help to the commission gives the War Department for employing large numbers of additional officers, more than they can justify for military purposes, in assigning their officers to the work of the Federal Water Power Commission. Those who were inveighing the other day against militarism in all of its forms ought to see very clearly that we give a very good excuse for enlarging the military force by this plan of borrowing men for civil departments of Government from the War Department. I would take that excuse away from them as quickly as possible if I had the power to do so.

Let us give this agency its own corps of employees and make such employees entirely responsible to the Federal Water Power Commission and to no one else. Now, as to the proposal to limit by guesswork the number of employees the commission should employ: Must we stipulate that one dozen or a dozen and a half clerks or stenographers must suffice for the commission's work, the extent of which work we know nothing about at the present time? It seems to me farcical to talk about limiting the number of employees we must have for the commission until the extent of the work, when properly done, has become better known.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. As an indication of the necessity for these men, we can cite the fact that electrical development has been so extensive during the past eight years that the normal advance or increased consumption of coal has been cut 200,000,000 tons a year through the use of electricity, and it is because of this fact that we need these men to correlate and supervise these permits and licenses.

Mr. CROSSER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. And then they ask Congress to establish another bureau or board to investigate the coal business.

Mr. CROSSER. That has nothing to do with the question before the House.

Mr. MERRITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. MERRITT. Is it not true that the expenses of this additional help will all be met by the payment of fees?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes. As a matter of fact, there is much more money received by the commission than is necessary to pay its expenses.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman think that the receipts of the commission will be adequate to take care of this additional personnel?

Mr. CROSSER. Much more than adequate. I think that if the additional personnel is provided, those who procure the water power will pay much more than is needed to pay the personnel.

Mr. BURTON. Will it not be true if the bill passes for this additional help that the receipts now amounting to $235,000 will be greatly increased?

Mr. CROSSER. Absolutely.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is there any department of the Government that takes care of itself?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes; this commission which we are discussing, does so.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I would like to see one.

Mr. CROSSER. It seems to be assumed that if we pass this bill it will allow the commission to put their hands into the Treasury to take whatever they desire. Nothing of the kind is possible. They can not employ a single man for the Water Power Commission without coming to the Appropriations Committee for an appropriation to employ that help. Why talk about running away with the Treasury when all we propose is to enable the commission to apply in a legal way to the Appropriations Committee for the necessary funds. The Appropriations Committee, in the first place, and then the House has complete control of the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, until there has been a clarification either by additional legislation or court construction of the respective powers and rights of the States and the Federal Government with reference to the tremendously important question of hydroelectric power, I am unwilling to go further than we have gone already in the building up and strengthening of the Federal Water Power Bureau.

I think all who have given this question attention are aware of the fact that the state of the law touching water power is in a very great confusion. There is in the minds of many of the most eminent lawyers of the United States very grave doubt as to the constitutionality of some of the powers undertaken to be granted by the Federal water power act. From time to time, beginning in the last session of Congress, and upon two or three occasions at this session, I have placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, by the consent of the House, the production of other minds on this subject. In the last Congress on the 21st of February, 1927, I inserted in the RECORD a most interesting document which grew out of a situation that developed in the State of New York. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., pt. 4, vol. 68, pp. 4372 et seq.)

The State of New York undertook to challenge in the Supreme Court of the United States the exercise of certain powers that it had been attempted to confer by the Congress upon the Federal Power Commission in the Federal water power act.

I have not time to go into the details and can only sketch what happened. In an answer filed the Federal Power Commission made such intimations of concession as that the authorities of the State of New York sought a conference with it. That conference was had and the minutes of the conference were kept. There was reached there, not a personal agreement, because they were perhaps not in a situation to reach an agreement, but there was such an interchange of thought and the minds of the State authorities and the commission were so disclosed to each other as that it appeared there was no kind of controversy which could be pressed by the State before the Supreme Court in the suit.

In other words, it would have amounted to a moot case. And so the State of New York either dropped its suit or merely let it stand on the docket without action.

The practical effect of it was that the Federal Power Commission virtually conceded all that was being claimed in the way of law by the authorities in the State of New York.

Now there are numerous other States greatly interested in having the law clarified. My own State of Tennessee probably has the greatest water-power possibilities of any single State in the Union upon its many streams.

Not very long since I put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an order of our State public utilities commission. Subsequently thereto I put a letter from that public utility commission bearing upon some phases of this question in the RECORD. It is in a way the outstanding question in the State of Tennessee. The public utilities commission is asserting—I do not stop to argue whether right or wrong, they are asserting certain rights which they claim for the State—and I submit that it is extremely important that certain portions of the Federal power act should be clarified. I have introduced a bill that is before the honorable committee from which this measure comes designed to clarify the situation and make clear what are the rights of the Federal Government and the States in this important matter.

The Supreme Court of the United States—I think last May—delivered the decision in the case of the Fox River Paper Co. against the State of Wisconsin, in which that court went further at least than it had ever gone before, because, doubtless, this is the first time that it ever had occasion to go that far in upholding certain claims of the State in regard to the utilization of power on a navigable stream. There has been much confusion growing out of the question of navigation and the question of power. I may be in error about it, but so far as I am concerned, I am freely of the opinion that in the water power act certain things are attempted to be done under the guise of navigation that the courts will not uphold if the question can ever come squarely before them. I believe that one of the very important things that this Congress could perform would be to make another study of this water-power question, and in connection with this bill which is presented, and to which I have referred, undertake to clarify this language and let us know what the respective rights of States and the Federal Government are. There is now conflict between some of the State authorities and the Federal Power Commission which is retarding development, and it is extremely important that this clarification should come about. I regard that as of infinitely more importance to receive the attention of Congress now than is the mere matter of dealing with a personnel down here, and building up a bureau. We all know how bureaus grow.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee think it is more important that it should receive the attention of the courts than the attention of Congress?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. The Congress can not settle the legal question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I think Congress can clarify the situation through the bill which I introduced, or through some other bill. Here is the difficulty. I do not know how you can draw the issues so as to get a clear-cut decision from the courts on some of these questions, because the Federal Power Commission is not positively asserting its authority in all instances in such a way as to enable one who might desire to enjoin the commission to make an issue with them. That was exactly the case which existed in New York. It will be of interest to Members to read that complete record in the RECORD of the last Congress.

Mr. DENISON. Has not the Water Power Commission conferred certain rights upon companies or persons seeking to use water power?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They have never gone to the point in any of the permits granted of fixing conditions that would bring about the controversy with State authorities, so far as I am advised.

Mr. DENISON. Could not the States themselves grant certain water powers which would conflict with the Federal law, and would not that raise the Federal question then?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That might be done; but here is the difficulty about it: The permit would be granted to a private individual or to a corporation, and there is a practical difficulty of getting it into the courts. It costs money to build these public power projects. Those who desire to engage in that field of enterprise must have a large amount of capital. They are unwilling to proceed to construct a dam where it might be questionable as to what power or authority the Federal Government has, merely upon a State permit, and on the other hand they hesitate even with a Federal permit to risk their money without having a State permit. Out of that grows confusion, which, as I say, I think could be clarified in a large degree by some such legislation as that proposed in the bill which I introduced.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And in that very case to which the gentleman referred the secretary of the commission admits that the power to recapture which is written into the bill is intended so that the National Government might act as trustee for the State government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I so understand.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And surely if language is so ambiguous as that legislation is important to clarify it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the gentleman knows that there is a great deal of doubt in the minds of many as to the constitutionality of the recapture clause itself.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Could not the constitutional question be raised as between the right of the State and the Federal Government in the matter of rentals or royalties charged for the use of the power in the navigable streams?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the difficulty is that the practical situation has never arisen.

Mr. SINNOTT. They have not exacted any rentals or royalties?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not so far as my knowledge goes; that is, in such a way as has brought on a conflict with the State authorities, and this state of affairs is retarding development. The indisposition of capital to plunge into a project which means a lawsuit is well known. We are all familiar with the expression about hesitating to buy a lawsuit.

Mr. SINNOTT. If the rentals that the water-power company has to pay are transferred in the rate as a burden upon the users of electricity, the State would then surely have a justiciable question with which to go into court in resisting an additional rental on the users.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Imposed by the Federal Government?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; imposed by the water-power company. Because they are seeking to grant further those rentals to the users.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, heaven oftentimes sends us a friend, one whose friendship is worth the keeping. For a quarter of a century I have enjoyed that sort of friendship with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MARTIN MADDEN. [Applause.] During that period of service I have never known a more useful man to the country than he, and it is my wish upon this, his seventy-third birthday, that he may be permitted to live and serve his country for many, many more years, and until God sends him word that his great work is completed. We must not lose his helping hand. The country can not afford to lose his commanding service. [Applause.] A minute is not long enough in which to speak of MARTIN MADDEN. I could speak of him for an hour and then not tell you of his many virtues. I have known times when weaker men would have been tempted to yield, when he has stood with the firmness of a great rock. This man of honor has never had his motives questioned; he has never had his integrity called in dispute. Insincerity has no place in his life. He has never spitefully treated any man in this House. He has opposed many things that we would like to have had done, but he has always given us a good reason for his opposition. He has always stood for the good of this Nation, and it stands with him as his best friend. I repeat what I said, long may he live and serve in this House as a guiding hand to the affairs of this great Government of ours. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was a Member of this House when the original water power act was passed. I was in favor of that act at that time. I am in favor of it now. I think it was a step in the right direction in helping to form a national water-power policy.

I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] has stated the situation correctly, perhaps, when he said there was nothing in this bill that really changed the general water-power policy of the country. I do not think there is, but there is some language in this bill that materially affects the policy adopted by Congress at that time as to the administration of the act. I remember very well the debate on this proposition, and it was almost the unanimous opinion of all the Members of this House that, although we had set up a water-power commission, we would not set up an independent bureau which could have numberless employees and spread throughout the whole country.

Now, the only proposition that I oppose in the present bill is contained in a few words here, and unless you give them close attention you will fail to perceive the fact that they would change the entire policy of this Government, in administration of the act, in that we were not going to set up an independent bureau. It was provided at that time, as has been stated, that the Departments of Agriculture, War, and Interior would furnish the clerical part that was necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. The War Department, of course, has furnished all the engineers. So far as I know, there is absolutely no complaint on the part of the commission in regard to the service it has received along this line. The only complaint that has been made has been made by the executive officer of this commission. He has made some statements to the effect that he was behind in the accounting work, but I can not find that he has made any request of these various departments to furnish those men to do that accounting. If we adopt this measure exactly as it is written, it is going to give power to the Water Power Commission to establish a new bureau for themselves, and it is absolutely limitless, and not only applies to the District of Columbia but elsewhere in the United States.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman says the bill is "limitless." Has the gentleman no confidence in the Bureau of the Budget and the House committees?

Mr. SNELL. Under this bill you will grant authority to these people to start a bureau, and I am opposed to that provision of the bill. I want to do everything in my power to help them to function and do the work intended, but I am opposed to their starting a new bureau, because it can be just as well taken care of in another way.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman will appreciate the fact that the language used here is the language used in other acts in applying the personnel to other agencies of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. I know; but this was a definite policy adopted at that time, that we were not going to set up an independent bureau, and the gentleman knows that very well. So that it is not on a par with other propositions in connection with other bureaus of the Government.

Mr. NEWTON. I know; but when the commission, which is composed of three Cabinet officers, feel that this change should be made in the law in order that they may better carry on their duties, does not the gnetleman think that is a substantial recommendation?

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Minnesota knows as well as I do that the three Cabinet officers are not giving any attention whatever to this matter. It is left almost entirely to the executive officer. If the gentleman will refer to his own question when Mr. Merrill was before the committee, he will find that it was this:

> What is the change in the law?

And Mr. Merrill said:

> There are practically no changes in the law.

Mr. NEWTON. That is true.

Mr. SNELL. If you adopt this bill as it is written, and leave it to the discretion of the Federal Power Commission, he can build up a bureau of his own, and there is nothing to prevent it, and I think that is a very important change in the present law and the gentleman knew it.

Mr. NEWTON. He will be subject to the Budget and to the Committee on Appropriations and to Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Everybody has to get an authorization, but after the authorization is given, then they come up and say, "We have the authorization, and recommend this"; and, of course, the Committee on Appropriations are of opinion that so long as Congress authorized this, they must appropriate for it.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman wants this regulatory work to go on? He is in favor of that?

Mr. SNELL. I am.

Mr. NEWTON. They are not carrying on that work to-day.

Mr. SNELL. The reason for it is that they have not requested the departments to furnish these men.

Mr. NEWTON. Why not have them come directly to Congress?

Mr. SNELL. I think it is taking an entirely different step from that contemplated when we originally established this act. Congress then went on record as opposed to establishing a new bureau there. But if Congress wants to turn around and establish an unlimited bureau, then it is all right.

Mr. NEWTON. It is not an independent commission when it is composed entirely of Cabinet officers.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. There can be no question about what the gentleman has mentioned as having been in the mind of Congress in establishing this bureau. If relief should be given, it should be limited.

Here is what Mr. Merrill said to the committee:

> We have a personnel now, technical and clerical, of 34. It probably will require a 50 to 75 per cent increase in number of personnel to handle the work that we have.

Mr. SNELL. And this bill makes provision that if they do not have them at the present time they can call on these three departments when necessary.

What I want to do is to offer an amendment on page 2, line 6, striking out the words "in so far as practicable." That will leave the law as it is at the present time, that they shall utilize the facilities and personnel of the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture. In line 14 I want to strike out the words "and elsewhere." I am absolutely opposed to their building up a bureau in any part of the United States without limit. At the present time representatives of the War Department, the Agricultural Department, and the Department of the Interior are located in these various parts of the United States. They can use them in work of this kind whenever necessary, but if you leave it to the commission to do as they see fit about it, Members of the House well know that before another year has gone by they will have a big bureau established and they will call upon Congress to appropriate for it.

I hope the committee will join with me in adopting the amendments I have suggested. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE].

Mr. MCDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not profess to be a profound constitutional lawyer, but I take it that those gentlemen who have studied this power act of 1920 are correct in suggesting that its constitutionality is a grave and mooted question. If that be true, the suggestions of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] should find favor in the minds of the entire membership of the House. We should not proceed now, with that act in its present questionable position, according to the views of many great lawyers, by this bill to build up another large bureau for its adminstration. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and I go a little bit further, far enough to say that under the language of this bill this chief clerk of the Power Commission could build up an organization as large as the Interstate Commerce Commission.

For two or three years, at least, this clerk of the Power Commission has attempted to get such legislation as this passed through the Congress. He was before the Rivers and Harbors Committee with a similar suggestion, and went to the Senate with this proposal. Who is behind this bill other than the clerk of the Power Commission? Oh, you read a letter signed by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, but who wrote that letter? You gentlemen know; as Mr. SNELL has said, of course those Cabinet officers do not know a thing in the world about the working of this commission. They have not the time to study the details of the acts and doings of the commission. Therefore the urge for this legislation comes from this one man, Merrill, who has for some time tried to break the legal bands now preventing him from building up his organization and which is keeping him from expanding his office into a great bureau dealing, as it does, with problems involving the expenditure of millions of dollars. Necessarily he wants his own organization to grow and become larger and more important in the affairs of this Government.

Now, one more thing. If you will read the language of the power commission act, you will find it provides that the commission can make surveys for power development. It has the authority to do that.

Several years ago, when an effort was made to have the United States engineers study the possibilities of the navigable streams of this country and their tributaries for power, navigation, and flood control, we find this same clerk, Mr. Merrill, urging that the Power Commission itself make these surveys as to power, and before the Rivers and Harbors Committee he has suggested almost identical language with that proposed in this bill.

I will not criticize the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], who is a lovable man and a splendid, upstanding statesman; but, all of a sudden, almost overnight, what do we find? The committee holding hearings quickly, with only one witness—the Power Commission, who is Mr. Merrill himself—urging the very thing that Mr. Merrill has been urging for several years before this Congress, asking authority to build up a great bureau in this Government.

This Congress authorized a study of the navigable streams of this country for power and other development by the United States engineers. It is written into the law by the last rivers and harbors act. We appropriated the other day $2,000,000 to begin a study of these streams by the United States engineers. We should not grant the authority you are proposing to give Mr. Merrill under this act. It is all well enough for the gentleman from Minnesota and others to say there is no thought of expanding or changing policies; that there is no thought of having additional experts in the field; but if we give the Power Commission, Mr. Merrill, this authority, we will most likely have duplication of authority in making the most important surveys ever authorized by the Congress of America. This bill should not pass. There is no need for it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELSH].

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I want to register my protest against voting power of this kind to a bureau head where the only protection the public has is the good faith of a public officer. I take this position without wishing to cast any reflection upon the gentleman who now occupies the office in question.

We are asked here to vote power to appoint ad libitum, without any restraint, any number of employees for this bureau. And who are these employees to be? They are to be men chosen under the civil service law.

We have in this country to-day the great power industry of the Nation striving to expand and develop that great asset which the Lord has given us, and we are now voting to place a limitation upon these activities, and that limitation is to be decided by men who pass a civil-service examination. And what kind of men are we going to get to take this civil-service examination? Men who probably could not get a job anywhere in the United States with a corporation that would pay them what the Federal Government will pay them. Yet this is the type of men in whom you are reposing this great authority. I say that advisedly, because when they start to function their reports on their investigations will be considered official, and upon those reports and the information which they contain the policy of the commission as to the power industry will be predicated.

Members of the committee, I hope we will see just how far we are going in this hasty legislation. I voted against the consideration of the bill at this time because I did not think it was proper to hurriedly bring it forward and practically decide the fate of a great industry of this Nation by a snap judgment of this kind, and I hope we will vote down the proposed legislation.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. In other words, we are in such a hurry that we made Wednesday Tuesday, or, rather, we made Tuesday Wednesday.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. We have changed the clock, and now we are changing the calendar.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think that is a fair statement.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I did not yield, and I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. ABERNETHY. This is Tuesday, and we are supposed to be considering Calendar Wednesday legislation, and is not that jumping up a day?

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman ought to be fair in making such a statement. In the first place, the Committee on Appropriations said that it could not report the appropriation bill for the Navy until to-morrow, and it was at our request that the leader of the House requested a transfer of Calendar Wednesday business to Tuesday, and I do not think the gentleman ought to let the statement he made stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one more minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I want to call attention in this moment to the fact that we are placing the supervision and control over the water-power activities of this Nation for perhaps the next 25 years in the hands of men whom the power corporations themselves would not employ to carry on their own activities, and I do not think we want to do this.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. How are we changing the present law in any way?

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Under the present law, as I understand it, these employees are not subject to the civil service.

Mr. PARKER. Oh, absolutely, yes.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. These new men?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. No; the new men are not provided for in the present law, but we have men in the department now that you are evidently not satisfied with or you probably can not control—I am using the pronoun "you" in a relative sense—and you want to get a class of employees who probably will have no vision and small ability, but who will be able to pass a fine civil-service examination, and these are to be the men who will shape the policies and destinies of these great enterprises. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I confess that I really have but little stomach for this kind of effort. I used to speak against these measures in the House hoping that, although it would fall on deaf ears here, it would be noted in another body. Recent experiences have convinced me that such a hope is no longer justified.

Efforts against such measures are wasted. We bring these measures here, Members do not know anything about them, they are highly technical and hard to see through, they are railroaded through committees, they come here on the floor, there are very few Members present, nobody hears what is said, nobody pays any attention to what is said, Members go ahead and follow the committee, a majority is on one side and a minority on the other, and what is it all about anyhow? [Laughter and applause.] As I said here once before, of course, the result is bound to be wrong.

This is another typical bill such as I vainly spoke against a couple of weeks ago. It originated in a bureau. I did not see it written; I was not there. But I think I know enough about how such things are done to know that Mr. Merrill, the secretary of the commission, wrote the bill. The members of the commission are very busy department heads. They have no time to spare to such matters. In substance and in effect, Mr. Merrill is the commission. He wrote the bill. He handed it to somebody to introduce. It has been in previous Congresses. It is again here in this Congress. He pushed the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and insisted that some action be taken. The chairman referred the bill to the Power Commission for opinion, and so it went back into Mr. Merrill's hands and Mr. Merrill wrote the report of the Power Commission and sent it up recommending that his bill be passed. [Laughter.]

Then Mr. Merrill came before the committee when the chairman, in his generosity, had yielded to his importunities, and agreed to hold a hearing. The members of the committee had no notice that the hearing would be held. We had no opportunity to study the bill. We had no familiarity with the subject. Many of us had never read the power act. We were wholly unprepared, and there, in just a few minutes, with only one witness present, to wit, Mr. Merrill, testifying in behalf of his own bill, all that was said upon the subject was said. Nobody else was heard. No adversary interest had any opportunity to criticize.

And behold, when Mr. Merrill had finished what he had to say in perhaps 30 minutes or less, the chairman said, "Well, now, what shall we do with the bill? All those in favor of the bill," and started to put the vote right then. I expostulated and remonstrated gently with the chairman, and said, "Mr. Chairman, are we not to consider the bill in committee at all?" The chairman replied, "Oh, no; let us take a vote on it. We want to get something on the calendar for next Wednesday. That is our day in the House." Far better be it to present a bad piece of legislation than to have none at all. Let us have a bill to show we are doing something. [Laughter.]

I again pleaded with him for a little time for consideration. I protested and objected in my plaintive way; all in vain. I am an unpopular member of the committee, and it is entirely futile for me to try to get anything done on my initiative. I had hoped I might be able to get some other member of the committee to see a light. I knew it was an important matter of legislation, and that we ought to give it some real consideration. Finally, in despair, I looked up at the clock and saw that it was 12 o'clock, and so, grasping at the last straw, I said, "Mr. Chairman, the House is in session and the committee has no right to sit. I make a point of order." Thus it happened that I played the trump card, and so we got a little time until the next day. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is discussing matters which took place in the committee.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does not the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] want to know the truth? Is the gentleman unwilling to learn how this bill got through the committee? I know it is out of order, but I would like to finish with the story. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCLAUGHLIN). The gentleman from Alabama knows the rule.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I know the rule. So I must shut off the light I was shedding on the operations of the committee. [Laughter.] I must omit to tell you what actually took place. But let me lift the curtain and let my imagination come into play. Let me imagine that the chairman was not satisfied with what happened the day before and that the next morning he brought in the Secretary of War, Secretary of Agriculture, and somebody else to expound the bill. Oh, no! But the same faithful and dependable witness, Mr. Merrill, who could be relied upon to support his own bill. So we had another round on it. That was all there was. We never gave the bill the consideration which any measure was entitled to.

That was on Saturday, yet the report on the bill was not available until we met this morning. The hearings have not been read even by any member of the committee because they were not available until we came into the House to-day.

Why rush this bill through? What is the reason? Who is back of it? "Oh, we must have something to do on Calendar Wednesday." It would not do for a great committee like the Interstate Commerce Committee to say, "Mr. Speaker, we have nothing to present; we must be passed." [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Has not that committee some coal bills that it could report out?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, yes; we have bushels of bills—mostly bad—before our committee. I do not know, but I had about as leave take up the time with this kind of a bill as others which may be worse.

Now, by reading the bill you would never realize that it was an amendment to the water power act. You will not get that out of it. The chief function of Congress, as it seems, is to pass bills at the behest of bureaucrats, to further develop their activities, to increase their authority, to extend their powers, and, of course, to give them more pay and more influence. Sometimes it is felt necessary when Congress is to perform this important function—it is felt that it would not be expedient to come squarely up to the face of Congress to put the bridle on. So they slip up "on the blind side," twist their fingers in our forelock, and the first thing we know we are haltered and tied. [Laughter.]

In a measure of this kind they do not usually disclose their full purpose. They do not tell us what is now the law nor exactly what they are trying to do.

Now, this bill, though carefully disguised, is really an amendment to the water power act. I want to read a little of that act.

SEC. 2. That the commission shall appoint an executive secretary, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, and prescribe his duties, and the commission may request the President of the United States to detail an officer from the United States Engineer Corps to serve the commission as an engineer officer, his duties to be prescribed by the commission.

The work of the commission shall be performed by and through the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, and their engineering, technical, clerical, and other personnel except as may be otherwise provided by law.

Take note that the commission has no staff of its own, but is required to use the personnel of the departments named. That is the law as it stands now. As the law will stand, with this bill passed, that provision will be repealed. Instead of a personnel belonging to those three departments doing the work of the Federal Power Commission, we will have a separate and independent bureau with its own staff and its own officers. And I venture to say that there are few bureaus which will enjoy the powers that this bureau will have when this bill becomes a law. Beginning with line 11, page 2, the bill provides:

The commission is also authorized to employ, subject to the civil service laws, for such purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere such experts, technical, clerical, and other personnel as may, in addition to the personnel detailed or transferred from or employed in the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, as aforesaid, be necessary for the performance of said duties and to make other expenditures requisite and incident thereto.

That will be the scope of the staff of this bureau when once this bill is passed.

I invite Members to read the part of the bill that is stricken out by the committee. Oh, the committee did have some little gumption. They did not exactly swallow the bill like a trout swallows an artificial fly. Beginning on line 10, page 3, of the bill, they struck out that provision which converted all of the revenues of the power commission into a separate fund in the Treasury. Note that clause carefully. There was created by that part of the bill, as it came to the committee, a separate fund in the Treasury, and the commission was authorized by the part of the bill beginning on line 19, page 2, to use that fund in the payment of the expenses of its operations. I read a few moments ago a clause from the bill beginning on line 11, page 2. Now, skipping now to line 17, page 2, after providing for the payment of this technical staff, the bill provides in line 18—and to make other expenditures requisite and incident thereto.

Then it proceeds to provide—

All such expenditures, including rent in the District of Columbia, payment for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, reimbursement of other Government departments or agencies for salaries or expenses incurred in the performance of work for the commission, necessary printing and binding, purchase of equipment, supplies, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and directories, all necessary expenditures for transportation and subsistence, including, in the discretion of the commission, a per diem of not exceeding $6 in lieu of subsistence incurred by its employees under its orders, in making any investigations or conducting field work, or upon official business outside of the District of Columbia, and away from their designated points of duty, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by a member or officer of the commission duly authorized for that purpose.

Take note of just what the provisions of the bill were. By the clause beginning with line 10, page 3, a separate fund was created and placed in the Treasury to the credit of the commission, and here in this clause is an authorization for the commission to make payments from that fund on presentation of vouchers. I submit that the real purpose and intent of the bill as presented to the committee was to evade the law, and to permit these payments to be made without the authorization of Congress.

That was the real purpose of it. Whether it would have had that effect I very much doubt, but it was so constructed as to eliminate the Committee on Appropriations entirely out of the picture. Nowhere in the bill is it said that these expenditures shall be "authorized," but it does say that they shall be paid, and be paid from a certain fund. What was that for?

Had the bill been drafted by an ordinary Member of Congress, I should think that it was just merely a mistake, an evidence of ignorance, but the bill was written by somebody who wrote it very carefully and designedly. Every clause in it was put in there for a purpose. For what purpose was that clause put in if not to authorize the commission to use this special fund for the purpose of carrying on its activities?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I propose to offer an amendment which will compel these people to come in and review and state all of their activities to the Committee on Appropriations before they get any money in the future if the bill should become a law.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not doubt that this bill is susceptible of amendments to be offered by patriotic gentlemen which would remove a great many stingers that are now in it. Let me suggest to all of you that you examine it with the very greatest care and pluck out these jokers wherever possible. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to myself. The gentleman from Alabama saw fit in a rather humorous way to criticize the action of the committee, of which I happen to be chairman. That is a mere matter of opinion—the opinion of the gentleman from Alabama and the opinion of myself. He has a perfect right to his opinion and I assume that I have a right to mine. So that we will stop that discussion right there.

What are the facts about the bill? We do not change the water power law one atom, so far as it affects the control of water power in this country. The Secretary of War has been to see me many times regarding the personnel employed by the Water Power Commission. At the present time, how are they paid? They are not paid by any appropriation that is given to the Water Power Commission. They are paid out of the appropriations made for the War Department, for the Department of Agriculture, and for the Department of the Interior, and there is absolutely no way by which those departments can get that money back. Somebody here said that they had heard of no applications being made for an increase in the personnel. Naturally not. The Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Interior would not be willing to detail men from their departments to be paid out of their appropriations to some other department. Those are the facts. There is a provision in the law which will go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1928, whereby there is an appropriation made for the Water Power Commission, and this can be paid by the War Department going to the Water Power Commission and giving it a bill for services, and providing also that the Interior Department and the Agricultural Department can render the Water Power Commission a bill for services and be reimbursed. That will go into effect on the 1st day of July.

Now, so far as the personnel of this bill is concerned, I know very little about the Water Power Commission, and it is true that the testimony before us is the testimony of a man who is decidedly interested and probably the head of the bureau. But let me ask you in all sincerity and in all humility to whom would you go to ask what was needed unless it was the man who is running the show?

Mr. SCHAFER. Does this man, Mr. Merrill, run the entire water-power show?

Mr. PARKER. I think so.

Mr. SCHAFER. In that case we had better abolish the commission.

Mr. PARKER. When I said that I do not assume that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture gives any particular amount of time to the personnel or employees of that bureau——

Mr. SCHAFER. Does this man singly and alone determine whether or not these power permits should be issued?

Mr. PARKER. I am not talking about that. I am not talking about the policy. I was talking about the personnel and the mechanics of running the bureau.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know whether I understood the gentleman correctly, but I understand the gentleman to say that these gentlemen, the heads of the Water Power Commission, declined to furnish the clerical force necessary.

Mr. PARKER. I said they hesitated.

Mr. BYRNS. But the law imposes that duty upon them, and heretofore the commission has been supplied with the necessary personnel, and now an appropriation has been made.

Mr. PARKER. If I said "they declined" I used a word I should not have used. I should not have used it when I said "they declined."

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know for sure that the gentleman used it.

Mr. PARKER. I think I should not have used it. I do not think they have declined.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PEERY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a brief question before he starts?

Mr. PEERY. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. My understanding has always been that the expenses of this commission and the salaries of these clerks were paid by assessments for licenses on these water-power companies. We do not have to appropriate for that purpose, but the income of the commission, including the salaries of the employees, came from the licenses that these water-power companies paid?

Mr. PEERY. That is true.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is something reckoned on the horsepower?

Mr. PEERY. I do not understand that there is any fixed basis on which these fees are levied.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think it is fixed at a certain rate per horsepower, and I think that has been abundant so far for the purposes of this commission. Then what is the necessity, if the commission has been self-sustaining up to this time?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. My understanding is that they have not been self-sustaining and are not at this time.

Mr. PEERY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in sympathy with the purposes underlying the Federal Power Commission. I think it was intended to serve a useful purpose. But I think the rights of the Federal Government should be strictly confined, so that we may know definitely and confine the activities of the Federal Government to the things with which the Federal Government should be concerned, and leave to the States their activities in matters in which the States are primarily concerned.

Now, what is the situation? Under the Federal water power act there is an overlapping and a duplication of agencies. The Federal Government is investigating power projects throughout the country even in cases where it could hardly be contended that the Federal Government had any power or any rights, where it is clearly a State function.

We are told that when this act was passed it was definitely understood that no new bureau should be set up. I presume it was then reasoned that with the Secretary of Agriculture on this commission and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, the activities of the Government with reference to the matters in which the Federal Government was interested would be correlated; the War Department would look after questions involving power plants which would affect navigation, that the Secretary of the Interior would look after the rights of the Federal Government where the public lands were involved, and likewise that the Secretary of Agriculture would look after the rights of the Federal Government in safeguarding the forestry interests, which are under the control of the Department of Agriculture.

Now, the constitutionality of this act has not yet been passed upon, and we have this duplication of agencies. In this connection the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] asks if the income from these power projects, from the licensees, was not more than sufficient to pay the cost of operating the commission? I think in the hearings it is stated that they do more than meet the costs. But that is a specious argument in support of a bureau. If we are getting income from the use of the Government lands, why should we spend that income, the full amount of it, in the upkeep of a bureau? Why not turn it into the Treasury of the United States so that the taxpayers will get the benefit of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. MERRITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEERY. Yes.

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman understands that those fees do go into the Treasury now and can not get out without appropriation?

Mr. PEERY. I understand that, and I do not contend that under this bill they can get them out without going to the Appropriations Committee. But it is the argument that every additional bureau uses; that where there is an income from a special source and they are not using the full amount of it, the inevitable tendency is for the bureau to increase its personnel and add to the men in the employment of the bureau up to the full amount of the income from that particular department or activity of the Government.

We know that this bill gives the Federal Power Commission the authority to go ahead and employ additional personnel.

We asked the executive secretary about the practical working of it. Under the law he is compelled to go to these three departments to get the personnel for his bureau. He said he had difficulty in doing that, but I am sure that when the Secretary of War, a member of this commission, asks his department to give him an additional detail there will be no great difficulty about it. The same is true as to the Secretary of Agriculture and as to the Secretary of the Interior. When the heads of these three departments, who constitute the Power Commission, are convinced that additional men should be detailed to the Power Commission it would seem that they could provide that such personnel be given to this commission. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how the time stands on both sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has 14 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas has 9 minutes.

Mr. PARKER. There will not be more than one speaker on this side.

Mr. RAYBURN. And we will have only one more speaker.

Mr. PARKER. I think I am entitled to close the debate.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I will take such of my nine minutes as I desire to use.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we now stand face to face with the real purpose that is behind this measure. I made the statement this morning that our hearings were in executive session. I was partially mistaken about that, as I afterwards stated to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER]. Friday the hearings we held were in open session and they were taken down by a stenographer. On Saturday, however, there was no stenographer present, and the matter about which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE] spoke was referred to, namely, that this matter had been before the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I asked the executive secretary of the commission about that, and he stated that it had never been before the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

We might as well be frank about this matter. They talk about the checks and balances that are on this commission with reference to the employment of clerks, experts, and so forth, and that we have the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture to look after this commission. Now, everybody who knows anything about the work of the Federal Power Commission knows that the Federal Power Commission is a civil-service employee, designated as the executive secretary of this commission, Mr. Merrill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], always honest, always frank, and always candid in the House and out of it, admitted to the gentleman from Tennessee that this man Merrill, the civil-service employee of the Government, is the Power Commission, and that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture have nothing whatever to do with it except in a most general way. Anybody who says that they do any of the work of this commission is stating something that is not really so.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. I know the gentleman does not want to misquote me. I said that was so as far as the mechanical part of the commission was concerned I said that the matter of policy was, of course, governed by the Secretaries, but that as far as the mechanical work of the commission was concerned Mr. Merrill did the whole thing.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman does not contend that he thinks the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture devote any appreciable amount of time to this work?

Mr. PARKER. I will agree with the gentleman except as to laying down the policy.

Mr. RAYBURN. The policy we have here is laid down by Congress and the execution of that policy is carried on by this civil-service employee, known as the executive secretary of the commission, Mr. Merrill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will say that my experience has been in the main and practically entirely in accordance with the gentleman's statement, but when there is a contested question, a real contest, then the three Secretaries do sit and determine the question. That arises very rarely, but it has arisen in my experience.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is just like a man and his wife, in which the man said his wife settled all minor questions, and said, "We have never had any major questions arise between us." [Laughter.] That is exactly the way with these three Secretaries setting the policy and doing any of the work of this commission.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I did not say they set the policy, but I say occasionally when there is a real dispute they do sit and determine the dispute.

Mr. RAYBURN. Maybe so. Now, another thing. We might as well face the proposition that this is a bill to get the camel's nose under the tent. When we passed the power act, of course everybody understood and everybody knew it provided how this should be done and that this should not be an independent bureau. But this man Merrill is an ambitious individual. He is not any too modest, either, as you will see when you examine the bill he has had introduced, which he had passed in the Senate at the last session of Congress and which he is trying to pass here to-day.

It is to give him more power, more men, more tools with which to work and to make himself bigger and greater when he comes before the Committee on Appropriations.

We get up here, and amendments to appropriation bills go off because they are not authorized by law. There is no law under which the appropriation can be made if the point of order is made, but when you pass this bill, this gentleman can go ahead and contract for these employees—and you do not get experts like he is talking about in this bill for any small salary—then he can come before the Congress and the Congress in honor, after you pass this bill, is bound to make the appropriation to pay the bills that he has contracted by the employment of these civil-service employees and by the employment of these experts.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It has been said on the floor that this bureau is self-sustaining; where do they get the money?

Mr. RAYBURN. They get some money from licenses, and they go into first one fund and then another.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Who pays for the licenses? Eventually does it not come back on the consumer?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. In other words, the corporation or the individual hires his own engineer and his own force of workmen, and then he must take on a lot of Government employees and pay them out of the receipts he gets from the public.

Mr. RAYBURN. Absolutely. In other words, if this bill is passed in the form in which it is presented by the committee, even with the very good amendment that the committee added by striking out nearly half of the bill—if they had stricken out the enacting clause this would have been a fairly good bill [laughter]—but under the language of this bill as reported to the House there is no limitation whatever in law upon the number of employees that this man, who is the executive secretary of the commission, can employ—not any whatever.

As I said this morning, practically every day somebody gets up and talks about some bureau of the Government, stating that he will never vote to inaugurate another one or that he is not going to vote to extend the power of the ones that are now in operation, but that is always when there is not a bill up to create another bureau or to extend the power of one that is already in existence.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Did Mr. Merrill, when he was before the gentleman's committee, point out any specific cases wherein the commission had been unable to carry out its duties under the Federal water power act due to the fact that it did not have any of these employees?

Mr. RAYBURN. He made a general statement, of course, like they all do, and just like every bureau of the Government does when you go down to them and want some hurry about some matter—they all say, "Go up on the hill and talk to Congress; they are to blame; they do not give us enough money to employ the men to carry on the activities as they should be."

Mr. HILL of Alabama. He did not state any particular cases where there had been items of cost that the commission had not been able to investigate due to the fact that the commission did not have a sufficient number of employees or auditors or engineers to do the work.

Mr. RAYBURN. If he did, I do not remember it. We had a short hearing in the committee and Mr. Merrill, of course, was the only man who appeared before us.

My objection to this bill is that we are creating and expanding another bureau; that we are giving this civil-service employee, who is the head or the executive officer, power to go out anywhere and employ all of the help that he himself deems necessary.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am strongly in favor of the passage of this bill, and I can not understand the opposition which has developed to it. I regard it as necessary for the prompt and efficient utilization of the water power of the country, and that is of very great importance.

Although I am somewhat rusty on the subject, for 20 years I was in close touch with this question of rights relating to water power. It was at first asserted that the rights belonged to the riparian owner and that the Government of the United States had little, if anything, to say about it, provided obstacles to navigation were not created.

Again, there was maintained the idea that it was exclusively a State matter. In the decision of the Chandler-Dunbar case, rendered in about 1913, in Two hundred and twenty-ninth United States Supreme Court Reports, these contentions were brushed aside and it was definitely established that the Federal Government, under its control over navigable streams, had the right to grant or refuse licenses for water power, and this led to the control of the whole subject.

Indeed, I was in consultation with two very eminent lawyers in the Senate, Elihu Root and Mr. Cummins, of Iowa, in which we reached the conclusion that the right to control navigation extended to nonnavigable streams. For instance, suppose it is suggested that a certain depth for navigation should be obtained in the Hudson River. That greater depth could be obtained by dredging or by allowing the free flow of tributary streams into the river. In securing this object of greater depth the Congress might have the right to prevent the diversion of water in any of these tributary streams. Really, I can come to no other conclusion in this regard. It is very broad and sweeping.

Thus the Government, first, under the leadership of Mr. Stimson, recently appointed Governor General of the Philippines, when Secretary of War, sought to establish the principle that no rights should be granted to build dams in any stream except with a Federal license.

In this discussion he was supported by other officials of the Government—by President Taft, an eminent lawyer—and the conclusion that the Federal Government has the right to refuse licenses has been universally accepted.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. As I understand that right has been challenged very recently in a suit that was about to be completed by argument in the Supreme Court when some sort of a compromise was reached and it was withdrawn.

Mr. BURTON. They have had eight years to raise the question.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This was in a suit about six months ago.

Mr. BURTON. It is singular that no one has questioned and brought to the court of last resort for decision this water power act for it is certainly in accordance with the prior decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am in accord with the gentleman's contention, but I was simply calling his attention to the fact of this suit.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman has referred to the Chandler-Dunbar decision. As I recollect that decision the court held that where the Government has put in a dam for navigation purposes the Supreme Court saw no objection to the——

Mr. BURTON. The Federal Government did not put in the dam, it was put in by a company, but the decision is broad and sweeping.

Now, I have examined the Fox River case alluded to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. That does not present any obstacle to the power of the Government. What was that case?

Certain proprietors had a dam and they sought to repair it. There was a State statute that provided that no dam should be constructed without the consent of the State. The State also maintained that there could be no renovation or repair of the dam without application of that statute. The Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin sustained that contention. It was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and they sustained the contention that the riparian owner did not have the right to construct the dam without the consent of the State, and reasoning from the lesser to the greater, certainly we can argue that if that is the case the Federal Government having control of navigable streams has a right as great as the State.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The importance of that was that they upheld the right of the public utilities commission and that it would be giving the commission powers that would be in conflict with some of the provisions of the water power act.

Mr. BURTON. No; not in conflict with the water power act. It was as to the right of the State against the riparian owners.

It is especially desirable that this great question of water power, which is a national question, an interstate question, should be under the control of the Federal Government. I must emphatically criticize those who rise here and are so strong for the improvement of rivers and harbors, who are for the payment by the Federal Government of the total cost of the management of the Mississippi River, but when it comes to the control of water power claim that it must go to the States. In other words, where there is a burden the Federal Government must bear it, but where there is an advantage it belongs to the States. [Applause.] I am not in favor of any such doctrine as that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does this bill controvert at all the position taken by the gentleman; is not this bill a mere administrative proposition?

Mr. BURTON. It is.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It does not touch the great principle that this gentleman is talking about?

Mr. BURTON. No. Now, coming to this bill it does not change at all the principles of the bill adopted in 1920 that has had such salutary results. What is the reason of this reluctance, almost a refusal of the War Department, the Interior Department, and the Agricultural Department to furnish the necessary help. It is their inability to furnish the necessary force for the commission. What do you suppose they did in one case when called upon for an expert? They detailed a man from a bureau in the Agricultural Department for the eradication of the Japanese beetle. They have had to scour the department, and the authorities have sometimes gone outside of the department and done just what this commission would do—engage persons on the outside to do the work.

I want to point out how dangerous it is if you let this go by. There are 136 applications for the construction of dams now pending with a capacity of 14,690,000 horsepower, and those are held back. Some of them have been pending for five years because the commission has not force enough to dispose of them. There is a more important matter yet.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman any information that the commisson has asked for help when it has not been granted to them?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to have that information.

Mr. BURTON. There has been constantly a request for more assistance. There has not been an absolute refusal, but they have said that their force is insufficient, and that they have not the men to do the work. What is the class of work that must be done? Under the water power act of 1920 the Government has the right of recapture at the end of 50 years. In order that the Government may not be defrauded it is necessary that there be an appraisement right now of how much capital is being invested by these different licensees. It has been necessary to absolutely neglect that and so we are in this position, that we are allowing these dams to be constructed for which we have the option to pay and would naturally pay, without any adequate appraisement of their value.

Mr. McDUFFIE rose.

Mr. BURTON. I must decline to yield further. Then, again there is the question of fixing the price to consumers. While it is true that if a State has a commission, and they do not all have them, then and in that case the State may fix the rates; if the State does not act or has no commission the Federal commission must act.

There is no adequate force to fix the rates. Oh, how much I have heard against bureaus and how many I have seen voting for bureaus! What are the facts? This House and the Congress here are staggering under a weight of legislation that is impossible to carry, and we have got to transfer it, more and more, to departments or commissions, to bureaus, or branches of the Government, I do not care what you call them. This does not really create any new bureau. Are we so afraid that insidiously Mr. Merrill will creep upon us and bring in a great mass of employees when it is all under our control? Two hundred and thirty thousand dollars a year is the revenue obtained from these licenses. One hundred thousand dollars is regarded as the probable cost of the services of the men detailed from the departments, and it is thought that there ought to be a further expenditure of $60,000, making $160,000 against an income of $230,000. If this bill were passed, there would be a very considerable increase in the revenues. I am frank to say that I have no desire to censure anybody, but I never knew greater rapacity than was exercised by some of those who were grabbing for water power, desiring to make it free from the control of the Government, free, without any regard to the interests of the people. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that under this bill we would have civil-service employees whom a corporation would not employ. Of course, officers of a corporation would not employ them because they would know that they would be just and look out for the interest of the Government. I trust that this bill will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Federal Power Commission may request the President of the United States to detail an officer or officers from the Corps of Engineers, or other branches of the United States Army, to serve the commission as engineer officer or officers, or in any other capacity, their duties to be prescribed by the commission; and such detail is hereby authorized, as well as the detail, assignment, or transfer to the commission of any other persons in or under the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture who are engaged in duties which are conferred upon the commission by the Federal water power act. In the performance of the duties imposed upon it by the Federal water power act, as hereby or hereafter amended, the commission shall utilize, in so far as practicable, the facilities and personnel of the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, and said departments are hereby authorized to utilize their facilities and personnel, civil and military, for said purposes, and to employ additional personnel therefor when necessary. The commission is also authorized to employ for such purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere such expert, technical, clerical, and other personnel as may, in addition to the personnel detailed or transferred from or employed in the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, as aforesaid, be necessary for the performance of said duties and to make other expenditures requisite and incident thereto. All such expenditures, including rent in the District of Columbia, payment for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, reimbursement of other Government departments or agencies for salaries or expenses incurred in the performance of work for the commission, necessary printing and binding, purchase of equipment, supplies, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and directories, all necessary expenditures for transportation and subsistence, including, in the discretion of the commission, a per diem of not exceeding $6 in lieu of subsistence incurred by its employees under its orders, in making any investigations or conducting field work, or upon official business outside of the District of Columbia, and away from their designated points of duty, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by a member or officer of the commission duly authorized for that purpose. In order to defray the expenses made necessary in the performance of the duties placed upon the commission and upon other Government departments or agencies under the Federal water power act as hereby or hereafter amended, all charges collected from licenses under said act on and after January 1, 1928, for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of administration of said act and for recompensing it for the use of Government dams and structures and lands pertaining thereto, are hereby reserved as a special fund in the Treasury to be appropriated from time to time for the purposes specified herein; and the commission is hereby authorized, to the extent that moneys are so appropriated from said fund, to cause to be transferred on the books of the Treasury from such special fund to "Miscellaneous receipts," or to permanent and indefinite or other departmental appropriations or funds, such amounts as may be required to defray salaries or expenses hereafter paid or incurred by other Government departments or agencies in the performance of work for the commission.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "employ," insert the words "subject to the civil service laws"; and on line 12, page 2, after the word "employ," insert the words "subject to the civil service laws."

Page 3, line 10, after the word "purpose," strike out the remainder of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose I am like about two-thirds of the membership of this House. I know absolutely nothing about what we are about to vote upon except what we have heard here, controversial as it is, from both sides. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois took me to task a while ago when I suggested that we had moved up Calendar Wednesday to Tuesday. I did not mean any disrespect to the gentleman. I have a very high regard for him. But the only way a Member of this House knows what is going on and what is to be the program of business is either by reading the RECORD or calling up the majority leader's room, or by looking at the bulletin out in the corridor to see what is the program for the next day. Yesterday when we left, the program which was outlined to be considered was the Navy appropriation bill. Yesterday afternoon when the House was considering the Consent Calendar, when there were but few Members on the floor, the majority leader asked unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business should be taken up; not on Thursday or Friday, but to-day, Tuesday. Then this committee comes in here with a very controversial bill, a bill that has divided the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, involving the question of establishing a great bureau—setting up a very powerful bureau—and if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is to be believed, involving an attempt to absolutely take away from the States the power to have any say, purely within their own boundaries, upon the question of whether or not a man can build an ordinary dam or dams.

Now, when I did make the observation about making Tuesday Calendar Wednesday it was made in good faith. I appreciate fully what leadership means in this House. I appreciate fully the power of the majority leader, and I have great respect for him. I appreciate what the action of committees mean. But, gentlemen, it takes 435 Members to make up the membership of this House, and it takes 218 here to make a quorum; and if you expect the membership to know anything about what is going on it does seem to me that these changes, when made, should be given more publicity, and when I brought the question forcibly to the attention of the House that we had run up Calendar Wednesday to Tuesday and hurriedly brought up a very controversial bill, it is something worthy of serious consideration by the House.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. All that I think could be inferred from the gentleman's remarks was that he was casting a reflection on the committee in having the day advanced to Tuesday. The committee had nothing to do with it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. No; I did not intend that. I have great respect for this House and its membership and the great committee. I do not want to cast any reflection on anybody. But I say that I think the average Member who is not on one of these large committees can not rely on the orderly procedure of the House when Wednesday does not mean Wednesday but Tuesday.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Was it your purpose to devote all the day to this bill?

Mr. ABERNETHY. No. But I assumed we would have an opportunity for discussion to-morrow; and when I hear leaders on our side and some on your side say this bill ought not to be brought up this way, I ask, why should this bill be taken up on Tuesday when it should come up regularly on Wednesday? Have we got to set up this great bureau and establish a lot of bureaucrats here in a day's time and not be willing to wait for the regular day to do it, but do it on Tuesday instead of on Wednesday? I say it is very premature. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as I recall, this Water Power Commission was created in 1920.

Either at the first session or at the second session, after the creation of this commission, the secretary appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, the subcommittee on independent offices, and asked at that time to set up an entire independent piece of machinery. Under the original act all of the necessary force was to be provided by the Department of Agriculture, the Interior Department, and the War Department. The Committee on Appropriations very promptly turned down the request of the secretary, the secretary being the only one who is paid by an independent appropriation.

From that time to this there has been no controversy on the subject before the Committee on Appropriations, and there has been no further request to make this a purely independent establishment. So far as I know, and so far as the investigations had before the committee are concerned, they are getting along very well in the conduct of the business of this bureau. It is just another one of these attempts to establish an independent bureau which was meant simply to serve as an adjunct to some one or more of the departments. More than 90 out of every 100 of these independent bureaus started just as this one started and afterwards developed into an independent office.

So far as the executive work is concerned, it is performed by the executive secretary, and the necessary force has been supplied by the three departments named. If it is a requirement concerning which the Department of Agriculture has peculiar knowledge, the Agricultural Department furnishes the employees. If it is something concerning the Interior Department, that department furnishes the force, and the same with regard to the War Department.

Mr. BURTON. Does not the gentleman realize that in this work of valuing property expert accountants are required, who are not found even in the War Department or the Agriculture or Interior Departments? They are not in the departments. You have to go outside for them.

Mr. WOOD. I expect if you would appeal to either one of these departments they would tell you they have splendid experts to do this work; and, as a matter of fact, there has been no question of that character that has come before the committee. We have been told at each recurring session of Congress that all the service that has been necessary has been furnished by these three departments, so that we need not fool ourselves about this or further disguise the attempt that is being made.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the preparation of the independent offices appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1929 that the very thing was done in the bill as it passed the House—that is, authorized in this bill in so far as the transfer of the personnel from the War, Interior, and Agriculture Departments are concerned. The appropriation for the next fiscal year as it passed the House would be under the control of the Federal Power Commission itself.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman is right. The expenses of this commission were paid out of the various departments in proportion to the amount of work they did, respectively. The present bill providing for the independent offices is now in conference, and it provides that an appropriation shall be made directly to this commission to pay the persons employed in this bureau, and a deduction is to be made from each department in proportion to the service furnished.

Now, this bill is so drawn as to give to this commission the right to employ all their help, and the independent offices appropriation bill now pending is the last appropriation bill in which there will ever be a provision for the payment of engineers or the Interior Department force, or the Agriculture Department force. Hereafter they will be making the appeal directly to the Committee on Appropriations for all the service required by this commission, and the institution will grow like a mushroom.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman is entirely in error about that. The greater part of the force, the engineers and others, would still be detailed from the War Department and the other departments—this special class of employees.

Mr. WOOD. And that is the thing I am against.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. There will be but very little time until a sufficient showing will be made whereby they can not afford to delegate men from the War Department, from the Agricultural Department, or from the Department of the Interior, and they will be employing experts everywhere; they will be employing expert engineers and they will be employing expert judges of crops, and so on; they will be employing experts in every direction, thus augmenting, if you please, the burden on the taxpayer. I think there are plenty of idle persons in the War Department, I think there are plenty of men in the Interior Department, and I think there are plenty in the Agricultural Department to do all the work that is required of them under this organic law.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Has Mr. Merrill made any complaint to the Committee on Appropriations that he did not have help enough and have you refused to give him help?

Mr. WOOD. He has never made any such complaint; but, as I say, he did try, either the first or second session after this commission was authorized, to make it an independent bureau, but when it was refused there was no complaint made.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman think that the bill under discussion at this time is the authorization which the Federal Power Commission thinks is necessary to be had in order to justify the appropriation which was made?

Mr. WOOD. There is no doubt about the justification of the appropriation, but there is no justification for this law being changed so as to take away from these departments the right to detail all the personnel that is necessary.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Unless an authorization is needed, they now have in part what they seek to secure under the bill. If an authorization is not needed, of course, it is unnecessary to discuss it.

Mr. WOOD. It is purely a change of management, an effort to establish another entirely independent bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 2, line 6, after the word "utilize," strike out "in so far as practicable."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take very much time in further discussing this amendment, but I want to make this thing clear, that if the amendment which I have offered and another one similar to it are adopted, they will not in any way change the policy of the Federal Power Commission or in any way retard the passing on applications. The only thing this amendment does is to carry out the intent of the original Federal power act in not creating a special bureau for that purpose. That is the only thing that my amendments do. It is purely a matter of administration and not of policy.

When we passed the original act I was opposed, as was the great majority of Members, to establishing a new and separate bureau to administer it. I am still of the same opinion. In this bill there is no limitation on the amount of help this commission can have from the other departments. I want them to have all that is necessary to do well the work required and expected, and the provisions of this bill will provide for it. The only thing I am opposed to at this time is a special new and independent bureau.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I would ask the gentleman to indicate what his other amendment is so that we may discuss both amendments at the same time.

Mr. SNELL. I will ask the Clerk to read both of my amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendments.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 2, line 6, after the word "utilize," strike out the words "in so far as practicable."

Second amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 2, line 11, after the word "necessary," strike out the balance of the line and down to and including the word "thereto," in line 19.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me that the amendment so far proposed by the gentleman from New York is either entirely meaningless or else it is ridiculous. If you take out the words "in so far as practicable" alone, and if you leave the rest of the paragraph, then I presume the construction of the whole bill would be identical with or without this specific language, for you would still have a specific legislative mandate to the effect that the Federal Power Commission shall utilize the facilities and the employees of these three different Departments of War, Agriculture, and Interior, and you would still have the further specific mandate that it might employ additional persons directly.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTNESS. No. I have so little time I can not yield.

Mr. SNELL. I yielded to the gentleman, and I want to make myself clear.

Mr. BURTNESS. In that event I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. If you adopt my amendment, where would you give them authority to employ persons directly?

Mr. BURTNESS. Well, I have discussed so far only the first amendment, the one now pending. Of course, when it comes to the second amendment, which the gentleman is going to offer later, then you take the entire heart out of this bill, and it might as well not be passed at all. You might then just as well strike out the enacting clause. I am just putting the situation frankly before you so all may see just what is involved and not discussing particularly at this time the merits of the amendments. I doubt whether the first amendment standing alone affects the bill at all. If you adopt both you will, as I suggest, cut out the heart of the bill.

Of course, if we wanted to be at all technical about the first proposition of the gentleman from New York, who wants the words "in so far as practicable" eliminated, we might then ask him whether he insists that these men shall be employed from the Department of Agriculture, from the War Department, and from the Interior Department, even though it is impracticable to appoint such people.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. In a moment.

The purpose of the bill is to say to the Federal Power Commission that whenever it is appropriate, whenever it is practicable to do so, whenever it is best to do so, their employees shall come from these three departments, but when the time comes when it is not practicable, when it is not in the interest of good business to do so, then a governmental agency ought to have the same opportunity to go out and do business in a businesslike way, the same as a private corporation, and select its employees for their special fitness for the job to be done. On the whole, I do not think this bill is of great importance one way or the other, but many unwarranted assertions have been made as to its results.

As I see this bill, in its ultimate essence it is this: If this bill is passed, in so far as the special employees, special accountants, and the like, are concerned, those that have been referred to, let us see what the Power Commission would have to do under this bill in comparison with what they do now. They would have to go in and make their case before one specific subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which knows more about the Federal Power Commission and its work than any other subcommittee. They would have to submit their case, in other words, to our good friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and his subcommittee, instead of proceeding as they are doing now, coming in and getting this help piecemeal, asking for some of these employees from the subcommittee on agriculture, of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is chairman, some more of them from the committee that handles the Interior bill, headed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], and some more from the committee that handles the Army bill, headed by the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR]. It seems to me this is an entirely inconsistent and improper method.

Why not put the responsibility upon an independent bureau of this sort where it belongs; and it is an independent bureau, whether you call it that or not. It is a mighty small one, it is true, but why not put the responsibility of making this bureau present its own case to the subcommittee which handles the appropriations for the rest of the independent offices? I do not think there is any danger that the gentleman from Indiana and the other able men upon that subcommittee are going to let this man Merrill or anybody else run away with their good judgment or run away with the judgment of the House. Why bother several committees who will treat the items as a side line, more or less?

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true now that these men detailed from the respective departments are brought in from outside their regular force?

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not know positively about that, but that is probably true. In any event, let us make these men employees of the bureau for whom they work, and that will tend to make them more loyal to that bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, first of all let me state that the gentleman from Ohio misunderstood me in thinking that I am opposed to the general water power bill. I think there has not been a more beneficient piece of legislation enacted by the Congress in the last quarter of a century than that bill. I simply had some doubt as to the entire extent of the power of Congress as the gentleman elucidated it; but that is not in question here.

The question here is simply one of whether we shall establish an independent bureau with all the increase of growth of employees and expense which that means. This is the sole question involved, and in discussing this question I want to say that my experience with Mr. Merrill has been that he is a conscientious, hard-working Government official, and I have no criticism of him personally.

However, I do think we should give the weight to the water power act as it was enacted and stands which its great success merits. I do not believe we should rush madly or inconsiderately into amendments. I pay a higher respect to the act even than the gentleman from Ohio. The underlying purpose of the act was to administer it through these three departments and not to have a separate bureau. It has worked splendidly. The growth of water-power development in the United States has been phenomenal since we enacted this law. It has worked perfectly in every way and increasingly well year by year. What is the purpose, then, in changing it? How are we going to improve it?

The gentleman from Ohio asked the gentleman from Indiana if we would not need additional employees. If we do need them the three departments which exercise control have the right under the law to employ these men.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In a moment.

There never was a time when this bill was less necessary than now because this House in a far-seeing, broad-minded way, has enacted legislation by which we are expending $7,000,000 in a survey of all of the navigable streams of the United States for all of the purposes for which water can be utilized—navigation, power, reclamation, and all of the various purposes to which it can be put. These surveys are being made day by day at this large expense and this commission will be furnished with more valuable information in the near future than it has ever been furnished in the past. Why should we then disturb a law that we passed only a few years ago when it is working so exceedingly well? We are making progress, and making progress as we never progressed before, and why should we try to change the executive functions of this commission or try to increase or vary them?

Why not go on with what we have that has worked so well?

Mr. BURTNESS. Why should the Agricultural Department be charged with appropriations for regulating private industry?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Because when the legislation was deliberated on at great length we found that we had men who were fitted to solve various questions relating to the water power, in the three departments, without going out and hiring experts at a large and wholly unnecessary expense. That is the reason we provided that they should draw the personnel from the three departments—because we have them, and it is not necessary to go to this added expense.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman knows that the water power act gave the commission the authority to make surveys, and this commission could, under the direction of Mr. Merrill, also make surveys of power development. Then we would have a conflict of jurisdiction in making surveys.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask for one minute more.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Make it three minutes. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If the commission has the legal power to make surveys and has not the proper personnel, what good is the power?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We are making splendid progress with the surveys. I am in constant touch with the engineers in regard to it. Adequate appropriations have been made. We have authorized the expenditure of $7,000,000, and the work is being done, it is being rapidly done, and just as well as it can possibly be done.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. How would this change the situation?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It might change it as the gentleman from Alabama points out; we might have duplication, as we find we have it so often in the Government service. We might have a conflict of surveys and get into a snarl that would delay the splendid work of the Water Power Commission in the country.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman will notice that this is all under the jurisdiction of the Water Power Commission; this does not change the existing law.

Mr. DEMPSEY. When the work is done as it is to-day, it functions through the engineers of the Army. They have the service in charge. They discovered 3,000,000 horsepower on the Tennessee River and its tributaries that no one suspected we had there until we made surveys of these streams. Those surveys cost something like $700,000. They were well worth the money several times over. They developed where the power sites would best be located, how they should be developed, and all the particulars necessary to granting licenses. What was done there a few years ago is now being done all over the United States. If this commission continues to function as it ought to through the three departments, retaining its present employees who have proved that they are fitted to do the work, and securing such additional employees as may be needed from the three departments, just as they have in the past, they will make much more rapid progress than by making experiments and seeking to obtain assistance in other ways. The commission will not cost the taxpayers so much or have so impressive a list of employees, but it will function as it has so far to the entire satisfaction of our people and in developing our great water power at a rapid and steadily increasing rate. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Reserving the right to object, I do not want to delay the House unnecessarily, but I think it is a pretty short time for discussion on this important matter.

Mr. PARKER. I will make it a half hour.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before that is agreed to, I do not think there is any disposition to interfere with the progress of the bill, but I would like to know how many amendments there are to be offered.

Mr. MADDEN. I have one on which I want five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in not to exceed 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN The question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all amendments now pending be read for the information of the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes on my amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The Chair will undoubtedly recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all of the amendments may be read for the information of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the various amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 2, line 6, after the word "utilize," strike out the words "in so far as practicable."

Second amendment to be offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 2, line 11, after the word "necessary," strike out the balance of the line and all down to and including the word "thereto," in line 19.

Amendment to be offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 3, line 10, after the word "purpose," insert the following:

"The expenses made necessary in the performance of the duties placed upon the commission and upon other Government departments or agencies under the Federal water power act as hereby or hereafter amended, for the cost of administration of said act, shall be paid from such appropriations as may be made therefor. All charges collected from licenses under such act on and after January 1, 1928, for the purposes of reimbursing the United States for the cost of administration of such act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The Federal Power Commission shall from time to time adjust such charges to the end that the sums so collected shall be equivalent, as nearly as possible, from year to year, to the total amount expended for such purposes, and in the event the amount so collected in any fiscal year shall be deficient or exceed the amount expended, the commission shall take such deficit or surplus into consideration in fixing such charges for the ensuing fiscal year."

Amendment proposed by Mr. McDUFFIE: Page 2, line 11, after the word "necessary," strike out the language on page 2 and the language on page 3 down to and including the word "purpose," in line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. NEWTON rose.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Minnesota, a member of the committee.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak to the Snell amendment striking out the words "in so far as practicable," and also anticipating the offering of the other amendment in which he strikes out the language from line 11 to line 19 on page 2.

These two amendments go to the very heart of this proposition. This question is whether we are going to have a regulatory body, with power to regulate, and with adequate help, or are we to permit it to go along handicapped as it has been and unable to carry on the regulatory work that Congress puts upon it? The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] said that they can draw upon the employees from the executive branches of the Government and that there is no occasion for this bill. Who ought to be the best judge as to whether there is occasion for the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] or the three Cabinet members who are the Federal Power Commission? They have said they need it. They said it in the last Congress, and they have said it in this Congress.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. My understanding is that there has been no complaint in a single instance of want of adequate help. The undisputed evidence is that we have grown in water-power development since the enactment of this water power law, as we never have.

Mr. NEWTON. Very well. The gentleman says that we have grown in water-power development. I grant that, and I am glad of it, but we have not grown in water-power regulation, and that is the complaint that comes from the commission and that is what this House ought to remedy.

If we adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from New York to strike out the words "in so far as practicable," and to strike out the other provisions, what do we do? We confine the commission to such employees and Army officers as they can get from the War, Interior, and Agricultural Departments. We prevent them from going outside. They are supposed to get all the help they can by transfer from the departments. This is provided in the bill. They should do so in so far as it is practicable. They ought not to be further restricted.

Mr. SNELL. And who decides about that practicability? Is it not Mr. Merrill himself? And is not the whole Water Power Commission, as far as practical purposes are concerned, Mr. Merrill?

Mr. NEWTON. No.

Mr. SNELL. Now, be honest about that. I never saw him and do not know him.

Mr. NEWTON. He is not the commission. I have spent hours with the commission meeting as such. He is the administrative officer, but when it comes to questions of policy, of course, the Cabinet Members who constitute the commission control that.

Mr. SNELL. Show me a word in my amendment that limits the number of employees that he shall have. It is simply the question of where he shall get them.

Mr. NEWTON. But the gentleman wants to confine it to employees now in the Departments of the Interior, War, and Agriculture.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The bill provides—and to employ, subject to the civil service laws, additional personnel therefor when necessary.

I am not seeking to cut that out.

Mr. NEWTON. I understood the gentleman to propose to strike that out.

Mr. SNELL. I do not intend to strike that out. The gentleman should confine himself to the facts in speaking to my amendment.

Mr. NEWTON. I am trying to confine myself to the facts.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman show me where I have been trying to strike out the additional personnel therefrom?

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman moves to strike out the language:

The commission is also authorized to employ, subject to the civil service laws, for such purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, such experts, technical, clerical, and other personnel as may, in addition to the personnel detailed or transferred from or employed in the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, as aforesaid, be necessary for the performance of said duties and to make other expenditures requisite and incident thereto.

Mr. SNELL. It is in the line before that. They can go outside and get the additional employees if they want them. I do not confine it to the department employees.

Mr. NEWTON. Why does the gentleman offer this amendment?

Mr. SNELL. I do not want them to set up a separate bureau.

Mr. NEWTON. This does not change the bureau in any shape, manner, or form.

Mr. SNELL. There is no law setting up the bureau, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. NEWTON. We do not change the Federal power act in any vital particular.

Mr. SNELL. But you propose to change the manner of administering it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are two things which might consistently be done with the Federal Water Power Commission. One of them is to abolish the commission, and the other is to provide in some practical way with a sufficient force to perform the important duties which Congress has imposed upon it. That is the practical situation, and this bill proposes the latter course. I do not say and I do not at all believe that every man who opposes this bill would like to abolish the commission, but I do say that every Member who would like to abolish the commission is opposed to this bill. Those who would like to abolish the commission can destroy it by refusing it adequate personnel to perform its duties.

Some criticism has been made of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for hasty action in bringing in this bill. Possibly there is grounds for that criticism, though I am sure the only purpose was to act when the committee had determined it was convinced of the desirability of this legislation, and the bill being regularly on the calendar, the committee simply calls it up on this first occasion presented under the rules. And let me say this, that if the committee had made no report on this bill, we would probably have had some fiery attacks on the committee on the ground that by smothering the bill we had pleased the great power interests. To prevent the commission from functioning effectively is just what the power interests would like to have happen.

The Federal power act was passed for the purpose of protecting the public interest in the matter of water-power development; to conserve the great power sites against monopoly and exploitation of the public. There are honest objections to this bill. But I suggest that gentlemen who are in favor of the law may well hesitate before they vote against a measure which the Power Commission says is necessary if their efforts to carry out the law are not to be seriously crippled.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I have only five minutes. The gentleman has spoken at length.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yielded to every one who asked me to.

Mr. HOCH. I can not yield at this moment.

This commission is charged with the duty of keeping an accounting on these licensed power projects in order to secure honest valuations for possible recapture purposes, for proper supervision of securities issues, to prevent watering of stock, and for such like purposes as the law provides. But the commission declares that it does not have the necessary personnel properly to do this very important work.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Did any of the three Secretaries appear before the committee and testify? Or was any one of the three Secretaries summoned before the committee to testify?

Mr. HOCH. They were not. But the three Secretaries have all gone on record over their own signatures stating exactly what I have just stated in a letter to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. They were right here, where they could have been summoned, all of them.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I want to say that the subcommittee on Appropriations in charge of the independent offices appropriation bill gave the Federal Power Commission every dollar for every man requested for the fiscal year 1929, and if they have not got the personnel they need it is their own fault.

Mr. HOCH. And yet they are compelled to come, hat in hand, and ask each one of these Secretaries to detail some of their own force, to be paid out of their own appropriations, to do the work of the commission; and, of course, the three Secretaries hesitate to detail their own men for this work when the appropriation therefor is to be charged up to them, and they are under the necessity of coming before the committee and asking for their appropriations. That applies to each one of the three Secretaries. You can see what a tremendous handicap that places on the Power Commission.

All that this bill does is to give to the commission the power to go before the Budget and before one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations and present their case, and on the showing they make as to their needs to ask for the necessary appropriations. In that respect they are asking nothing different from what is accorded every other commission.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is exactly what they did for the fiscal year 1929. They came directly to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOCH. That referred simply to the men now detailed from the three departments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if this bill were to pass as it was presented it would have permitted the creation of a special fund at the disposal of the Power Commission.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman says: "This bill as it was presented." The gentleman would not say "as reported by the committee." It would not do that as reported by the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I mean as it was introduced. That is what I meant; and it would have made this special fund subject to the order of the Federal Power Commission. The amendment which I propose and which is now pending provides that the Federal Power Commission shall be compelled to come before the Committee on Appropriations and give an account of its stewardship every year and tell the story of its accomplishments or its delinquencies, and give in fact the history of the Power Commission, so that the record may be had of what has been done and what it is proposed to do in the future. And this will not by any chance do any harm to the activities of the Federal Power Commission, and it may do a vast amount of good in the administration of the affairs of the Government.

It is proposed in the amendment I have offered to authorize the Power Commission to fix the rates and charges for the permits granted and that, as nearly as may be, these rates and charges will be only sufficient to conduct economically the administration of the Power Commission's affairs. If by any chance the charges fixed during any one year are in excess of the cost of the operations they will be required to cut those charges the next year; if they are less than the cost of operations they will be required to increase the charges the next year; but in any case the charges will be confined to the conduct of the affairs of the commission and its administration of the office and will not in any sense or under any circumstances be classed as revenue. This is not a revenue measure. This is an administrative function that is imposed on the Federal Power Commission and the charges they will be permitted to make and will be required to make are simply the administrative costs of the Federal Power Commission's functions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that the committee is going to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] when the time comes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am for all four of the amendments. I am not surprised that this bill is here. The only surprise is that it has not been here before. Any person who has studied with any degree of care the growth of bureaucracy here in this Federal Government of ours need not be at all surprised at seeing such measures as this come before us.

I finally obtained a copy of the report of the committee on this bill. I find there is not a word expressing the opinion of the committee itself upon the measure. The report in its entirety—except in pointing out where they have changed a comma or something of that sort—consists of a letter signed by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. That makes three, but the letter begins:

MY DEAR MR. PARKER: I am in receipt of your communication.

[Applause.]

Now, that made me wonder about the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas a few moments ago. I could not understand precisely what he meant by saying the commission had to go hat in hand to the Secretary of War, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to the Secretary of the Interior and ask for assistance. That was a puzzle to me, because the commission consists of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. I suppose the gentleman from Kansas must have had in mind the "I" who mentions himself in that letter. [Applause.]

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, we have seen these bureaus grow like Jack's beanstalk. We know what it means. I remember very well when we were setting up the last new department that was set up, and when they asked for a particular bureau in that department, it was stated that it was never expected that that bureau would possibly cost more than $70,000 per annum, but for the last three or four years for that particular bureau we have been appropriating at least $2,000,000 per annum. This is merely the growth of bureaucracy.

Mr. Chairman, whenever I am driven to the point where I have to take the choice between a monarchy and bureaucracy, I shall choose the monarchy. [Applause.] When you have a monarchy you at least know whom to shoot or whom to hang, but when you have a bureaucracy, with powers invisible and remote, you can not reach it. [Applause.] But fortunately we do not have here to take either. We have a Republic if we will only maintain it, but we can not maintain it by constantly talking against bureaucracy, and then at every opportunity vote either to create a new bureau or to enhance beyond measure the power of some bureau already in existence.

I shall support the amendments proposed by the gentleman from New York, because I think they will do what the gentleman from Minnesota, who opposed them, said they would do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything on this bill, but because of the turn the debate has taken, I want very briefly to define my position on it.

There has been some criticism of the committee because of the lack of time taken in the consideration of the bill, and there has been some criticism of the executive officer of the Federal Power Commission. It seems to me that as far as this Committee of the Whole is concerned those criticisms are not material. They do not go to the merits of the bill. The question now is whether or not the legislation before the committee is desirable. Mr. Merrill, the executive secretary, is not the Federal Power Commission. The Federal Power Commission is the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Interior. Congress, in the Federal power act in 1920, placed upon the Federal Power Commission certain duties and responsibilities. This legislation simply provides the means of enabling that commission to perform its duties. If Congress wants to continue the commission in name but without sufficient authority or personnel to do the big job which it has to perform, that is the business of Congress, but it ought not to deceive itself in doing so.

There is no need of getting excited about this bill. Adequate control or regulation of the power interests of the United States is a big undertaking. It is an important duty that we have put up to the Federal Power Commission, and if we expect it to perform that great duty in an efficient way, we have got to provide it with the means to do it.

Now, what does this bill provide. The original act simply said that all the personnel of the commission had to be taken from the departments of the three Cabinet officers. Fundamentally, the only purpose of this bill is to authorize the Federal Power Commission to get appropriations as it needs them.

A great deal has been said about the size of this commission. The statement has been made that we can build up a commission here that will be as big as the Government itself, as if this were something new. We give power or authorization to every agency of the Government to enable it to get sufficient appropriation to function, but we require it to come before the Committee on Appropriations to get the money—to make a showing of necessity. The Federal Power Commission, if this regulation should pass, will be in the same position in that respect as other agencies of the Government. In view of the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee on independent establishments this afternoon, before whom the commission would have to appear for its appropriations, that he turned it down so hard several years ago that it has never been back since, who is there that believes it is going to get any extravagant appropriation so as to build up any unwarranted organization or hire unnecessary personnel?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Referring to the connection of the three Secretaries of the Cabinet to this commission, does not the gentleman think that the committee report setting forth the letter of these gentlemen or signed by these gentlemen was written by Mr. Merrill, the clerk of this commission?

Mr. MAPES. I presume it was, but that does not affect the facts.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And he was your only witness before the committee.

Mr. MAPES. Let me say to the gentleman from Alabama, I think the gentleman from Alabama and every Member of this House knows that this commission can not efficiently perform the duties which the Congress has placed upon it under the present circumstances, and the gentleman from New York——

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think the commission has done very well.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from New York has said he does not know of any case where the commission has said it did not have sufficient personnel. Let me read one sentence from the hearing:

The commission can not with its present personnel make the investigations and conduct the hearings necessarily preliminary to the issuance of appropriate orders in these cases, and in consequence millions of dollars may be improperly entered in fixed capital accounts of licensees.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is that in another letter from Mr. Merrill?

Mr. MAPES. Anybody who has watched the development of the water-power resources and the power and influence of the water-power corporations of this country, it seems to me, must realize instinctively that this Power Commission has got to have expert personnel to enable it to function properly, and we must provide the means for it to get such personnel or else the commission might just as well be abolished.

I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] should be adopted and that the other amendments should be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 95, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NEWTON) there were—ayes 104, noes 52.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just adopted having accomplished the purpose in view, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KETCHAM. My understanding is the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Alabama were offered formally, but the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, I understood, was simply offered for information.

Mr. MADDEN. I offer the amendment formally.

Mr. KETCHAM. I simply wanted to raise the point in order to be sure the amendment is formally before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8141) authorizing additional employees for the Federal Power Commission, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the two Snell amendments.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we have now reached the previous-question stage, so that if the bill is not finished to-day it will come up to-morrow when we convene, so if there is going to be a roll call on the bill or any amendment I hope that we may now adjourn.

Mr. MAPES. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Is it the ruling of the Speaker that with the previous question ordered on Calendar Wednesday a vote will come up immediately after disposition of matters on the Speaker's table to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MAPES. One further inquiry. The right to demand a separate vote on the different amendments will be reserved until to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN B. MADDEN

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BUTLER, has heretofore announced that this is the seventy-third anniversary of the birth of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN has had a long service in the House. He has had a most distinguished career, and I do not hesitate to say that certainly during my term of service, which has been for some years, I have never known a Member of either branch of Congress who has served with greater fidelity, with greater zeal, with greater ability, or who has rendered greater and more valuable service to his country than has the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN. [Applause.]

As chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations he has devoted all of his very great ability to the faithful service of his country in conserving the Treasury of the people, and without regard to his own health and comfort. I wish to take this opportunity of joining in the felicitations expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am sure that I speak the sentiments of Members on both sides of the Chamber when I say I hope that he will live to enjoy many more years of happiness and prosperity and of usefulness to our country. [Applause.]

DEBT OF AUSTRIA TO THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I am submitting herewith for your consideration a copy of a report of the Secretary of the Treasury regarding the action proposed to be taken by the Government of the United States in respect of the debt of Austria to this Government.

The action proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury has my approval. I recommend that the Congress enact the legislation necessary to enable the United States to join with the other relief creditors in permitting Austria to obtain the additional capital urgently needed for continuing its economic reconstruction, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to conclude an agreement for the settlement of Austria's debt to the United States.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 20, 1928.

ADDRESS OF HON. FINIS J. GARRETT, OF TENNESSEE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, when the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], deals with subjects not political he always makes a fine speech. On last Sunday evening he delivered a notable address at the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church in Washington. It is not only an interesting address but one that I think will be useful if read by all the Members of the House. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing this address of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address:

THE BIBLE

Ladies and gentlemen, there is that in man which can only be satisfied by a religion. However crude the mental equipment or however disciplined and dexterous the mental faculties, however commonplace or however vast the scope of his intellectual activities and the efforts of his sentient being, man comes, first or last, to worship.

With some the object of worship is a mere abstraction, with some an ideal, with some a force, with some a spirit; but whatever it may be, wherever it may be found or thought to be found, the object, whether force or spirit or star, is something which is at least believed to be superior to the worshiper.

We all realize that somewhere there is perfection—perfect organism, perfect law, thorough harmony, complete unity, perfect and therefore infinite power—and at the shrine of this perfection, wherever we conceive it to be, in whatever we conceive it to inhere, we lay our homage; upon its sacred altars burn our incense; to it build our trusting faith. Man despises flaws, at least in others. He is the natural enemy of a lie. We may love that which is not faultless, but we cherish such, despite the faults, not on account of them. We may adore that which possesses foibles and frailties, but when it comes to the supreme act of worship there is that implanted in the heart of man which centuries of effort could not eradicate that causes him absolutely to refuse to bow the head or bend the knee save only unto perfection.

The first criterion by which to judge the intrinsic character of a people is a study of the objects of that people's worship. Take the ancient Greeks. If we measure Greece by her art, by her literature, by her philosophy, by her eloquence, it is scarcely asserting too much to say that she stands supreme over all the nations of history, past or present. Her art was the nearest approach to perfection in art which the world has seen. In literature she has at least not been surpassed except by Shakespeare. In philosophy the mental processes used and the intellectual functions exercised have been the models for all time since, and the productions of her intellectual efforts have been the basis of all man's achievements in the realm of metaphysics. In forceful eloquence her supremacy is generally conceded. Even her law, while falling far below the civil system of later Rome, and further still below the standard of our great common law, is yet not unworthy the nation that gave to the world the Iliad and the Odyssey; that conceived the beautiful temples, the perfected statues, the exquisite paintings whose mere description charms the heart; that gave us the keen satire of Aristophanes, the sagacious disquisitions of Socrates, the subtle charm of Euripides's poetic soul, the researches and accomplishments of Plato and Aristotle, the resonant and profound eloquence of Demosthenes.

Measured by any of these, Greece need not to blush; and measured by them all, we repeat, it is hardly saying too much to assert that ancient Greece would still deserve the violet crown as the symbol of her intellectual supremacy. But when we turn to her religion, when we come to look upon the objects of her worship, we behold the weakness of Grecian character and perceive the devitalizing forces of Grecian institutions. Her gods were creatures of men's conception and possessed not the attributes of grace and perfection essential to stability.

It is a familiar principle recognized and acted upon every day that it is wholly impossible to envision a form we have not seen. There is no function or faculty of the mind which will enable it to conceive a thing, material or spiritual, whose attributes and qualities are wholly unknown. All man-made things are but combinations of familiar creations. One may examine the mythologies of antiquity and analyze the character of its divinities, and one will find them all but combinations of conceptions growing out of the observance of the doings and qualities and attributes of men. Their gods are simply men of expanded and ofttimes distorted powers, still chafing within manlike limitations, and hence as we see them now, lacking in divine strength or grace of power. Great Zeus himself, the greatest of all gods, partook of many of the pettiest passions common to men. But, nevertheless, to the Greeks their gods were perfect, else they would not have worshiped them; and hence we see their weakness in the objects of their devotions.

It is so of all peoples and of all ages. "The heathen in his blindness bows down to wood and stone" as the symbols of that perfection which the intrinsic qualities of his spirit have taught him is the object worthy his homage and his trust.

It being true, then, that men are by nature worshipers, and equally as true that they will worship only that which they believe to be perfect, it would seem to be obvious that the matter of primal importance is the instilling into the hearts and minds of men the truth of the perfection of God, and that in him only is perfection to be found.

To do this—to burn this supreme, basic truth into the hearts of men—it is evident even to the tyro that we must not present our conceptions of the godly functions. If we do this, wherein are we superior unto pagan peoples? Is it not a difference merely of mental equipment? The pagan gives his best and gravest thought to the effort of conceiving a god. What more do we do if we teach our own ideals? We may only use them to illustrate, to explain, to measure by. To learn the truth, and to teach it unto men you must begin at the other end. You must go to the source, whence flows all knowledge and all teaching relative to God, and that source is the word of God Himself, given for the express purpose of satisfying the inquiries of men—inquiries growing out of that inherent desire to worship; given for the express purpose of revealing His nature unto men, and showing that He and He alone is the supreme Entity for which the heart panteth and the soul longeth.

Let it be said just here that if the perfection of the godly character can not be shown from the Bible, it can not be shown at all. Ages of experience convince us that no effort of the mind of man unaided by extrinsic inspiration can accomplish the task of defining perfection in the abstract or of applying developed ideas of perfection to a concrete being. System after system of philosophy has been developed only to pass away and be forgotten. Principle after principle of metaphysics has been asserted, only to be clearly proven erroneous and displaced. The ingenuity of man can scarcely devise an abstract proposition resting alone on the basis of mental philosophy which some other individual can not reason away. But there is not a principle of action resting for its authority upon the word of God which the ingenuity of man can overthrow. Now and then a date may be shown, on account of human errors, to be wrong; now and then there may be a lapse in historical statement caused by some draughtsman's mistake; but in the assertion of principles or morality, in the expression and revelation of principles of human action, the system given there and asserted as the law, bids defiance to the iconoclast and the anti-Christian philosopher.

A study of the Bible, therefore, becomes a matter of first importance. Let no man feel that this study is likely to prove a disagreeable task. The Bible has an intrinsic interest for every individual. If once its study is begun the pursuit of it becomes a delight.

I think sometimes, though, that the reason men do not study it more is because they do not look upon it as a book, but regard it with some sort of intangible, inexpressible feelings that forbid a close approach to its inner meanings. Most of us in reading the Bible fail to apply to it the same rules which we apply to other books. We think of it as the word of God, and there we stop. We fail to remember that as one Christian commentator has put it, "it is the word of God in the language of men." If we will but realize that the Bible was written by men—men with feelings and hopes and loves and ambitions and fears and sorrows like ourselves, who used their words to express the sublime thoughts with which God had inspired them; if we will only recognize the humanity that shows forth in its every page—I think our sympathies will become closer and broader and our interest more intense.

It is a singular fact that of all the great reformatory characters of history, Jesus Christ, alone wrote nothing. All others who stand out in the pages of history, under the fierce limelight of the centuries, as leaders of great reform movements in morals, in politics, in science, in philosophy, in religion, put their theories and beliefs and teachings, the principles of their creeds, upon paper or parchment. Confucius, the great Chinese moralist; Mohammed, the founder of the ism which bears his name; Zoroaster, Luther, Knox, Bunyan, Wesley—all of these have left their teachings to the world over their personal signatures.

Christ wrote nothing. There is no evidence that he ever saw any part or parts of the history of his life written by others. Indeed, the historians tell us that all of what we call the New Testament was written after Christ's death. He has been more written about than all other characters in history combined, yet so far as we know he never put hand to parchment. I have often wondered why this was, why he left to others the task of preserving for posterity in written form the principles of his mighty cult. To me there is but one satisfactory explanation, and that is had he done so, had he written himself of himself, the force and power of his creed would have been lost in the transmission of it unto men. In other words, it was essential that men should write for men, that men should appeal to men, that the imperishable truths intended for the amelioration and salvation of human kind be conveyed to those for whom they were intended by the language of creatures of like weaknesses as well as like sympathies and faculties as themselves.

Let us not, then, lose sight of the humanity of the Bible while remembering its divinity.

Again, I think we know too little of the history of the Bible. We need to avail ourselves more fully of the benefit of the researches and labors of scholarship, and the light which has been thrown upon its production. The Bible is a collection of 66 books, written according to the best authorities, between 1,500 years before Christ and the one hundredth year after his death, thus covering a period of some 1,600 years. These books were written by different men at different times, and each, as is the case with all literature, takes color from the age in which it was written, and each bears the imprint of its author's personality. We do not know the names of the authors of all the books.

That Moses wrote the larger part of the first five books commonly called the Pentateuch is generally believed; but it is unquestioned that much of the substance of these books was merely compiled by him from older manuscripts. It is generally agreed among scholars that Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and the 12 minor prophets, from Hosea to Malachi, were written by the men whose names they bear, excepting some parts of Zachariah and Isaiah, and possibly all of Jonah. The Proverbs are very generally attributed to Solomon, and there is small doubt that most of them were the production of this master mind, but many were doubtless maxims which had been cherished in Jewish life and handed down from father to son, and were merely compiled by the great, wise king. The Psalms were written by different Hebraic poets, the chief of whom was David. Lamentations was probably the work of Jeremiah. Ecclesiastes and the Canticles are frequently credited to Solomon, but there is much doubt as to his really being their author. It is not known who wrote the books of Job, Esther, Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Nehemiah, Ezra, and Ruth. The books of the Old Testament were all written in Hebrew with the exception of a few passages which were in Chaldae.

The fact of their inspiration rests for its authority upon two bases: First, the intrinsic characteristics of the books themselves; and secondly, upon Jewish traditions. These books were carefully preserved through all the turmoils of Jewish life and handed down from generation to generation, from age to age, as the sacred writings. Through all their wanderings, through the heyday of their national existence, with its splendor and power, through all the calamities that befell their kingdom, through all the long years of their captivity and persecution, through glory and through gloom, this peculiar people guarded with jealous care the splendid traditions of their race and preserved, despite all opposition, the sacred revelations of law granted unto their fathers, so that at the time of Christ the books of the Old Testament, arranged substantially as we have them to-day, were received as the Bible—as the revelation of God's purposes and will toward men.

In this supreme devotion to their traditions and racial heritage lies the one great strength of Jewish character, and in it may be found the reason why this people, comparatively few in numbers, weak in governmental functions and powers, unable to protect themselves from their enemies, too weak to preserve their political institutions from destruction, powerless to keep from falling an easy prey to first one king and then another, have yet impressed themselves upon all the world as has no other nation, no other race. Civilization received the rudiments of its philosophy from Greece, its law from Rome, but its religion came from the Jews, and is supreme above all philosophy and all law.

There is no history at once so pathetic and so proud as the history of the Jews. The years of their life as a stable, unified, national power were no more than a hundred and five and twenty. Saul, David, and Solomon each reigned about 40 years. Their kingdom was but a small strip bordering upon a narrow sea. The inhabitants probably never numbered at any one time as many as now live in the city of New York. And yet from out that people have come the supremest influences that have touched the life of mankind, and the ruling tenets of their creed have been engrafted upon the civilization of the world. Their ideals have been shaded into the art, have been absorbed into the philosophy, been written into poetry, been instilled into the law of all the civilized earth, and become the test and measure of them all. The Jew wanders to-day from end to end of the earth, and nowhere can he find a land over which floats a flag that he can call the flag of his fathers or the sovereign symbol of his race; but wherever he goes, if it be where civilization has gone, he beholds woven into the very fabric of that civilization as the web and woof of its strongest texture the traditional creeds of his race, beholds emblazoned, as it were, on every civilized flag the tenets of his fathers.

Of the writers of the New Testament we know or can learn much more than of the old—the places of their birth, the occupations of each, and in most instances the times and places of their deaths. We know much of their personal characteristics and habits of thought and action. They lived and wrote at a time when the human mind was beginning an earnest effort to learn something of itself and of the truth, when the activities of the race were being noted for the benefit of posterity, and therefore much information has been preserved concerning them.

The mighty and majestic workings of God's imperial and splendid purposes are nowhere more strongly shown than in the time at which Christ was born. You are all familiar with the fact that civilization has ever moved from east to west and grown in splendor as it moved. The first great decisive battle of the world was that of Marathon, where Grecian alertness and skill met barbaric numbers and strength and overthrew the ancient eastern power. Following that battle the Grecian mind was quickened into new vigor and activity. They caught up the crude learning and language of the past and developed them to the most exquisite refinement. When their system of philosophy had been developed, when men had learned to think and reason, Alexander the Great came down from the north and absorbed this mighty intellectual force into his great world power, and through him Grecian culture and refinement were spread over the earth; it was carried to the west, to the north, and back into the east, whence had come the seed, there was borne the full op'ed flower—aye, the ripened fruit of intellectual effort; and so the world learned to think. This was the first great step in the preparation for the coming of Christ. Centuries dragged along, and still farther to the west arose mighty Rome. Her lines reached out, and in her mighty grasp there came Grecian philosophy and Jewish religion.

She absorbed them all—all the good and all the evil—and to them applied her imperial law. She became the mistress of the world, and when all had been unified there came the great Augustan age, an age of profound peace. The Temple of Janus was closed; the wars ceased; men took up the work of intellectual development. The second step in the preparation was ended, and out from the manger amongst the olive-girt hills of Judea there came in meekness but in the supremest strength this world has ever seen—the Christ.

The ground had been prepared for the seed and the sower came. He came and sowed. He walked and taught and lived and loved for 3 and 30 years. The great nation into which He was born caught up His teachings. They were as the leaven, their workings were slow, measured by some standards; but steadily did they grow until at length Christianity was adopted as the state religion of the supreme, the one nation then on earth; and when this had been done, but not until this was done, did the Roman Kingdom fall apart. And as it fell there was borne on and on to other climes and other peoples the three great forces it had gathered and developed—its own law, the culture of Greece, the religion of Judea.

How vast and sublime were the potent forces of those centuries! What man can read the interpretation of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar by the prophet Daniel and study it in the light of history and doubt great Daniel's inspiration?

Permit now a brief statement, very general in character, of what may be learned in the Bible.

The historian finds there the only authentic account we have of the creation of the earth and the beginning of man, told with a sublime simplicity of style and language which is at once the delight and the despair of the poetic soul.

The scientist finds there principles and practices that bear the indelible stamp of genius.

The metaphysician finds there philosophical questions philosophically considered.

The moralist finds there a code beside which the Ethics of Aristotle, the Morals of Seneca, the Memorabilia of Xenophon, the Offices of Cicero are meager indeed.

The statesman will find there the story of the formation and organization of society, will learn how society was generated and communities established, and thus be able to begin at the very foundation to study the theories of the social compact. He can find the story of the formation of the first republic in the history of the Jewisr commonwealth and observe in its fullness the earliest recorded story of synthetic statesmanship.

The soldier may study strategic military movements and plans and find them not unworthy of emulation. It is said that the plan of Joshua's campaign in battling for the Promised Land stamps him as one of the greatest military leaders in history.

The lawyer will find therein the oldest code of laws of which we have any information. He will find, too, that there is not in the civilized world a single principle of law which is abhorrent to the teachings of Christianity. It is the basis of the whole system of common law. In the Old Testament and the New he can find principles discussed and asserted which "shed more than a glimmering light" upon questions of everyday practice. The subjects of the marriage contract, the alienation of property among the living, the acquiring of it by bequest, by inheritance; the obligation of an oath; the relation of governor and governed, of master and servant, of husband and wife; the statutes of limitations; the right of redemption of land sold for debts; the nature of punishment of various crimes; the grounds for divorce—all of these subjects receive copious illustrations from the Bible. To the Jewish law, as codified by Moses, may be traced many elements of that system of equity construed and applied by our modern courts of chancery.

The orator and poet will find there the very essence of eloquence, cadence, and harmony of language. An argument of its inspiration is frequently drawn from its excellence in expression. From a literary standpoint alone, measured by all the canons of literary criticism, its supremacy over all other intellectual efforts of man is established.

May I not take time to give you one comparison between sacred and secular writers? If the entire scholarship of the world should pass judgment upon the various literary productions of the ages, the consensus of opinion among the majority would probably be that the Iliad of Homer, recounting the struggle between the Trojans and the Greeks, is the most powerful and sublime. The beginning of the eighth book of this work was probably the loftiest effort ever made to describe a god, and to show his superiority not over men and heroes but over gods, and not over one god but over them all combined. When we place ourselves, as nearly as we can, in sympathy with the environment of the days when this poem was produced, when we remember that to the Greeks their gods were perfect, and that to them Jupiter represented the highest and vastest power of which they could conceive, we begin to realize what a mighty task Homer set himself to accomplish when he essayed to speak in the language of this god, saying:

"The saffron-colored morning was spread over the whole earth and Jupiter, rejoicing in his thunder, called an assembly of the gods upon the highest top of many-headed Olympus. He himself spake to them and all the gods together listened.

"'Hear me, all ye gods and all ye goddesses, that I may speak what my soul within my breast commands. Let not, therefore, any female deity or any male endeavor to break through my word; but all consent together that I may quickly perform these works.

"'Whomsoever, therefore, of the gods I shall understand to have gone by himself, and of his own accord, to give assistance to the Trojans, or to the Greeks shall return to Olympus shamefully wounded; or I will throw him, seized by me, into dark hell far off, whither the most deep abyss is under the earth, whither these iron gates and brazen threshold are as far within hell as heaven is distant from earth. He will then know by how much I am the most powerful of all gods. But come, try, O ye gods, that ye may all see. Hang down the golden chain from heaven, hang it down, all ye gods and goddesses; but ye shall not be able to draw from heaven to the earth Jupiter, the great counselor, though ye strive ever so much. But when I afterwards shall be willing to draw, I shall lift both the earth and the sea, then I shall bind the chain around the top of Olympus, and they shall all hang aloft. For as much am I above gods and above men.'"

Now with this masterly passage from the mighty man of ancient days who had probably the greatest natural and acquired advantages of perfecting a genius, let the following, written by one brought up as a shepherd in a country where learning was but little esteemed, be compared. Both productions are in poetry, and the translations here given are said to be literal:

"O Lord, My God, Thou art very great! Thou art clothed with honor and majesty! Who coverest Thyself with light as with a garment; who stretchest out the heavens like a canopy; who layest the beams of His chambers in the waters; who makest the clouds His chariots; who walkest upon the wings of the wind; who makest His angels spirits, His minister a flame of fire; who laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be moved forever. Thou covered it with the deep as with a garment; the waters stood above the mountains. At Thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of Thy thunder they hasted away. They go up by the mountains; they go down by the valleys unto the place Thou has founded for them. Thou has set a bound they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth. O Lord, how manifold are Thy works! In wisdom hast Thou made them all. The earth is full of Thy riches. So is the great and wide sea, wherein are creatures innumerable both small and great. There go the ships. There is the leviathan which Thou has made to play therein. These all wait upon Thee that Thou mayest give their food in due season. That Thou givest them they gather. Thou openest Thy hand; they are filled with good; Thou hidest Thy face; they are troubled; they die and return to their dust. Thou sendest forth Thy spirit, they are created; and Thou renewest the face of the earth. The glory of the Lord shall endure forever. The Lord shall rejoice in His works. He looketh on the earth and it trembleth. He toucheth the hills and they smoke. I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live. I will sing praises unto my God while I have my being."

Would not all comment on the comparative merit of these passages be superfluous?

But greater than all history and science and government and law and poetry and literature, every individual finds in the sacred volume the substance of his faith and hope and eternal love. It and it alone points the way unto supernal peace.

H. R. 10540. An act to credit retired commissioned officers of the Coast Guard with active duty during the World War performed since retirement; and

H. R. 11022. An act to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard.

TAX REDUCTION

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been requested by a number of Senators to give notice as early as possible when the Finance Committee will begin consideration of the revenue bill as sent to us from the House. I desire to give notice now, so that members of the committee can arrange their affairs, that we expect to begin the consideration of the revenue bill on Tuesday, April 3, at 10 o'clock.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask if it is proposed to hold hearings?

Mr. SMOOT. That, of course, the committee itself will have to decide. I will state, however, that at the first meeting we will have present a representative from the Treasury Department with the latest statistics as to the amount of income received this year as compared with a year ago.

Mr. COUZENS. I would like to ask the chairman if he thinks that the committee is going to hold hearings? There are several provisions of the bill on which hearings ought to be held and ample notice ought to be given to persons who desire to appear, if that is to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not discussed it with any members of the committee. If there is any member of the committee who desires hearings, I am quite sure the request will be granted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he does not think it possible to call a meeting of the committee before that time to determine whether or not we are going to have hearings and how long the hearings are going to take? Of course I and other members of the committee are interested, at least I am sure Senators on this side of the aisle are, if it shall be necessary to have hearings, to expedite them as much as possible so that we may have the bill reported out and get some tax-relief legislation at this session.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not any doubt that we will have tax-relief legislation during this session of Congress. I will also say that there have been few requests coming to me as chairman of the committee for hearings on the bill. I might add also for the information of the Senator that there are only about three items in the bill concerning which I have heard any complaint at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Then it is the Senator's opinion that it is not necessary to have prolonged hearings on the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that it is not. For instance, I will say to the Senator that the question of the valuation of 1913 is the point with reference to which I have had more complaint as to the House provision than with reference to any other provision in the bill. The next one that amounts to anything has reference to section 220. Of course, the Senator knows what it is. It is a very difficult piece of legislation. The House has changed it entirely. If I were to express my own opinion, I would say that I think the changed provision as adopted by the House is even more complicated than section 220 of the existing law. Those are the only two subjects about which I have received letters.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the hearings will not be long, so that we may get the bill reported out promptly.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jamaica Plain, Framingham Center, Roxbury, and Swampscott, Mass., also of a large number of citizens of Massachusetts individually, praying for the prompt passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. EDGE presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Winfield S. Price, mayor of Camden, N. J., relative to naval shipbuilding, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS,
Camden, N. J., March 20, 1928.

Hon. WALTER E. EDGE,
Senator, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR EDGE: I have noted with considerable regret that when the Navy appropriation bill passed the House of Representatives that it contained an amendment by Mr. DALLINGER, of Massachusetts, providing that one-half the ships authorized must be constructed in Government navy yards.

My opinion in this is that it is a serious matter, and the amendment should be eliminated from the bill before it is passed by the Senate. If the Government is going to construct half of its ships in Government navy yards, it will result in a few more years in the practical elimination of all privately owned shipbuilding industries in this country. As you perhaps know, there are but about three shipyards left in the United States to-day, and it seems only fair that if these industries are to continue in business that they must be given practically all of the new construction of naval vessels that may be authorized by the United States Government in order that they may be kept alive and available for the construction of ships in the event of the occurrence of another major emergency similar to that with which we were confronted in 1917.

Very truly yours,

WINFIELD S. PRICE, Mayor.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from W. V. Brandt, of Germantown, Pa., relative to the naval building program.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A VETERAN'S PLEA FOR THE NAVY

Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHALL: Every veteran of the World War has engraved upon his memory incidents which time can never erase. Some of these are pleasant memories, and one such which I shall never forget is that of my meeting with you and your charming wife on board the U. S. S. Mount Vernon immediately following our engagement with a German submarine upon the high seas 250 miles west of Brest.

On the morning of September 5, 1918, I had been on duty in our after gunnery-control station for the morning watch from 4 to 8 a. m. At 7.53 our ship was torpedoed by a German submarine. At the time I was very busy directing the fire of our stern guns and the dropping of depth bombs, at which duty I was kept busy until relieved just before 9 o'clock. As I came down out of the control station there is engraved upon my memory a picture of you and your brave little wife standing on our boat deck, calm and collected, while Mrs. Schall kept you advised of all that was going on. This picture of a brave American woman standing by the side of her husband upon the deck of a sinking ship, with a poise and bearing as if she were in the drawing room of her own home, so impressed me that it has ever been one of the most pleasant memories of my entire war experience.

I had always intended during the years that have passed since the dark days of 1918 of calling upon you to renew our brief acquaintance, but I have never had this opportunity; but, as I know from my conversation with you aboard the Mount Vernon that you are a friend of the Navy, I am taking the liberty of addressing this letter to you at this time when, in my opinion, the Navy needs all of its friends.

As you know, the Navy Department recently submitted to Congress a bill providing for the construction of certain auxiliary ships which, in the opinion of the General Board of the Navy, are needed to enable our country to maintain a well-balanced, coordinated fleet for its protection. Unfortunately this bill has been greatly reduced in the House, and as it will soon be before the Senate I am taking the liberty of writing you in hopes that the original program, as requested by the Navy Department, will receive more favorable consideration in the Senate.

From my experience in the Navy (in which I have served as a midshipman at the Naval Academy, and as an ensign and lieutenant in submarine and transport service during the World War) and from a study of the situation, inspired by a life-long interest in the naval service, I know that we do not, at the present time, have a first-class, well-balanced, coordinated Navy. While we are permitted by a treaty to have 18 first-class battleships, we are lacking in auxiliary ships, and 18 battleships without sufficient cruisers, submarines, aircraft carriers, and destroyer leaders, to scout ahead and form a protective screen around them, are, in my opinion, 18 doomed ships.

The Navy Department has determined, by a careful study, the number of auxiliary ships which our Navy needs in order to round out its fleet, and I am convinced that without these necessary auxiliary ships we will not have a first-class, well-balanced Navy, and the vital interests of this country, in my opinion, necessitate that we maintain a first-class Navy.

Our country is no longer isolated from the rest of the world, and while we have earnestly endeavored to keep out of entangling alliances, developments in other parts of the world have their effect upon this Nation. Until all the major powers of the world agree to disarm and settle international disputes by arbitration, there is always the possibility of war. It is, therefore, in my opinion, good judgment to have this Nation always prepared to defend its vital interests.

Situated as we are, any power which might seek to injure us must do it by way of the sea. Our Navy is, therefore, our first line of defense, and in the final analysis, our strength, our security, and our prosperity rest upon our Navy.

It is, in my opinion, particularly unfortunate that no provision was made in the bill as passed by the House for submarines. As a graduate of the Navy school for submarine officers, I firmly believe that there is no ship which can take the place of the submarine. It is one of the best defensive weapons yet devised for offshore defense of strategic and vital ports. As an advance scout, able to travel submerged and gain information regarding enemy movements and disposition, it is in a class entirely alone.

My dear Senator, do not think that because I am writing you in favor of our maintaining a strong Navy that I am an alarmist or that I believe in wars, for such is not the case. As a veteran of the late war, I have had the experience of seeing my shipmates blown to pieces around me. I have stood upon the deck of a ship and seen hardened Navy seamen, with years of experience, stand at attention with tears streaming down their faces as the mangled forms of our shipmates were brought from out of the hold below and over the topside.

A man who has passed through such experience is not an advocate of war. Furthermore, I have two splendid young sons, of whom I am very proud, and I hope that they may be spared the horrors of a war which I have seen. I am, therefore, not making this plea for a strong Navy under the belief that a strong Navy leads to war, but, on the contrary, I am making it under the firm belief that unpreparedness leads to war, while strength and power to defend the interests of this Nation will repel war and be a means of keeping us out of war.

It is the duty of Congress to provide and maintain the Navy of the United States, and I trust that in the fulfillment of its duty Congress will provide for our maintaining an adequate Navy, fully equipped and consisting of the necessary auxiliaries to protect our battleship fleet and the vital interests of this Nation.

I trust, my dear Senator, that you will consider this letter in the same friendly and kindly spirit with which it is written and as one coming from a patriotic American now in civil life, who is willing to fight now for the Navy just as sincerely and intensely as he fought with the Navy in the days of 1918, when the Nation needed a Navy and our Navy needed men.

Most sincerely yours,

W. VAN C. BRANDT,
771 Maplewood Avenue, Germantown, Pa.

TARIFF COMMISSION—INTERVIEW WITH ALFRED P. DENNIS

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interview published in the Baltimore Sun of March 17, 1928, with Dr. Alfred P. Dennis, a member of the Tariff Commission, relating to conditions in that body.

There being no objection, the interview was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENNIS IS HOPEFUL OVER TARIFF BODY—MARYLANDER SAYS IF HE WERE NOT HE WOULD HAVE QUIT WITH COSTIGAN—PREDICTS IMPROVEMENT—DEMOCRATIC MEMBER OF COMMISSION SAYS COOLIDGE IS TRYING TO IRON OUT TROUBLES

[Washington Bureau of the The Sun]

WASHINGTON, March 16.—Alfred P. Dennis, Democrat, of Maryland, asserted to-day that if it were not for his hope that something will be done to correct conditions in the Tariff Commission he would follow the lead of Edward P. Costigan and resign.

He said, however, he was convinced President Coolidge desired to iron out the difficulties in the commission; that he believed the special investigating committee of Congress would recommend an adequate remedy, and that in view of this he hoped for a rehabilitation of the commission.

Mr. Dennis discussed the situation in the commission when he was questioned about a statement issued yesterday by Commissioner Edgar B. Brossard, Republican, of Utah, in which Mr. Brossard said that Mr. Costigan had resigned after he had failed completely to sustain his charges before the Senate committee and that Mr. Costigan had considered everybody out of step but himself.

Mr. Dennis took this as an implication that he had been joining with the Republican members of the commission against Mr. Costigan, Progressive Republican.

NO REFLECTION INTENDED

Mr. Brossard, however, maintained that he had meant to make no reflection on Mr. Dennis or his work on the commission.

"My statement was intended solely for Mr. Costigan, and it was directed at him because of the extreme charges he made against me in the statement given out when he resigned," Mr. Brossard said.

Mr. Dennis said he did not wish to be drawn into any public controversy now, and that he did not want to issue a formal statement. He said, however, that he considered that Mr. Brossard's criticism of Commissioner Costigan had carried with it an "unfortunate reflection" on the two Democratic members—himself and Commissioner Lincoln Dixon, of Indiana. He pointed out that the three Democrats had been in substantial agreement in recent cases sent by the commission to the President, including rag rugs, cherries, synthetic phenolic resin, and logs.

"The commission has been confronted with enormous difficulties in the administration of the law, difficulties which have been emphasized by the presence on the commission of members with political axes to grind," Mr. Dennis said.

COMMISSION "NOT ON LEVEL"

"I have repeatedly stated in public and again reiterate that the commission is not run on the level. We grind out cases here involving higher duties, but when it comes to lower duties we have done nothing outside of a few cases of despicable unimportance, such as paint-brush handles and live bobwhite quail.

"We have spent years in obtaining the facts in some of the important lower duty cases, the cost ranging from $25,000 to $75,000, only to have euthanasia decreed in the latter stages of the investigation by the special interests represented by the high protectionist wing of the commission.

EXPECTS IMPROVEMENT

"The flexible tariff is thus used as a cover to prevent the very things it was intended to do. Mr. Costigan, feeling that the case was hopeless for an impartial, scientific administration of the tariff act, has voluntarily sought retirement. I am not quite so hopeless about the situation as Mr. Costigan, since I think the attitude of the President is distinctly sympathetic to clearing up the difficulties which have embarrassed the commission.

"Something in the way of corrective measures can be expected also from the Senate committee, which is formulating a program for the rehabilitation of the Tariff Commission. But for the hope which I am expressing I would be compelled to straightway follow Mr. Costigan into retirement."

O. G. VILLARD

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I present certain newspaper articles relative to recent dinners in honor of O. G. Villard, editor of the Nation, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD. In this connection I desire to call attention to previous insertions which appear on page 4159, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 5, 1928, and on page 4350, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 7, 1928.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Afro-American, Baltimore, Md., Saturday, March 17, 1928]

BLEASE TELLS WHY HE READ AFRO ARTICLE INTO RECORD—ATTENDANCE OF TWO RACES AT DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA "NATION" DINNER TERMED EQUALITY—MRS. TERRELL, BROOKS, NEVAL THOMAS THERE—MANCE, WILKINSON, NAMED AS SOUTHERNERS WHO SUPPORT HIS VIEWS

By Louis R. Lautier

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"The people of South Carolina will oppose the election of any man as President of the United States who believes in social equality and does not draw the color line."

Senator COLE L. BLEASE, Democrat, of South Carolina, made this statement in an interview Tuesday, explaining his insertion into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of an article from the Baltimore Afro-American concerning the Oswald Garrison Villard dinners.

"My reason for putting that article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD," Senator BLEASE said, "was that I wanted the people of the South to know the real conditions in Washington and to further know that there are men in politics in the Nation who do not draw the 'color line' and are willing to eat at the same table with colored people and associate with them on equal terms."

Senator BLEASE added: "Of course, that is their business if they desire to do so, but it is our business to protect ourselves from placing in office any man who might attempt to force the same conditions upon us in the South."

SENATOR WALSH

It is believed that Senator BLEASE had reference to Senator THOMAS J. WALSH, Democrat, of Montana, who is a candidate for the Democratic nomination, when he inserted the Afro-American article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and made his original statement that "some men do not mind associating at the table with certain other people, but that the people of my State might object to voting for that kind of a man for President of the United States."

FOUR SENATORS AT DINNER

Senator WALSH was one of four Senators who attended the dinner in honor of the tenth anniversary of Mr. Villard's editorship of the Nation. The dinner was at the Washington Hotel, where Senator BLEASE lives, on March 1. There were three other Senators present.

Senator GERALD P. NYE, Republican, of North Dakota presided. Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, Democrat, of Montana, was one of the speakers. The other Senator was young BOB LA FOLLETTE, Republican, of Wisconsin.

MRS. TERRELL THERE

Three colored persons attended the dinner. They were Neval H. Thomas, Dunbar High School teacher and president of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, widow of the late Judge Robert H. Terrell, and the Rev. Robert W. Brooks, pastor of the Lincoln Temple Congregational Church at Eleventh and R Streets NW. Mrs. Terrell is reported to have sat next to Senator WALSH.

The order to see Senator BLEASE and find out his purpose in inserting the Afro-American article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD came from Carl J. Murphy, the editor of the Afro-American.

There was some trepidation in my approach of Senator BLEASE. But once in his presence it quickly fled. He was affable and spoke freely on the race question.

THINKS HIMSELF "FRIEND"

"I have always been the colored man's friend and am so considered by him to-day," he declared.

"I do not favor social equality," he said, "and the best element of colored people do not want social equality. They want equal rights, equal privileges, and service. The best element of them realizes that when a white man in the South places himself on the level and equality in social matters, that he is not as good as they are, and they do not accept him in their homes as their guest.

MENTIONS MANCE AND WILKINSON

Senator BLEASE referred to a number of colored men in South Carolina, including the Rev. R. W. Mance, whom he hopes and believes will be elected to the bishopric at the next general conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and R. S. Wilkinson, president of the South Carolina Normal and Industrial College.

"I am satisfied," he said, "that they will bear me out in the position that they do not ask for social equality; nor do they seek it; neither are they anxious to hold official positions.

ALL WOULD VOTE FOR HIM

"I am satisfied further that the entire colored population of my State will testify to the fact that the southern white man is their best friend. I believe if it were left to the colored voters of my State, and each and every one of them had the power to cast his vote as he pleases, 90 per cent of them would vote for me for any office for which I might become a candidate."

JIM CROW CAR BILL

Referring to the bill which he has introduced in the Senate to provide separate coaches on street railways in the District of Columbia, Senator BLEASE said that this bill "is not intended as a political strike at or insult to the Negro race, but I believe that the passage of such a bill will prevent at some time very serious trouble in the District of Columbia.

PROTECTION?

"Some white man at some time," he stated, "is going to resist or resent a colored man's, or what he considers a colored man's, attention or discourtesy to some white woman in the street cars. It is going to lead to an assault. Possibly some one in the car may be killed or seriously injured, and it may lead to serious trouble between the races. This can be averted by giving to each race the same car service, the same rate, and forces no one in any inferior or in any embarrassing situation. It is a question of protecting both races."

Senator BLEASE introduced the first bill in the State Legislature of South Carolina to pension a colored person, William Rose, who was the personal body servant of Gen. Macy Gregg in the Confederate Army.

THE FRUIT CAKE

Senator BLEASE has served as trustee of the South Carolina Normal and Industrial College at Orangeburg, S. C. As governor of the State he was chairman of the board of trustees ex officio. Each Christmas from the time of his governorship to the present the girls in the domestic science department have sent to him and Mrs. Blease a fruit cake. He delights to refer to this remembrance even on the floor of the Senate.

COMMON-SCHOOL EDUCATION

"I always advocated common-school education for the colored people," he said, "that is, reading, writing, arithmetic, and those things which it takes to make the colored man a good citizen and to put him into position to take care of himself in whatever deal or transaction in life he might have to make."

RELEASED 1,000 PRISONERS

When he was Governor of South Carolina, Senator BLEASE related, "I found the penitentiary overcrowded with colored people who had been overlooked and had served years and years longer than they should have. They had no money to hire lawyers, no influential friends to work for them, and I took my secretary and went to the penitentiary and interviewed all the various prisoners personally, and I released a thousand or more colored men from that hell-hole and gave them a new chance in life.

"Up to my present reports not a one of them has been recommitted for any violation of the terms of his parole or for having committed any other crime."

"CITY'S NATION DINNER MOST MEMORABLE IN SERIES"—VILLARD—VILLARD COMMENDS LOCAL COMMITTEE—NATION FOUNDED TO MAKE WAY EASY FOR FREEDOM OF THOSE WHO ARE A PRICELESS PART OF OUR POPULATION

The Baltimore dinner had given him the real kick of the series, Oswald Garrison Villard declared at the climax of the local Nation dinner at the home of Miss Elizabeth Gilman, where 127 guests joined in paying tribute to the grandson of William Lloyd Garrison, one of America's foremost editors and champions of human rights.

In a jocular, yet serious, vein Mr. Villard declared that the peace and harmony in the other dinners given in his honor had a fitting climax in the experiences of the local committee. In paying a tribute to Miss Elizabeth Gilman and members of the committee he recalled that her father was one of the original backers of the Nation.

BREAK SHACKLES

The Nation, he said, and the old Liberator, which preceded it, came into existence for the express purpose of taking the shackles off colored slaves and of helping these people who had been in bondage for 250 years find a proper place in the country.

It had always been the determination of its founders to devote a part of their space to unpopular causes. The present dinner, because of the difficulty the committee had in finding a place to hold it, had given him another "glorious chance" to stand up for the principles of human brotherhood.

That the Nation and the spirit it fostered may live to fight on, Mr. Villard expressed his hope that these series of dinners would bring behind it a growing group of subscribers and supporters.

JUDGE FRANK PRESIDES

In an opening statement presenting Judge Eli Frank as master of ceremonies, Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, of Madison Square Temple, stated that "because he believed in God he believed in the brotherhood of man." Joseph Wood Krutch, dramatic editor of the Nation, born, he says, in Tennessee, but often called a "northerner" in the South and a "southerner" in the North, called Eugene O'Neill America's greatest dramatist.

QUOTES CULLEN

Arthur Garfield Hayes, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, and one of the attorneys in the Sweet case in Detroit, referred to the difficulties the committee had had in getting a place to hold the dinner as "a darn good chance to stand up for a square deal."

Mr. Hayes quoted Countee Cullen's poem "Baltimore," and attributed as slavish "fear" on the part of men and women to break through outworn customs and assert themselves according to their own consciences.

He also severely arraigned the Government for its aggressive intervention in smaller countries, declaring that "because I am an American I should rejoice if Sandino should get the best of the marines."

MENCKEN'S LETTER

In a letter expressing his regret that he could not be present on account of a minor operation—referred to jocularly by the toastmaster as an operation which would naturally "increase his air space," Henry L. Mencken said, "Don't have any fear; the Ku-Klux Klan may heave a possum or a couple of Bibles in at the window, but it will do no worse."

The dinner ended peacefully after the committee had spent a hectic week finding a place where white and colored guests could eat together.

According to Miss Elizabeth Gilman, practically every hotel and public dining room in the city had an opportunity to register its policy on this matter.

The dinner was first arranged at the Southern Hotel; service was withdrawn when the committee faced, told them that colored guests would have to be included.

At first colored guests were advised that some difficulty might arise if they tried to attend the dinner, but Villard, when informed of the ban on colored subscribers, flatly refused to attend if they were barred.

CEILING CAVED IN

It was then transferred to the Arundel Hall, but fortunately permission was later refused here also. On Monday of this week the ceiling in this building caved in, probably fatally wounding three and seriously wounding three others.

Effort to get the Friends' Meeting House on Charles Street met with a refusal, on the ground that the meeting was neither religious nor civic, and could not be held there.

Permission was given and withdrawn at the Friends Meeting House at Park Avenue and Laurens Street.

It was then transferred to the home of Miss Gilman.

In a letter to Miss Gilman, Norman Thomas, executive director of the League for Industrial Democracy, characterized her efforts in behalf of the dinner as "a great service for racial fair play not alone in Baltimore but throughout the country."

Those of the group who attended the dinner were Dr. Ernest Lyon; Liberian Consul General Carl J. Murphy, president of the Afro-American Co.; Dr. C. E. Stewart; John W. Haywood; Dr. A. J. Mitchell; and William N. Jones, managing editor of the Afro.

THE NATION DINNER

Why was it that Baltimore daily newspapers gave so much publicity to the Nation dinner staged in honor of Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard, of New York, at the home of Miss Elizabeth Gilman in Baltimore Friday night of last week?

Could it have been because of Mr. Villard's renown as a speaker, his high position as editor of a liberal weekly magazine, the importance of the occasion, or the message or the luster attached to the Garrison name and family?

There must have been something of great significance in the occasion. For five days preceding the dinner the Baltimore Sun carried from one-half to one column of news on its most prominent local page about this event. More than a column, two photographs, and an editorial appeared the day afterwards.

And yet a score of years ago Mr. Villard spoke in Baltimore before an audience of 1,500 persons. He was at that time the brilliant editor of the New York Evening Post, a daily newspaper.

No advance notices of more than an inch appeared in the daily press, and the account of the address which appeared in the Sun next day was short, uninforming, and inconspicuous. It was printed under the heading of "Obituaries."

Mr. Walter T. McGuinn recalled in last week's Afro that Baltimore closed its ears also 100 years ago to the message of Mr. Villard's grandfather, William Lloyd Garrison. Mr. Garrison had to issue his own paper, The Genius of Universal Emancipation, and Baltimore jailed him for condemning the slave trade and demanding immediate emancipation of negro slaves.

For a hundred years Grandfather Garrison and Grandson Villard have harped on the same tune, championing the cause of the weak, helping the slave and the freedmen to find their place as free and equal American citizens.

The reason for the advance publicity to the Nation dinner is to be found in none of the ideas suggested above. It was, however, intimated in the Sun editorial Saturday morning.

The reason was that the two races, black and white, were to sit down at this dinner together, a procedure which the Sun terms contrary to the "firmly established convictions and practices of this community with respect to social contacts between the two races."

The publicity had the desired effect in part. No down-town hotel would make it convenient for the dinner to be held there. Clubs and even Christian churches refused the committee a meeting place.

Miss Gilman, out of a large heart, offered her own home, where the subscribers and friends of Mr. Villard dined, as Mr. Joseph Krutch, of the Nation, facetiously observed, like "conspirators."

In the biggest sense this publicity was ineffectual. Mr. Villard termed the Baltimore dinner the most memorable of the series. Others were staged in Philadelphia, Washington, New York, and Buffalo. He got a "kick," he said, out of the success of Baltimore Nation readers in standing up for the principles of human brotherhood.

Every banquet speaker praised the fine spirit of Miss Gilman and her committee. Nation readers who wished dined and went about their business.

WOULD REJOICE IF SANDINO BEAT MARINES—A. G. HAYS, CIVIL LIBERTIES HEAD, SAYS SO AT DINNER FOR VILLARD—120 WHITE, 7 COLORED GUESTS AT BANQUET—EDITOR CALLS EVENT CHANCE TO STAND UP FOR HUMAN BROTHERHOOD

"Because I am an American I should rejoice if Sandino should get the best of the marines," Arthur Garfield Hays, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, asserted last night at a dinner in honor of Oswald Garrison Villard's tenth anniversary as editor of the Nation.

Mr. Hays's statement was made at the home of Miss Elisabeth Gilman, 513 Park Avenue, where the dinner was held after several days of feverish activity had been passed in attempting to find a place where white persons and negroes could dine together. Seven negroes attended the dinner and were seated with white guests. The white guests numbered 120.

CITES AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS

"How can any American, believing in American institutions, support the actions of the American Government in Nicaragua?" Mr. Hays asked.

"The principles of nonintervention," he added, "and the right to carry on a nation's own affairs of government are not altered merely because the United States is the aggressor."

Judge Eli Frank, associate judge of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City, was toastmaster and introduced the speakers—Mr. Villard, Mr. Hays, and Mr. Joseph Wood Krutch, dramatic editor of the Nation.

CALLS EVENT BALM TO SPIRIT

Mr. Villard, touching on the difficulties of the committee, of which Miss Gilman was a member, in finding a dining place, said it was balm to his spirit to find a "glorious chance" to stand up for the principles of human brotherhood.

These principles, he said, had not been questioned in other cities which recently have held similar dinners in his honor. He feared, he added, his principles were becoming unduly conservative when he heard of the experiences in Baltimore.

The editor appealed for support of independent periodicals, which he called a necessity if democracy was to continue in a country whose daily press, he asserted, was largely controlled by private interests.

Within a few years, Mr. Villard added, views now considered as radical will be thought conservative, as has been the case in the past.

Mr. Krutch spoke on "America's Contribution to Modern Drama," which he described as great. He called New York the modern dramatic capital and asserted that Eugene O'Neill was the greatest American dramatist.

PROTESTS CENSORSHIP

Protesting against censorship, Mr. Krutch said that the best plays might be stopped by a whisper at a time when the American drama was becoming most significant.

"Europe has taken in much of our trash as it has taken in our movies, but American drama has won in Europe a greater amount of respect than any other example of American art," he declared.

A letter from H. L. Mencken, written from a hospital where he is undergoing a minor operation, was read to the guests by Judge Frank. Mr. Mencken expressed his regret at not being able to attend the dinner and assured the guests that—

"The Ku-Klux Klan may heave a possum or a couple of Bibles in at the window, but it will do no worse."

LIST OF GUESTS

The list of guests as given out by Mrs. Reynold A. Spaeth, secretary of the committee, follows:

In introducing the toastmaster, Rabbi Lazaron expressed his regret at having been out of the city during the making of entire arrangements for the dinner, which he credited chiefly to Miss Gilman and Mrs. Spaeth.

THE VILLARD DINNER

The long series of misadventures attending the dinner to Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of the Nation, is really not the fault of anyone. If some group of Mr. Villard's friends had arranged a dinner for him, it would have been presumptuous on his part to have insisted that negroes should be invited. But, as we understand the facts, the dinner was not to have been one simply of Mr. Villard's friends; it was a dinner of subscribers to the Nation. Naturally, in view of Mr. Villard's well-known views on racial discrimination, he could not condone the color line in such a dinner.

Nor can fault be found, we believe, with the committee which undertook to arrange the dinner. It is easy enough to say that, knowing the firmly established convictions and practices of this community with respect to social contacts between the two races, and knowing also Mr. Villard's views, the dinner never should have been undertaken. But the fact probably is that no one, either on the committee or off it, gave an instant's thought to the possibility of the color question being raised until after Mr. Villard had been invited.

It would have been better had not a very small group of negroes elected to force the issue. It placed in an embarrassing position a group of generous men and women, who were compelled to choose between recalling an invitation to a man whom they honored and running counter to the custom of their own community, a custom which, we have no doubt, they individually uphold. Also, it placed in an embarrassing position a very much larger number of respectable and useful negroes, who perfectly understand and do not object to the social distinctions which prevail in Baltimore, but naturally do not enjoy the emphasis placed on these distinctions in the last few days.

Now that the affair is behind us, the sooner it is forgot the better it will be for all. The relations here between the races are excellent. The whites encourage the progress of the negroes in trades, and they treat fairly those who have entered the professions. They respect the negroes' political rights. There is constantly increasing attention to education of the negroes, as there is to social and physical welfare. In nothing has Baltimore been more spontaneously open handed in many months than the joint effort of the whites and negroes to provide funds for the Provident Hospital—to be conducted for negroes.

The line is drawn sharply only against social contacts, and that line is as satisfactory to the great majority of negroes as it is inflexible for the overwhelming majority of whites.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1181) authorizing an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," as amended, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. PURNELL, and Mr. ASWELL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

GOV. ALFRED E. SMITH

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, for those of us who know Governor Smith, of New York, it was very difficult the other day to keep from uttering bitter words in response to the insinuation by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. For myself, I am glad we did not indulge in such words, because the governor himself has shown how idle and unfounded was the charge.

In this matter, as in all other matters of criticism which have been leveled against him, Governor Smith has shown conclusively how false and unworthy are all such charges. He is an upright, untarnished, dependable statesman, a public official who can be trusted in all things at all times.

I ask that the clerk may read from the desk an Associated Press dispatch from Albany, of March 20, as printed in this morning's Washington Post.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post, March 21, 1928]

AL SMITH CALLS SINCLAIR CHARGE DEMAGOGIC SLANDER—GOVERNOR, IN SCATHING LETTER TO NYE, DECLARES THAT HE RECEIVED NO FUNDS FROM OIL MAN—SCORES "INSINUATIONS" AS "INFAMOUS"

ALBANY, N. Y., March 20.—Governor Smith to-night characterized as "demagogic slander" statements made by Senator ROBINSON (Republican), Indiana, on the floor of the Senate yesterday that Harry F. Sinclair, a prominent figure in the oil scandal, had been a heavy contributor to the New York State Democratic gubernatorial campaign of 1920.

In a letter to Chairman GERALD P. NYE, of the Teapot Dome committee, Governor Smith declared that "a careful search of the official records made at my request to-day confirmed my recollection that Mr. Sinclair never contributed to my campaign fund either in 1920 or at any other time that I ever ran for office; in fact, I failed of election as governor in 1920, and Mr. Sinclair had been appointed to the racing commission months prior to that election, some four years before there was any thought of the oil scandal."

"I do not propose that either you or Senator ROBINSON of Indiana," the governor continued, "shall escape public humiliation for the infamous insinuations that you have made by your pretense of disclaiming desire to cast reflection on me or stating that your committee has no concern with the matter."

After the governor had written the letter, word was brought to him that Mr. Sinclair had contributed on one occasion to a Democratic campaign fund in New York State. The contribution, made in 1918 to the New York County Democratic committee, amounted to $1,000, records in the secretary of state's office disclosed.

The same records disclosed, however, that in 1922—the year that Nathan L. Miller opposed and was defeated by Governor Smith—Mr. Sinclair contributed $5,000 to the Republican State committee. The payment was made, the records showed, to Anson C. Goodyear, treasurer of the State committee.

Careful examination by Secretary of State Robert Moses of contributions to the governor's personal campaign funds failed to disclose any mention of Mr. Sinclair's name. The examination covered every available bit of data filed in the department of state and other State offices.

The statements made before the Senate, the governor asserted, were in the nature of "a Republican counsel of desperation to escape in some measure the penalty for the disgraceful record of the Republican Party in connection with these scandals. No such red herring can be dragged across the trail."

The text of the governor's letter follows:

"You are quoted in the daily papers this morning as having said yesterday on the floor of the Senate, 'I do understand that in the campaign at which Governor Smith was elected Mr. Sinclair was a very liberal contributor to his cause, and that following his election he was made a member of the racing commission of the State.' Senator ROBINSON of Indiana made a similar statement. Your information, wherever you got it, is in every respect false, and these statements were recklessly made.

"A careful search of the official records, made at my request to-day, confirmed my recollection that Mr. Sinclair never contributed to my campaign fund either in 1920 or at any other time that I ever ran for office; in fact, I failed of election as governor in 1920, and Mr. Sinclair had been appointed to the racing commission months prior to that election, some four years before there was any thought of the oil scandals. A few months before the end of his term, early in 1925, I accepted his resignation.

"I do not propose that either you or Senator ROBINSON of Indiana shall escape public humiliation for the infamous insinuations you have made by your pretense of disclaiming desire to cast reflection on me or stating that your committee has no concern with the matter. Without the slightest warrant in fact, and with no basis whatever, you have both made false public statements from which you evidently calculated that people would be misled into believing that I was in some way a beneficiary of the oil scandals. This, no doubt, is a Republican counsel of desperation to escape in some measure the penalty for the disgraceful record of the Republican Party in connection with these scandals. No such red herrings can be dragged across the trail. The complete baselessness of your demagogic slander has aroused the indignation with which I make this protest against your outrageous conduct."

Sinclair, in his resignation on February 5, 1925, told the governor that "it would not be 'convenient' for him to continue in the office of racing commissioner, and gave no other reason, the governor disclosed to-day after a search through the files had brought his letter to light.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not know how the Governor of New York feels about this matter except from what I have read in the newspapers. He seems to be very much exercised. He is not so calm and careful in the choice of his language as it seems to me a great statesman ought to be. I understand he is a candidate for President, and I am just wondering if one of his temperament were in the White House, charged with the enormous responsibilities of that office and given the tremendous authority of that office, what kind of language he then would use in dealing with the people of this country and with the foreign nations of the world. It looks as though there might be warfare on all hands and trouble from the beginning.

I have no occasion to attack the Governor of New York. I never supposed he would get so much excited about this matter. I have been given to understand from those who espouse his candidacy for the Presidency that he was calm and deliberate, a great student, and a great man; so I am amazed at this outburst in the newspapers this morning from this presidential candidate.

What started it all? Mr. President, I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Monday. I asked this question, which I quote, of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]:

Mr. President, I would like to ask one other question, either of the Senator from Montana or the Senator from North Dakota. I have been given to understand—I do not know whether it is true or not, but I think it is—that Mr. Harry Sinclair, during 1922, 1923, 1924, and possibly 1925, was a member of the State administration of New York, Governor Smith's administration, as a member of the racing commission there by appointment of Governor Smith. Is that true or not?

Mr. President, that is a harmless question. I was simply trying to develop the fact that Mr. Sinclair was a member of Governor Smith's administration, and since Governor Smith is so proud of his administration and those who espouse his candidacy are so proud of that administration, I supposed he would gladly take Harry Sinclair to his bosom and say, "Yes; he is a part of that administration, and I am glad he is." But, no, Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. WHEELER. I was just going to observe——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Just a moment; I do not wish to yield until I finish this phase of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I quote further from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Monday last:

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am unable to advise the Senator with respect to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there any evidence on that question?

Mr. President, this had to do with whether he was a member of Governor Smith's administration.

Mr. NYE. There is no evidence that has come to my attention that Mr. Sinclair was a member of Mr. Smith's administration after 1920. That, however, is a matter with which our committee has had no relationship at all. I do understand that in the campaign of 1920, at which Governor Smith was elected, Mr. Sinclair was a very liberal contributor to his cause; and that following the election he was made a member of the Racing Commission of the State of New York.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the committee, whether he is speaking from information before the committee?

Mr. NYE. I have just made that very clear, and I hope the Senator will get it, that I was not speaking for the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator speak from information——

Mr. NYE. He does.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the committee?

Mr. NYE. Not before the committee.

Mr. President, is there anything there for this statesman to become so exercised about?

I now yield to the Senator from Montana if he still desires me to yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I merely wanted to observe that probably Governor Smith did not want to take Sinclair to his bosom and take him away from the Republicans.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Well, Mr. President, I do not understand that Sinclair has ever been a member of any Republican administration; I am not certain on that score, but from all the information at my hands he has never been a member of any Republican administration, and he was a member of a Democratic administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator say Mr. Sinclair has not dealt with a Republican administration?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, Mr. President, Sinclair dealt with everybody; he dealt with Republicans and Democrats. I say that the Republican rank and file of America is composed of honest, patriotic, God-fearing American citizens. I want to be fair with the Senator from Kentucky and I want to be fair with the Democratic Party, and I am willing to agree that the rank and file of the Democratic Party is composed of good citizens all over the country.

This is not a question of politics. In that connection, Mr. President, when I have a little more time, I am going into the Teapot Dome matter somewhat at length; and then I think I shall be able to develop the fact definitely that in both parties men prominently placed have betrayed the trust imposed in them by the rank and file, and that men like Sinclair do not confine their efforts or their activities to either party. They have no party especially; but the Governor of New York did appoint Sinclair as a member of his administration, and he remained there throughout several years. I want to go into that for just a second.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator that the rank and file of the Republican Party are honest; but does not the Senator think by reason of that fact that they ought to repudiate both the last administration and the present administration because of the things that have been carried on and because of the donations that Sinclair and Doheny and their crowd have made?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not sure about that; that will come up later; but I might observe, since the Senator has brought it up, that three Democratic members left the Cabinet of the last Democratic administration to take employment under Doheny, and Doheny and Sinclair rest in the same bed, and they have got a lot of Democrats in it with them, too. So I do not see, Mr. President, that there is any point in the question that has just been suggested, for the reason that the Senator from Montana who has just asked the question might suggest further that the whole Democratic administration which has just passed into history be repudiated also.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator suggested that Sinclair and Doheny were in the same bed, and that they had a lot of Democrats in there with them. I do not agree to that; but if the Senator can designate them, if the Senator can point out a single Democrat who has been corrupt, I for one Senator will denounce him on this floor and repudiate him?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What does the Senator say about Mr. Doheny?

Mr. HEFLIN. I repudiated him three years ago, and he quit the Democratic Party.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Doheny was a candidate for Vice President on the Democratic ticket back in 1920, and was voted on as a candidate. Does the Senator now undertake to read out of the party one who has been so high in the councils of the party that his own party voted on him for Vice President of the United States?

Mr. HEFLIN. He was not in congenial company with the Democratic Party, and he went over to the Republican Party.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. He was in the company of the distinguished Senator from Montana, who was guided by his advice on this floor in some of the observations he made when this leasing question was before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, to whom——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. He was in the company of Mr. McAdoo, whom he afterwards employed at an estimated salary of $100,000 a year. He was in the company of the late Franklin K. Lane, whom he employed for $50,000 a year. Are not they good Democrats?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Did the Senator from Indiana, in the remarks just made, refer to the senior Senator from Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I referred to the Senator who is now speaking.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator give the Senate a reference to any comment made by me on the floor in defense of Mr. Doheny?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes, Mr. President; I will read the Senator's own language, I think day after to-morrow, in a speech on this subject that I am trying to prepare, to be delivered in the Senate on that day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It will be enlightening.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. At that time I shall give the Senate the references, and also the Senator's language.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a suggestion?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If it is not too long. I want to get through with Mr. Smith.

Mr. BLAINE. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Democratic National Convention at San Francisco in 1920 kicked out the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and kicked Mr. Doheny, who received votes as a candidate for Vice President, into that convention?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think that is correct. I only have the newspaper reports; but I understood that the distinguished Senator from Missouri, who now is a candidate for President according to the newspaper reports, did knock at the door and was refused admission at the San Francisco convention.

Mr. President, to proceed, I was paying my respects to the distinguished Governor of New York. He states, if I quote him correctly:

> In fact, I failed of election as governor in 1920 and Mr. Sinclair had been appointed to the racing commission months prior to that election.

Mr. President, "months prior to that election"—how many months? The record shows, if I have it correctly, and I think I have, that Gov. Al. Smith appointed Harry F. Sinclair as a member of his administration, as a member of the racing commission, for an unexpired term on the 12th day of January, 1920, when his campaign was looming for the next November. This was for an unexpired term.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Just a second, and I will. I do not want to be interrupted right at this place.

The governor appointed Sinclair on January 12, 1920, for an unexpired term which, I understand, would have expired December 31, 1920; but the Governor of New York was so enamored of Harry F. Sinclair, he thought so much of him and his great constructive ability, he was so anxious to have him in his administration permanently, that on June 3, 1920, the same year, he reappointed Mr. Sinclair for a five-year term, a full term, which would not expire normally until the last of the year 1925.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there before he leaves that part of his argument?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. All right; I will yield right now.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming that Governor Smith did appoint Mr. Sinclair at a time when none of these facts had been developed, and at a time when he had a right to believe that he was a man of some reputation——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And just before election.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mean to contend that Governor Smith was corrupt, or that he shielded a criminal, or that he had in his administration a man that he should not have had by reason of some prior happening?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I want the country to make its own deductions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Answer the question "yes" or "no."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want the country to draw its own conclusions. I am stating some facts here; that is all.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the strangest statement the Senator has made yet.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator another question. I have just read in a morning paper where a man named Faison, down in Virginia, was convicted of murder. The chances are that he is a white man and a Democrat. Does not the Senator think, by the same analogy, that Senators SWANSON and GLASS ought to be unseated because perchance a Democrat committed murder in the State of Virginia?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, that is taking us far afield. I hope the Senator does not mean to connect Governor Smith up with murder. I would not go that far.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another observation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana further yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Not just now; a little later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, Governor Smith says Mr. Sinclair had been appointed to the racing commission "months before," giving to the American people the intimation that it was a long while before. It was just the June before, when he reappointed him to a full term on the commission that would not expire until 1925.

What happened then, Mr. President? My information is that he resigned one month before the full term expired—one month before.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. What other appointments did the governor make at the same time he appointed Mr. Sinclair?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am talking about Harry F. Sinclair and his friend the Governor of New York. I do not care about anybody else. I am not going into that.

Mr. COPELAND. I mean, on that particular racing commission, and at the same time. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the distinguished and incorruptible Gen. James W. Wadsworth, sr., the father of our ex-colleague, was appointed at the same time? Does the Senator make the same reflections upon that distinguished patriot?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Why, of course, not, Mr. President. That was an excellent appointment. I suppose the Governor of New York has made some good appointments. I have no doubt of the fact; but I am speaking of the Sinclair appointment, which stinks to heaven, in my judgment.

Mr. President, just one other thing. As a matter of fact, according to my information, Mr. Sinclair resigned one month before the full term expired, which was late in 1925. I wonder why he was retained during all those years. Mark you, he was appointed twice—first for an unexpired term, then for a full term—and then, through all this discussion of the Sinclair matter and the Doheny troubles, and the Teapot Dome racket, he still continued to be a member of the administration of Governor Smith of New York.

Governor Smith could easily have said to Harry F. Sinclair, "Now, Mr. Sinclair, you are unclean. It has developed that you are unclean. You are not fit for a Democratic administration, because we Democrats here and all of us who believe in Tammany Hall are thoroughly clean, and we do not want you in our administration." But did Mr. Smith do that? No. The Governor of New York never did fire Mr. Sinclair. He finally resigned on his own account. No wonder the Governor of New York this morning feels badly; but he should blame himself and his associations. "Birds of a feather will flock together."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; if the Senator insists on defending Governor Smith, of New York, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not here for the purpose of defending anybody; but I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if, after he finishes with the Governor of New York, he will enlighten us by giving us his opinion of the Governor of Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am not discussing that. The Senator can discuss Indiana as far as he pleases. I will only say in that connection that Indiana needs no defense from me. Indiana stands, and has at many times in the past stood, as the saving force of the American Republic; and Indiana to-day, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, might give the Senator some suggestions on how economically to run a State. Indiana to-day is one of four States in this Union that are completely out of debt. Can the Senator from Kentucky say as much about his State?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said a while ago that he was not here to defend Indiana. Is he here to defend the Governor of Indiana——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am speaking now about the Governor of New York.

Mr. BARKLEY (continuing). Either the present governor or the one who went to the penitentiary, and on his way from it almost met the present governor on his way to it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the Governor of Indiana is not a candidate for President, and I understand the Governor of New York is. Furthermore, Mr. President, Harry F. Sinclair never was a part of any administration in Indiana, either Republican or Democratic, and he was a part of the Democratic administration of New York.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the Governor of Indiana is a part of the Republican administration of the State of Indiana; and the distinguished Senator himself owes his seat in this body to the appointment given him by a Governor of Indiana, whom he says he will not defend.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, does the Senator take exception to that? I hope the Senator does not object to my being here. I was originally appointed by the Governor of Indiana, but subsequently was nominated and elected in my own right.

Mr. DILL. But the Senator drew such terrible conclusions from the fact of the appointment of Sinclair by Governor Smith, and yet he was appointed by a man who was convicted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It may have been the exercise of bad judgment on the part of the Governor of Indiana to appoint me to this body. I am not saying it was not; but while I am a Member of this body I shall certainly speak my mind on subjects that affect the people of my State and the country. Just now I am talking about the Governor of New York. The Senator, in his time, can discuss any subject he desires.

Mr. DILL. But the Senator says that "birds of a feather flock together."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is true. I have no occasion to make any different observation on that subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I still say that the Governor of New York had Mr. Sinclair as a member of his administration.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; I will.

Mr. HARRISON. In connection with "birds of a feather flocking together," is it not true also that the mayor of the city of Indianapolis, of the Senator's own party, as well as the chairman of the Republican national campaign committee of Indiana as well as the chairman of the campaign committee of Marion County, and four councilmen in the city of Indianapolis, all members of the Senator's own party, all "birds of the same feather," are either in the penitentiary or now under indictment in the State of Indiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, of course, all the Senator says I could not follow; he had so many designations there.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator agrees to it, does he not?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not think the statement is true in any sense of the word; but even if it were, none of the parties mentioned is a candidate for President at this time, and the distinguished Governor of New York, I understand, is a candidate for President, and none of them has had any connection with Harry F. Sinclair.

Mr. President, I understand that finally Mr. Sinclair has resigned from the administration of Governor Smith of New York, and therefore I suppose that ends that. But since it all was true, and he was very friendly to the Governor of New York during all these years, I am wondering why the Governor of New York suddenly is so thoroughly outraged when the fact is brought to the attention of the people of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Indiana if he was not the attorney for D. C. Stephenson, who is now in the penitentiary in Indiana also?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, at one time my law firm represented D. C. Stephenson in some civil matters. That is a matter of record which the Senator could easily get without asking me the question.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought I could get it quicker that way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope the Senator does not take any exception to that employment.

Mr. HARRISON. Not a bit. I am glad for the confession to come from the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, referring to the statement of the Senator that "birds of a feather flock together," I should like to ask him if he desires to convey the impression that his political associations in Indiana running back over several years are to be judged by the same test?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana is amazed, he says, that Governor Smith shows feeling and indignation over the charges made against him on this floor. The Senator has said that on day after to-morrow he is going to make a speech. I wish at that time he would tell us if it is so common a thing to have approaches made to Republican officeholders that they have lost all sense of reaction against any insinuation such as was made here.

Governor Smith has the temperament, to use the Senator's word, to resent charges of this sort. He has a temperament that would make him resist any attempt to bribe or corrupt him. He has a temperament which would guarantee to this country an undefiled and and undefilable public official. Mr. President, there is no need, as I see it, to multiply words, because the governor himself has spoken for himself, and very conclusively.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course, the letter from Governor Smith refutes conclusively the wild and unwarranted insinuations of the Senator from Indiana. Of course, the Senator is coming up for reelection, and he may have a hard fight. That may explain the Senator's strange and extraordinary course. The former chairman of the Republican National Campaign Committee has been an influential political factor in the State of Indiana, and the Senate as well as the country is familiar with the exposé in regard to the Liberty bonds that were peddled by Chairman Hays.

The Senate is also familiar with the evidence that came forth at Chicago the other day from Mr. Connery that $85,000 that had been spent in some speculation there was paid by the bonds that came from Mr. Sinclair to Mr. Hays. But evidently the Senator believes he must play his small part in bringing to his aid the influence, if not the bonds, of Mr. Hays in Indiana in the coming election.

When the Senator from Indiana was elected, his campaign was directed by the chairman of the Republican State campaign committee at that time, a man by the name of Clyde Walb. Walb was a great friend and henchman of the Senator from Indiana. He is now under indictment by the courts of Indiana for corruption. "Birds of a feather flock together."

The chairman of the Marion County committee of the Republican Party, George Coffin, another political friend and henchman of the Senator, is now under indictment for fraud and corruption in the State of Indiana. "Birds of a feather flock together."

The mayor of the city of Indianapolis, a Republican, possibly elected at the same time the Senator from Indiana was, certainly one of his political friends, if not his henchman, is under indictment in the State of Indiana for fraud and corruption. "Birds of a feather flock together."

Four of the Republican councilmen in the city of Indianapolis, elected, perhaps, at the same time the Senator from Indiana was, if not his henchmen, his political friends, are all indicted for fraud and corruption. "Birds of a feather flock together."

The late Governor of the State of Indiana, George McCray, was indicted for bribery, I believe, or some kind of corruption. He was a Republican, a political friend, and maybe a henchman, of the Senator from Indiana. "Birds of a feather flock together."

When the Senator came here he was appointed by Governor Jackson, one of his strong political friends, and each was a henchman of the other. Governor Jackson, following the appointment of the distinguished Senator from Indiana to the Senate, was indicted for bribery out there and pleaded the statute of limitations, and on that alone he got out. "Birds of a feather flock together."

Of course, the Senator answered the question that D. C. Stephenson was his client. He was not only his client, but was a political friend and henchman. He was sent afterwards to the penitentiary for something. Perhaps it was bribery, or some other kindred crime. "Birds of a feather flock together." What a travesty upon American politics, and what a reflection upon the proud name of Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, just this observation: None of those mentioned by the Senator from Mississippi happens to be a candidate for the Presidency. I am not a candidate for the Presidency. I understand the Governor of New York is a candidate for the Presidency. Furthermore, none of those mentioned by the Senator from Mississippi has had any relations with Harry F. Sinclair, and Governor Smith has, and Sinclair was a member of Governor Smith's administration.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the people are very much interested in candidates for the Presidency and those who are candidates should make known their positions, and their records should be known to the people. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the record of Gov. Alfred E. Smith upon this subject .

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNOR SMITH'S WET RECORD—REMARKS ON ALFRED E. SMITH'S RECORD AS TAMMANY LEADER, LEGISLATOR, AND GOVERNOR

Mr. President, we are being told these days that there is no longer doubt that Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York, will be the next President of the United States. Those of us who are dry, or who nevertheless favor enforcing the laws and upholding the Constitution, and who have not been entirely pleased with Mr. Smith's attitude on these matters, are being reassured that we have nothing to fear. We are told that because of fear of impeachment the dry character of the Congress, and such considerations, no President, however wet, would fail to uphold both the law and the Constitution. Thus, our friends, the wet leaders, say in effect: "Of course, Smith would like to hurt prohibition all he could, but he wouldn't dare do much."

That argument sounds suspicious to me. Here is a man running for President, and one of his chief claims to consideration is that he will get all the wet vote. Why would this be, I would like to know, unless the wet voters expect that he could and would relax the enforcement of prohibition? Is this campaign talk intended to mislead the wet voters—or us who are dry? It is a very novel experience to be asked to support a man whose views on one of the chief issues of the campaign are directly opposed to mine on the ground that what he thinks and desires on this issue is of no importance anyway!

No, Mr. President; our friends the wet leaders have been misleading us on this matter. Al Smith, or any other wet, could do much to injure prohibition. Let me quote from the recent speech of a man who is as familiar with the workings of our Federal Government and with the powers of the President as any man alive, one whose Democracy has never been questioned, and one upon whom the friends of prohibition know they can depend.

The following is taken from the address of William Gibbs McAdoo at Richmond, Va., on February 1, 1928:

"Attempt is being made to convince the country that no matter if a wet is elected President the Constitution and laws will be enforced. This is both unsound and untrue. Neither the Constitution nor the laws of the United States are self-executing. The President is charged by the Constitution with the express duty of protecting and defending the Constitution and executing the laws of the land. In doing this he has, of necessity, wide latitude and discretion. If he is opposed to the laws he is called upon to execute he can neglect them or fail to exert his power and authority in such manner that the despised laws will become impotent without subjecting himself to tangible criticism or possible impeachment.

"To say that a President hostile to the eighteenth amendment and the prohibition laws can not seriously imperil effective enforcement throughout the United States is upon its face an absurdity. The President has the power to appoint the judges of the Supreme Court, the judges of all the circuit and district courts throughout the United States, the prosecuting attorneys, the United States marshals, the Secretary of the Treasury and his assistants—those officials being directly charged with enforcement of the prohibition laws. If he should appoint to these responsible positions men who are hostile to the laws the effect upon their successful enforcement would be profound.

"Moreover, the President is primarily responsible for the Budget through which the Congress makes appropriations for prohibition enforcement. He can largely influence the size of the appropriations, which if inadequate, seriously impair the ability to enforce the law. He has the power to veto appropriation and other bills enacted by Congress, and through such power to reduce the appropriations to such a small amount as to paralyze prohibition enforcement.

"He has a tremendous influence upon public opinion, and through his speeches and messages to Congress and the use of general patronage, which is a powerful weapon in his hands, he could, if he were opposed to the eighteenth amendment and the prohibition laws, lead a formidable movement for their repeal. The White House in the hands of the liquor interests would be a veritable Gibraltar of offensive operations, and the doom of the eighteenth amendment would be written boldly on the face of the Constitution."

Mr. President, there can be no question that every word of this is true; it is good law and good sense. We can depend upon no assurance that Mr. Smith, as President, would not follow the course here so clearly indicated. We can judge what he would do only by what he has done; we can predict his future only from his past. We must look backward to learn whether, if Smith were President next year, it would not be true that the White House would be made a veritable Gibraltar in the hands of the liquor interests.

Here, then, is Al Smith's record as a Tammany leader, legislator, and governor, so far as it affects prohibition. It is given as he made it; there is no need of argument or comment from myself. It is not what he now wishes it were, but it is history, and unchangeable. It is not a collection of quotations about what he says he thinks; it is a record of conduct. No item in it can be truthfully denied. I would like merely, without comment, to point out one curious coincidence, shown by the record, which might pass unnoticed unless emphasized. It was in 1919 that it became possible that popular action, in some sections, might be advantageous to the liquor interests instead of hostile to them. It was in that same year that Mr. Smith, also for the first time, developed that steadfast and unyielding, that sincere and unselfish conviction that the people themselves should rule, which has been so charming and appealing a part of his personality ever since. But his record began long before then.

1. RECORD ON ALLOWING PEOPLE TO CHECK SALOONS

1907. April 3: As legislator, voted to uphold excise committee and strangle local option bill in committee.

1910. April 26: Voted against amending Raines law so as to allow local option in cities.

1911. May 24: Voted against local option for cities. July 19: Voted against Gray local option bill.

1912. Voted against Lincoln bill to allow local option to third-class cities.

1913. As speaker of the assembly, appointed 8 Tammany men out of 13 members of excise committee, and smothered all temperance legislation.

1914. March 19: Voted against Gillet bills to grant local option to cities, city subsidiaries, and counties.

1915. March 31: Voted against Fish bill for referendum on State prohibition. April 7: Voted against Preswick bill to grant local option to university city of Ithaca. April 29: Voted against Howard bill granting same rights as Fish bill.

2. RECORD ON REGULATION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND ITS SEPARATION FROM VICE

1904. March 18: Unrecorded on bill putting additional restrictions in the Raines law.

1905. Voted against the Prentice bill to kill assignation houses and houses of ill fame run as "Raines law" hotels, thereby voting to continue infamous "Raines law hotel" abuses. Passed over 2 to 1 against his opposition.

1908. Voted against bill stiffening up regulatory and enforcement features of the liquor tax law.

1913. As speaker, engineered the defeat of the Knight bill against knowingly delivering liquor in dry territory except to bona fide consignee.

3. RECORD IN FAVOR OF BREAKING DOWN FORMER SAFEGUARDS AGAINST LIQUOR TRAFFIC

1904. April 14: Voted to force hotel bars into over 300 dry towns and make hotels independent of town local-option elections, and thus by robbing the popular vote of part of its effect to nullify the town-option feature of the liquor tax law.

1912. Voted for Hacket bill to make it harder to convict New York City liquor dealers for violating the law.

1913. February 26: Engineered passage of McCue bill emasculating a saloon ratio section of liquor tax law.

March 26: As speaker, engineered the passage of the McCue bill to save convicted liquor-law violators from revocation of their licenses.

4. RECORD IN FAVOR OF LIQUOR SELLING ON SUNDAY AND FOR LIMITATION OF PROHIBITED AREAS

1907. March 26 and April 23: Voted for opening up prohibited areas to sale of liquors.

1911. May 24: Voted for Walker bill increasing hours for sale of liquors.

1913. As speaker, helped desperate effort all through session to pass bill legalizing the opening of saloon on Sunday in New York City. Engineered passage of Walker bill increasing hours of sale of liquors.

5. RECORD IN FAVOR OF PERMITTING SALOONS WITHIN 200 FEET OF SCHOOLS AND ABOLISHING THE PROHIBITED AREAS ABOUT CHURCHES

Governor Smith has said that the saloon "is and ought to be a defunct institution in this country." Here is his record:

1908. Voted for bill to remove all zone provisions protecting churches and schools from saloons.

1909. Introduced and pushed bill to permit hotel bars within church and school zones.

1911. Voted for Sullivan bill opening up prohibited zones about churches and schools to hotel bars.

1913. As speaker, engineered passage of bill permitting saloon within 200 feet of private schools.

6. RECORD ON EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT AND VOLSTEAD ACT AS GOVERNOR AND TAMMANY LEADER OF NEW YORK STATE DEMOCRACY

Let me point out that in all these acts Mr. Smith was not dealing with a theory of prohibition, but with the same Constitution and laws which he would have to enforce as President.

1919. As governor, after a campaign in which ratification of the amendment had been a chief issue, demanded that the legislature delay ratification till a referendum could be held. When ratification was made by the legislature in spite of him, he said the legislature had acted "without knowing the will of the people."

1920. As governor, in his message to the legislature declared amendment had not been adopted, though it had been ratified by 45 States, and demanded that previous ratification be rescinded.

Also he openly supported the nullifying beer bill, and when it was passed by the legislature signed it without asking a referendum, saying that "when a substantial majority of both houses makes its declaration upon a matter of this sort it is representative of the majority sentiment of the State."

1920. In campaign for reelection, demanded amendment of Volstead Act, because United States Supreme Court had killed his nullification beer act.

1921. In campaign for reelection began his demand for repeal of Mullan-Gage Act, which gave support of State power to enforcement of prohibition.

During same year was present at the drunken and riotous police lieutenant's dinner, which New York Evening Post declared was "an impudent challenge to law that not even the most determined opponents of the Volstead Act can regard with equanimity."

1923. As governor fought openly for repeal of Mullan-Gage enforcement act, personally coerced the dry Democratic senator who finally cast the single deciding vote for repeal. Smith by this act practically destroyed all authority of the 33,000 members of the law enforcement machinery of the State to take action in prohibition violations, leaving the whole task in the hands of some 500 Federal officers—an impossible task.

1926. As governor he advocated and secured the passage of the act for a referendum on the Volstead Act, so worded as to be most misleading, and afterwards induced the legislature to send as memorial to Congress, as if the whole business were anything but a gesture for the comfort of the wets, or had any legal significance.

Mr. President, this completes the record of Al Smith's deeds in regard to prohibition. During his last two terms there has been nothing further he could do to injure it or to prevent its enforcement. But this record would not be complete without a statement of his own, setting forth his attitude toward the law. Let me quote this striking demand for nullification, and for a referendum on the whole subject, made by the same man who, before 1919 had opposed even local option on the saloon evil. It is taken from an interview in the New York Times of November 7, 1926. He has not amended this position in any way since then, so far as I have been able to learn. He said:

"When a majority of 20,000,000 people in five different States affirms by vote that the prohibition statutes are unwelcome and ineffective, Congress must heed that declaration. Never before has the American people had an opportunity to express their judgment on this issue. If that judgment could be made effective to-morrow by any established means, we should see the end of prohibition.

"Everybody knows that the eighteenth amendment was the work of legislatures and not the will of the people. Under constitutional provisions there was no method by which the people could register their opposition or approval. They had to take what the legislatures gave them, and the eighteenth amendment was the present. But we have just seen the popular will expressed in impressive measures via the ballot.

"If popular government means anything to us, State referendums can not fail to influence Congress. Now is the time to submit legislation permitting the States to define the alcoholic content of beverages sold within their borders. The amendment prohibits intoxicants only, but it is ridiculous to specify one-half of 1 per cent as the maximum for a nonintoxicating drink. Each State should have the authority to determine that matter for its own citizens. * * *

"The time has come to take the first steps in correcting a grave error committed at a moment when public liberty was subordinated to national stress. * * * The amendment * * * has failed entirely to bring about the results promised."

Here we have Mr. Smith's whole position to-day. It requires little comment, but one illogical and astounding statement stands out and is the very keystone of his reasoning. It is that "Each State should have the authority to determine for its own citizens" what constitutes intoxicating liquor. Mr. President, could anything be more absurd? This is a question of fact, not of politics. It can no more be determined by a vote of the people than can the hour of sunrise. Why, Mr. President, if this idea were adopted we should have, as Mr. Smith clearly intends, different standards in different States, and it would be entirely possible for such States as Mr. Smith's to set the percentage of alcoholic content so high that prohibition in that State would become completely abortive. Is not that just what Mr. Smith intends? Does it not prove conclusively his desire to nullify the eighteenth amendment so far as possible?

And can we believe that such a man in the White House could and would do no harm to prohibition?

In the addition to the foregoing record, Governor Smith's philosophy on prohibition is well summed up in the following unguarded statement which appeared in the New York Times on March 9, 1923. The Times quoted Governor Smith, who had been talking to a reporter about a beer bill introduced in Congress by a New Jersey Senator, as saying: "I would be glad to go down and help him put over his bill if that will get us somewhere where we can put a foot on the rail again and blow off the froth."

If "putting a foot on the rail and blowing off the froth" does not mean the saloon, what does it mean? If Smith is not only against prohibition but in favor of the saloon, how else can this statement be interpreted?

The beer saloon and the wine saloon under a modified Volstead law means greater laxity in the enforcement of such a modified prohibition law, all of which would result in heavier beers, heavier wines, and greater quantities of poison liquor. "Blowing off the froth" will then mean the return of "blowing in the family earnings" at the corner saloon.

We have placed the prohibition principle in the Constitution of the United States, and since this is so it is the duty of every law-abiding citizen to vote to elect a prohibition administration—the only administration that will enforce the law.

SHAMEFUL PROHIBITION RECORD

Governor Smith made this record and he and his friends must face it. This bitter conflict between the rebellious liquor traffic, which is defying our Constitution, suppressing our laws, trampling and besmirching our flag, will go on until the whole people are aroused to the sinister designs upon our constitutional Government and the right-minded, law-abiding citizens have reestablished respect for and observance of our Constitution. Then, and not until then, can there be a full realization of the great value and beneficence of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act; then, and not until then, can the happiness and welfare of the people and the advancement of civilization be assured.

Dr. R. P. Hutton, superintendent of Rhode Island Anti-Saloon League, formerly associate State superintendent of West Virginia with Dr. T. M. Hare, in a recent Sunday address at Martinsburg emphasized the need for every patriot to become aroused to the dangerous conditions confronting the country. In part he said:

"We are in a presidential campaign which is hotter now, six months before the nominations, than it usually is six weeks before the election, because, so far as the wets are concerned, this campaign started six years before the election. With them the Madison Square convention was simply a dress rehearsal or a practice game. Nineteen hundred and twenty-eight is and always has been their objective."

Those who would modify the Volstead Act or repeal the constitutional amendment never tire in finding fault with the present conditions. They glibly point to the bootleg infractions of the law, forgetting that under the old licensed-saloon systems and local-option plan the courts were deluged with cases of all kinds and characters due to the results of the sale of intoxicants or to the violations of the then existing regulatory laws of the town, city, State, and Nation. These defenders of the so-called "personal liberty," these nullifiers of the Constitution, never point to the increased deposits in savings banks, increased comforts for the average families, nor to the largely increased number of happy mothers and children, since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment.

THE FATHER AND THE BOY

Among the private papers of the late Frank L. Mays, editor of the Pensacola Journal, was the following, in which he tells of a father's hopes for his baby boy:

"At home in his mother's arms to-night I have a baby boy; a little, laughing, rosy fellow. The bloom of youth is on his cheeks, the laughter of childhood on his lips, the light of love and trust in his eyes. The patter of his little feet and the prattle of his baby tongue are music sweeter to me than all the symphonies of the spheres.

"He is a baby now. He knows nothing of the great world's trouble and turmoil, the temptations, the pitfalls, the dangerous and devious ways of life. Supreme in the domain of a mother's love and a father's care, he is not concerned with the problem of to-day or the possibilities of to-morrow. He only knows that he is happy, and the dreams of his little life are all realized in the joys which babyhood brings and leaves.

"But the little fellow will be a man some day. He will awake some morning to find that somewhere, somehow, in the slumber zone which none of us can comprehend, he has passed from boyhood to manhood, and he will leave his father's roof to face and fight the battles of life. When he does so he will meet foes and find conditions that he never knew existed. He will see inequality and injustice and human suffering wrought of avarice and vice. He will find mantraps and gilded vestibules of crime existing under the cloak of respectability and the protection of the law. He will see the strong oppressing the weak, and he will hear the cry of the defenseless before the grinding wheels of privilege and power. He will face conditions which breed poverty and want and awful misery on the one hand, and out of which grow opulence and luxury and unearned ease upon the other.

"And when he finds these things—as he will find them, because there will be evils to combat as well as now—I want him to know two things. I want him to know, first, that his father was not responsible for those conditions; and I want him to know, second, that his father did what he could to prevent them."

Mothers and fathers, stop, look, and listen! There must be no nullification of the Volstead Act or the eighteenth amendment. "It is to-day, as it ever has been and ever will be, a moral issue, an issue of governmental respect, without which civilization and sound governments can not be builded and maintained. The enemy of prohibition is entrenched in every neighborhood and every community and is using an unlimited amount of money to buy back into power, to the degradation of mankind, the liquor traffic." What are you doing to prevent it? Your one great weapon of defense is to vote to prevent the selection of their candidate to the high office of President of the United States.

To permit the return of the barroom with all its attendant evils would be a crime against the American home, a crime against the moral, uplifting forces of the Nation, and a crime against the highest and best interests of all American citizens.

Mr. HEFLIN. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a review of Governor Smith's election in New York State in 1924, by Hon. W. D. Jamison, a former Member of Congress from the State of Iowa. This article appears in the Window Seat. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POLITICAL MYTH OF ALFRED E. SMITH

Democrats, let's do the unusual thing! Let's look the situation square in the face, and surprise everybody by using some common horse sense once, just for a change.

The principal foundation of the Smith strength and urge is built on the assumption that he could carry New York this fall if he were nominated. His partisan supporters shout it from the housetops. If he could not do that, then there would be nothing to his candidacy. The fact is:

Smith can not carry New York for President this fall!

Analyze the New York vote in 1924, and this overlooked fact will come clearly into view. There was a well-known "Cal and Al" trade between the Republican machine and Tammany in New York State in 1924. The result was that Cal was given approximately 150,000 Democratic votes for President in exchange for approximately the same number of Republican votes for Al for governor. The result of this corrupt trade was that Cal carried the State by 850,000 and Al carried it by a little over 100,000. Except for this corrupt trade Al would not have won. There can be no such trade if Al is nominated for President. Nothing to trade. You see the Republican machine wants to control nationally, while Tammany is concerned primarily about winning in New York City especially, and in the State incidentally. Tammany would be more apt to trade against Al this fall than for him. This is one reason Al can not win New York for President this fall.

Another reason Al can not possibly carry New York this fall is in the fact that in 1924 the Tammany machine which was back of him got out 95 per cent of the registered vote in New York City, while only 75 per cent of the registered State vote outside New York City went to the polls. In other words, 500,000 up-State voters, largely dry and Republicans, did not vote, because they had no choice on the dry question because both Al and his Republican opponent, Roosevelt, were wet, and these disgusted up-State voters simply stayed at home. You bet they would come out this fall if Al were nominated, because they would then have a chance to express themselves. The Republicans will nominate a dry for President, no doubt about that, and even if Al could carry his Tammany-infested city by as big a majority as he did in 1924 (which is impossible), those up-State Republicans would come down on him like a thousand of bricks. I would expect to see Al lose New York by from 300,000 to 600,000 votes.

Isn't his losing New York State, in consideration of the above facts and circumstances, as plain to you as the nose on your face? Then let's not be foolish.

In the above paragraphs I have touched only the high spots about the situation. Below is a more complete analysis of the figures and of the conditions. I give it out of consideration for those who are interested enough to do a little pondering and a little thinking for themselves. (Most of us prefer to have somebody else do our thinking and make up our minds for us.)

In New York in 1924 Coolidge had 1,820,000 presidential votes; Davis, 950,000; all others, 486,000; total, 3,256,000. Coolidge's plurality over Davis, 870,000; majority over all, 384,000.

For governor, Smith had 1,627,000 votes; Roosevelt, 1,518,000; and Thomas, 100,000; total, 3,245,000.

Eleven thousand presidential votes had therefore no choice for governor. Assuming these were on the Coolidge ballots, there were then 1,809,000 Coolidge ballots which voted for a governor, of which 1,518,000 were for Roosevelt and 291,000 for Smith.

Thomas, the Socialist, got 100,000 of LA FOLLETTE'S Socialist votes, which leaves 386,000 that went to Smith; 950,000 Davis votes went to Smith.

Smith votes on La Follette ballots	386,000
Smith votes on Davis ballots	950,000
Smith votes on Coolidge ballots	291,000
Total	1,627,000

So that both the presidential ballots and the votes for governor clearly prove that there were 291,000 "Cal and Al" votes recorded.

In other words, about 145,000 of Al's Tammany alleged Democrats voted for a stand-pat Republican (Coolidge) against a Democratic presidential candidate (Davis), and about 145,000 stand-pat Coolidge Republicans voted for a Tammany Democrat for governor against a Progressive Republican (Roosevelt).

About 145,000 of Al's Tammany supporters preferred a stand-pat Republican to a Democrat.

About 145,000 of Cal's stand-pat Republicans preferred a Democrat (Al) to a Progressive Republican.

Party principles cut no figure. It was not principle but political pie that controlled.

Except for this corrupt trading of votes, Roosevelt would have had 1,518,000 plus 145,000, or 1,663,000 votes; and Smith would have had 1,627,000 minus 145,000, or 1,483,000. Thus the pretendedly invincible Smith would have been defeated even for the governorship by 181,000 votes. It is on this doubly discreditable foundation that the political myth of Alfred E. Smith being able to carry New York for the Presidency has been built up. Except for this fraud he would have lost even the governorship, and if, like Davis, Smith had been running for the Presidency, he would not only not have gained 145,000 votes but far worse; he would have lost another 145,000 and only had 1,338,000 votes, and been defeated by Coolidge 482,000, even if he had gotten 386,000 LA FOLLETTE votes, or, failing this vote, would have been defeated by 868,000.

Except for this fraud Coolidge would have had 1,820,000, less 145,000, or 1,675,000—only a few more than his Republican colleague, Theodore Roosevelt, jr., as in reason we should expect.

About 145,000 Coolidge Republicans thus bore witness, in voting for Alfred E. Smith, to his unfitness to lead Jeffersonian Democrats, and about 145,000 stand-pat Tammanyites, in voting for Coolidge, bore witness to Tammany's unfitness to lead the national democracy.

The Democratic candidate, Davis, for the Presidency, was thus betrayed by Al's friends in 1924.

In the four counties of New York, Kings, Queens, and the Bronx, the tiger's den, this treachery is most conspicuous (see World Almanac, 1928, pp. 842, 846). For here Smith got 913,000 while his Democratic colleague, Davis, got only 473,000. If Davis had got all the other presidential votes except Coolidge's, he would have gotten 285,340 additional, or a total of 758,020, showing that Smith in the tiger's den got 200,000 over his Democratic colleague, Davis, and Coolidge got over 200,000 over his Republican colleague, Roosevelt. So that in the tiger's own den there was a trade of a 100,000 votes from Al to Cal and from Cal to Al. The governorship was worth the Presidency to Tammany. They knew exactly what they wanted and got it. Therefore, "Cal and Al."

The Coolidge vote in these four counties was 608,103; the Roosevelt vote 404,116.

In 1920 the trading of votes in New York State between the Tammany supporters and the standpat Republican machine was still more monumental. For, in these same four counties Alfred E. Smith got 356,000 more than his Democratic colleague, Cox, and the Republican, Harding, got 389,000 more votes than his Republican colleague, Miller. In New York State, in 1920, Smith got 480,000 over his Democratic colleague, Cox, and Harding got 500,000 more than his Republican colleague, Miller. (Thirty-one thousand presidential voters had no choice for governor.) It is again clear that in 1920, about 240,000 of Smith's supporters voted for the Republican presidential candidate and about 240,000 of the Harding Republicans withdrew their votes from the Republican, Miller, and gave them to the Democrat, Smith. Even under this handicap, of a fraudulent vote of 480,000 to Miller's disadvantage, he defeated Smith.

In 1920 and in 1924, Tammany wanted the governorship of New York and the Republican machine wanted the Presidency of the United States, and got it, as far as the New York electrol vote was concerned, by the simple expedient of trading votes with Al Smith's supporters.

Unfortunately for the political myth of Al Smith, it is entirely clear that this political cooperation and exchange is not reversible.

In 1928 Tammany will need the governorship of New York as urgently as in 1920 and 1924, and will be compelled to pay the price of giving Tammany's votes to the Republican machine, in exchange for Republican machine votes to "Dear old Tammany" for the governorship.

In 1928 the Republicans will urgently need the New York electoral vote and will be willing to sell the governorship to Tammany for it, but it will not sell the Presidency, even if Tammany might desire it. But Tammany must absolutely have the governorship of New York, for its whole commercialized structure of politics depends on the control of New York City and New York State.

With iron logic, it follows, that Al Smith can not overcome the 384,000 over-all majority of Coolidge, in 1924, plus the La Follette presidential vote of 386,000. If Smith could be actually nominated, he would be in the same plight as Davis was in 1924.

In 1924 Tammany got out 95 per cent of the vote in New York City and environs, and had no reserve vote, while the up-State New York registration shows that over 500,000 registered voters did not vote. They were largely drys, who had no choice between Roosevelt and Smith, both of whom were wet. As the Republicans will nominate a dry for President, Smith would have to overcome this additional handicap.

Nothing has occurred to add to Al Smith's strength since 1924. He is no wetter now than he was then. Much has occurred to weaken him through the sweeping reorganization of the old powerful prohibition forces, the churches, and the women, the law enforcement league, etc. They regard Alfred E. Smith as a nullificationist, as well as a wringing wet, because of his approval of the act of 1920, legalizing light wines and beers in New York State, an act which the Supreme Court of the United States declared was unconstitutional; because of his support of the plank of the Democratic State platform, proposing that Congress should violate the Constitution of the United States by modifying the Volstead Act with an amendment, allowing light wines and beer; and because, above all, of his withdrawal of the State of New York from the support of the Volstead Act by his approving the repeal of the Mullan-Gage law. Governor Smith can not carry New York, much less overcome the 7,000,000 national handicap of 1924.

The corrupt history of Tammany, under Tweed, Crocker, and Murphy, and its record of commercialized politics, makes it impossible to conceive that the American people would turn the White House over to Tammany, or deliver the United States Treasury to Tammany's wild Indians.

Be it forever remembered by those Democrats, whose thinkers still think, that never have the Democrats carried a national election except when it defied the vicious commercialized leadership of Tammany, as it did when Tilden ran and was elected; when Grover Cleveland three times denounced Tammany and was three times nominated and twice elected; and when Woodrow Wilson, vigorously opposed by Tammany, was twice nominated and twice elected.

The Democrats can not hope to carry New York or the country until it purges itself of Tammany, with its evil repute, and nominates an untainted Jeffersonian Democrat with no Hamiltonian stripes who will be acceptable to those who favor law enforcement and the national constitutional prohibition policy.

The Democrats tried to compromise in 1920 and 1924 and met two terrible defeats. Naturally, for the conservatives preferred Harding to Cox, and Coolidge to Davis, while the progressives felt no enthusiasm for Cox or for Davis, and the drys were alienated from both these gentlemen (who now appear in the public prints as approving the wringing wet Smith).

Thinking Democrats, whose thinkers still think, should not be misled by the lavishly financed campaign to sell Tammany to the Democracy. This wholesale use of money, with its agents traversing every State in the Union, writing books and magazine articles, filling the public press, using the moving pictures and the radio, and telling the impoverished Democracy that if Smith is nominated they need not worry about financing the campaign, should be a warning of the real powers behind this Tammany movement.

The Democracy must fight these powers or fail in its duty and opportunity.

The cheapest way to insure the election of a Republican in 1928 is to finance and nominate Smith. The Republican politicians know it, and commend Smith with more cordiality than sincerity, because they know that if the Democrats can be split on the wet issue, on the Tammany issue, on the nullification issue, on immigration, or on a religious issue, Democratic defeat is a certainty.

Governor Smith can not carry New York in 1928.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I notice in an address by the distinguished Senator from Ohio to the G. O. P. women open school, in training Republican speakers——

Mr. CARAWAY. Which Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. FESS, not the Senator from that State who is a candidate for the Presidency; at least, he has not come out yet as a candidate. I notice that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] wanted to get away from the new-found issues, so he said to tell the country that the Republican Party abolished slavery and preserved the Union.

I received that in a letter this morning, and I would like to have the inclosed letter read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The inclosed clipping is from yesterday afternoon's Washington Times. Do you not think it would be a most appropriate thing for the Republican men to follow up the women's "School of politics" with a postgraduate course in the finer points of the game?

For example, a program something like the following would doubtless prove helpful to the unsophisticated voters this fall:

"The oily bird snatches the term," by Harry F. Sinclair.

"Oil's well that spends well," by Will Hays.

"Proper lubrication for run-down party machinery," by the official spokesman for the Grand "Oil" Party.

"How to keep party secrets," by Andrew Mellon, in collaboration with William M. Butler.

"Bonds of political friendship," by Albert B. Fall.

"The relationship between leases and greases as applied to party deficits," by Harry F. Sinclair.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, some time ago I was asked to appear before what is called a school of women and talk on the history of the Republican Party. I had no embarrassment whatever in accepting an invitation to talk on that subject. Of course, it goes without saying that no man or woman would be brave enough to talk on the history of the Democratic Party, and that is the basis of their criticism.

Mr. FLETCHER. In connection with some remarks made this morning, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of March 19, 1928.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record, March 19, 1928]

NO ADEQUATE ATONEMENT FOR CORRUPT DEEDS

It is not surprising that Senator BORAH'S great scheme for repudiating past iniquities connected with the oil scandal by presenting that poor millionaire, Harry F. Sinclair, with a check for $160,000 seems to be making poor headway. Most people, indeed, are clearheaded enough to see that this is not an adequate form of repentance for sins of commission. The evil has been done, and the return to Sinclair of some of the money he put up for the Republican National Committee will have no ethical significance. Probably he will be glad enough to receive the contribution with a chuckle, but that will not absolve ex-Chairman Will H. Hays and others connected with the committee, and back of them the leaders of the party, from all blame for this disgusting moral turpitude.

If the G. O. P. as a whole has any compunction over past misdeeds, including the bribery of a Cabinet officer and the betrayal of the Government's first line of defense, the way to show it is to disown everybody connected with this most discreditable affair and to refuse to support an organization that is largely under the same influences as in 1921. There must be an end to this wholesale buying and a return to common honesty. An independent expression of opinion on this subject appears in the New York Times, which, under the heading "They must turn a new leaf," says in part:

"Now the country is seeing to what dishonest equivocations and shifts—some frankly dishonorable and some inconsistent with any delicate sense of honor—the party management, with the knowledge of eminent Republicans of unblemished name, has resorted. The size of Republican campaign funds, their methods of collection and use have long bred suspicion and often scandal. In the last two campaigns no money was really needed. Yet the Republican fat friers spent millions for nothing; got into a hole, 'touched' pitch, and for years succeeded in covering up their tracks.

"We take it that wealthy Republicans are now pretty well scared and that many of them will be mighty chary with their checks to the collectors of 'soap.' We take it, too, that there is common sense enough among influential Republicans not to fall again into that violent and repeated bleeding of purses which has brought the party into such doubt and fear and disgusted such a multitude of Republicans. Reform may come too late; but it must come. The thinner the campaign chest is the better. The collection and the accounting must be straightforward and aboveboard. Even then there will be much incredulity.

"The talk of restitution is nonsense. There must be reform, repentance, and works meet for repentance. The time is short. The score of excess, the ancient blackmail, suspicion, and evidence of crookedness are intolerably long. Students of the punishment of the wicked will notice cynically that transactions which in 'the best days of the party' would have been considered rather a good joke, perhaps to be boasted of at a dinner, now sicken the public conscience and give gooseflesh even to politicians of known easiness of moral digestion. The oil flowed along. People seemed to get used to it, and nobody but the Democrats to mind it. Is the oil getting afire? That is the thought that wrinkles august brows."

The sins of the Republican bosses can not be wiped out by sending checks for $1 and $2 to Senator BORAH.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I send to the desk a clipping from an Ohio paper which came to me this morning, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Akron Beacon-Journal, March 19, 1928]

"FENCES"

It must have been an embarrassing moment for Mr. Will Hays, good Presbyterian and apostle of the idea of unselfish service, when he heard himself likened in the United States Senate to a "fence," the outlaw class that makes a business of aiding thieves in the profitable distribution of stolen goods.

But political honors are easy in the "fence" business. Senator WALSH'S probe committee has discovered Wilbur C. Marsh, former treasurer of the National Democratic Committee, of having accepted his own large share of Sinclair and Doheny contributions and making a sinister bargain with Mr. Hays, his brother fence on the other side, to keep the fact of the giving to either party forever a secret from the country. This thing was done upon the heels of a Democratic National Convention of which the sacramental Mr. Doheny was a chairman and the maker of a keynote speech. It was happening, too, in the campaign in which the Hon. James M. Cox, the nominee, was berating the big interests for "trying to buy an underhold on American government."

Let us hope that now that the smeary trail of oil leads into Democratic headquarters, that Senator WALSH will lose no zest for investigation. Hitherto it has proceeded at its best clip when the fair names of Republican angels of the Hays type were attainted with scandalous association with campaign graft.

If WALSH will follow the trail wherever it may lead, the country will engage to deal with the political "fences." By contrast with Fagin the latter loses something of popular contempt. Fagin made no pretense of uplift and high-mindedness. He did not rhapsodize over patriotism and service.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it seems remarkable that so many misstatements of fact concerning proceedings before the committee now investigating the Continental bonds could possibly creep into so short a statement in any newspaper. It says:

Senator WALSH'S probe committee has discovered Wilbur C. Marsh, former treasurer of the National Democratic Committee, of having accepted his own large share of Sinclair and Doheny contributions, and making a sinister bargain with Mr. Hays, his brother fence on the other side, to keep the fact of the giving to either party forever a secret from the country.

Mr. President, I desire to say that the so-called Walsh probe committee has discovered nothing of the kind. In the first place the committee has not discovered that either Mr. Doheny or Mr. Sinclair made any contributions to the Democratic committee; that is to say, the investigation now in progress has not discovered anything of the kind. The investigation which was conducted four years ago disclosed that Mr. Sinclair testified that he made a contribution to the Democratic committee, but the responsible officers of the Democratic committee came before the investigating committee and denied that Mr. Sinclair had ever made a contribution to the Democratic National Committee, and it was afterwards explained that perhaps it was a contribution to some State committee.

As to Mr. Doheny, he testified that he made a contribution of $75,000 to the Democratic campaign committee and $25,000 to the Republican campaign committee. But the chairman of the Democratic committee came before the investigating committee and testified that Mr. Doheny's total contributions to the Democratic campaign committee were $34,000.

Mr. PITTMAN. What year was that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was in 1920. His contribution of $25,000, the last contribution being made in April, 1921, was a contribution to help make up the deficit.

Now, as to the information secured by the investigating committee that former Treasurer Marsh had entered into a sinister bargain to keep these contributions secret, the fact about the matter is that whatever was said with respect to that matter was concerning an agreement made by Mr. Marsh in the year 1923. Mr. Doheny's contributions had all been made in 1920 and 1921. The evidence before the committee leads them to believe that Mr. Sinclair never made any contribution. Whatever agreement was made by Mr. Marsh, if any agreement at all was made, had no relation whatever to either the Doheny or the Sinclair contribution.

But, Mr. President, what are the facts concerning this remarkable discovery by the committee? The committee examined two clerks in the office of Mr. Upham, the treasurer of the Republican National Committee, and interrogated them concerning every transaction of which they had any knowledge whatever, and generally they told us they had no knowledge whatever about any of the transactions. But when the committee got to Chicago these two gentlemen remembered something about this alleged agreement, and what was it? They testified that they were told by Mr. Upham, who is now dead, that he had an agreement of that kind with Mr. Marsh. Mr. Marsh was on the stand this morning before the investigating committee. He testified that after getting through with the campaign in 1920 he was taken from New York to his home in the State of Iowa on a stretcher, suffering from an illness which forbade him ever after to have anything at all to do with the duties of his office, and he had nothing at all to do with the duties of his office; that they passed into other hands after that time; that he had a pleasant acquaintance with Mr. Upham, met him casually on the street or somewhere else, but never had any appointment with him, never any engagement with him, never made any such agreement with Mr.

Upham, and that there was no occasion for his making any such agreement because he had, of course, in the state of his health, determined that he would not again be treasurer of the Democratic National Committee; and having made his report in 1922, no report was due from anybody until October, 1924, under the law. So that there was no occasion for his entering into any such agreement with Mr. Upham.

Mr. GLASS. Then the Senator may well state further that there was no occasion for him to enter into any such agreement, because there was no contribution to the campaign fund of the Democratic committee that was big enough to conceal. In fact, there was not one big enough to discover.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The article continues:

This thing was done—

That is, the agreement between Upham and Marsh—

This thing was done upon the heels of a Democratic national convention of which the sacramental Mr. Doheny was a chairman and the maker of a keynote speech.

Mr. Doheny was indeed a delegate from the State of California to the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco in 1920. He was not chairman of anything so far as my recollection goes. He certainly was not chairman of the convention, either temporary or permanent, and he made no keynote speech.

The article then continues:

Let us hope that now that the smeary trail of oil leads into Democratic headquarters that Senator WALSH will lose no zest for investigation.

I think that every member of the committee, every Senator who has ever been a member of the committee, will attest to the statement that Senator WALSH has never indicated any hesitancy to follow the inquiry into any channels into which it might legitimately lead, whoever might be affected by the revelations, or whatever might be the politics of any man whose connection with the transaction might have been disclosed. Senator WALSH has repeatedly refused to go into wholly extraneous matters foreign from the fields into which the committee was directed to go by order of the Senate, but the imputation that I have at any time halted lest Democratic officials should in any wise be involved is a slander.

I send to the desk an editorial from the St. Louis Times-Star on another but not unrelated subject and ask that it be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the St. Louis Star, Monday, March 19, 1928]

A MILLION FOR PROPAGANDA

It is possible that defeat of the original Walsh resolution for a Senate investigation of the public-utility combines got these combines into a worse mess with the Federal Trade Commission, which is conducting the investigation. The commission's first report discloses, among other things, that the National Electric Light Association, supported by the various utility units, collects more than a million dollars a year from that source for lobbying, propaganda, and other activities. Evidently it is money well spent—from the utility companies' standpoint. Was the Senate influenced by this propaganda in acting on the Walsh proposal? At least a quarter of the annual contribution was spent to "educate" public opinion against public operation of utilities the report shows.

The million-a-year fund, of course, came ultimately from the utility companies' customers. It was collected in the form of rates. Those rates are sanctioned in most States by a public-utility commission. Before the utilities are permitted to charge the rates they are required to make some showing of expenses. How were the contributions of individual companies to this vast national fund accounted for? How much of this money was contributed by utility concerns in Missouri, if any? What excuse, if any, was made for this expense? Did the commission check these accounts at all?

A million dollars a year for propaganda on any one subject is a vast amount. If used in a bad cause it might create a deluded public sentiment in favor of that cause. The Trade Commission report shows that in 1923, $90,000 was given for a research staff at Harvard University on public-utility management, and that at the University of Colorado 17 lecturers in a public-utility course were officials of public-utility companies. They at least had no prejudice in favor of municipal ownership.

Something needs revising when public utilities can raise a fund of that size for such purposes while operating under State regulation. Evidently expense statements are not being closely scrutinized or sufficiently blue-penciled by public officials whose duty is, or ought to be, to see where the utility companies' money goes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I wish to read and have made, therefore, a part of the RECORD something in the same line that has been suggested by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] in one of the communications which he has presented to the Senate. It might be well, in the investigation that is now being undertaken by the Federal Trade Commission, that they include these communications in their investigation and ascertain the amount of money that has been derived from the sources indicated thereby.

I read first, sir, a letter from Milton W. Harrison, president of the National Association of Owners of Railroad and Public Utility Securities, and I call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the other Members of this body to the peculiar purposes to which a very large fund is sought to be devoted, a fund which, if collected as desired by those responsible for these communications, will rival any fund for propaganda that has ever been collected in the United States.

11 EAST THIRTY-SIXTH STREET,
New York, N. Y., February 10, 1928.

DEAR SIR:—

I am reading from a photostatic copy of the letter which has been circulated in the State of California, sent to every investor and stockholder there, as I understand it. The photostatic copies have been sent me by the Fresno Bee, a newspaper of standing, character, importance, and wide influence. The letter proceeds:

It is highly important that investors in electric power and light, gas, and street railway companies should cooperate to safeguard their interests against unsound public discussion and unwise legislation.

Mark these words, "unsound public discussion" and "unwise legislation"!

That is, sir, as I interpret the language, that it is most important to these investors to protect themselves against free speech regarding public utilities; against any criticism; against forsooth, "unsound public discussion." The letter proceeds:

To effect such cooperation, the National Association of Owners of Railroad and Public Utility Securities has enlarged its scope and is soliciting your membership.

Investors in railroad securities have been united for years through the association, and have effectually sustained their interests as security owners before legislators and administrative officials. With other public utilities now under sharp discussion, with a senatorial investigation in prospect, and with considerable agitation for public ownership under way, the time is at hand when holders of utility securities must unite in order that their views and interests may be brought to public attention.

The National Association of Owners of Railroad and Public Utility Securities represents the interests of the investor in public discussion of the utilities and will carry forward a campaign designed to inform the public of the extent to which all citizens, whether security holders or not, are directly concerned in maintaining the welfare of public utilities and the soundness of the securities issued by them.

It will be clear to you that our views and our aims will be short in their weight unless we are strongly united in enunciating them. We count on your cooperation. An indorsement membership blank is on the reverse of this sheet. Your prompt return of it in the attached addressed envelope will be sincerely appreciated.

One dollar is the individual membership fee.

Very truly yours,

MILTON W. HARRISON, President.

Connected with that, sir, and sent to the small subscribers to public-utility stock in the State of California is a letter from doubtless an excellent brokerage house of the city of San Francisco, Peirce, Fair & Co., sponsoring the association and the demand.

In addition to that, I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks, without reading, an editorial appearing in the Sacramento and Fresno Bees upon the subject and calling attention to these letters.

The one thing that I want to make plain is that if every subscriber, every stockholder, in a public-utility corporation—and they are now innumerable in the States where the campaign has been carried on to get bookkeepers, stenographers, and all sorts of people to buy one share of stock under the plea that they would thus be participating in a great utility business—if $1 shall be subscribed by all these people, a fund will be created that will beggar description and will be greater in amount, probably, than any propaganda fund that has ever been raised in this Nation. It will be devoted to what purpose? To prevent, as these utilities say, "unsound public discussion." Just think of it, sir, unsound public discussion will be precluded by a slush fund that will exceed in its aggregate any that has been brought out either by the Walsh investigating committee or in other fashion. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from the Sacramento and Fresno Bees upon the subject—and the Bees, I may remark, are perhaps the most independent and certainly among the most important and most influential journals in the State of California—together with the letter from Peirce, Fair & Co., may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEIWER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Sacramento and Fresno (Calif.) Bees]

MILLIONS BEGGED OF UTILITY INVESTORS TO FIGHT LEGISLATION—NATIONAL BODY ASKS FOR $1 FROM EACH SHAREHOLDER TO MUZZLE "UNSOUND PUBLIC DISCUSSION," SAFEGUARD "UNWISE AND ILL-ADVISED LAWS," AND ADD MORE POWER TO LOBBY INFLUENCE

Contribute $1 to gag legislators and prevent State and Federal investigation of public utilities and thus safeguard your utility investments.

Your $1, added to those of all the other holders of utility stocks and bonds in the United States, will make a pot containing millions of dollars with which to fight "ill-advised legislation," and a lot of sinews of war can be purchased with that much money.

BUILDING A POT OF GOLD

Such is the appeal being made to utility stockholders in California by an organization known as the National Association of Owners of Railroad and Public Utility Securities, and it is as bold and brazen in its request for slush funds as the corrupt corporations of old ever dared to be.

The public utilities do not want any Federal investigation made of their affairs. In fact, just such an attempt was headed off a few days ago when the Senate voted down WALSH'S resolution to throw a Federal spotlight on the power utilities.

PURPOSES PLAINLY GIVEN

But the utilities would now shift the cost of such "safeguarding" to the shoulders of the individual stockholders, and hence they have appealed to them to contribute a dollar to the cause. The corporations make no effort to conceal the purposes to which this dollar will go. They put it down on paper so there will be no doubt.

WHAT THE DOLLAR WILL BUY

Here are some of the things this dollar, with the millions of others, is expected to buy:

Protection against unsound public discussion.
Protection against unwise legislation.
Dissemination of utility views to public.
Protection against public ownership.
Protection against utility assailments.
Added power and influence to utilities lobby.

APPEALS CONTAINED IN LETTERS

The foregoing plans of raising sinews of war with which to fight public inquiry are included in two letters sent out to power company stockholders in the district. Whether stockholders in all power companies received them is not known, but they have appeared in Fresno.
